He does not only invite us to come to him, but to come within him; not only to an embrace, but to an union; and by ineffable and seraphic incorporations for "us to be in him," and for "him to be in us." South, Sermon v. 141.

INCORPOREAL. adj. [incorporialis, Lat. incorporel, Fr. in and corporeal.] Immaterial; unbodied.

It is a virtue which may be called incorporeal and immaterial, whereof there be in nature but few. Bacon.

INCORPOREALLY. adv. [from incorporeal.] Immaterially; without body.

Hearing striketh the spirits more immediately than the other senses, and more incorporeally than the smelling. Bacon.

INCORPOREITY.† n. s. [in and corporeity.] Immateriality; distinctness from body.

Still new mists he casts before our eyes,
And now derides our prov'd incorporeities.

More, Song of the Soul, lli. i. 3.

Incommunicable attributes of the Deity appeared to agree thereto; such as, infinity, immutability, indivisibility, incorporeity.

Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 270.

The first stumbling-block to the ancient philosophers, and what no one could get over, was, to conceive an incorporeity, any thing entirely void of matter.

Ellis, Knowledge of Divine Things, p. 394.

To INCORPSE. v. a. [in and corpse.] To incorporate; to unite into one body. Not used.

He grew unto his seat,
As he had been incorps'd and demy-natur'd
With the brave horse. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

INCORRECT.† adj. [in and correct.]

1. Not nicely finished; not exact; inaccurate; full of faults. The present usage.

The piece you think is incorrect: why take it;
I'm all submission; what you'd have it, make it. Pope.

2. Not duly regulated; not corrected into proper obedience. See INCORRECTION. Not now in use.

'Tis unmanly grief:

It shews a will most incorrect to heaven;
A heart unfortified, or mind impatient;
An understanding simple and unschool'd.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

INCORRECTION.* n. s. [from incorrect.] Want of correction.

The unbridled swing or incorrection of ill nature maketh one odious.

Archdeacon Anway, Tab. of Moderat. (1661), p. 9.

INCORRECTLY.† adv. [from incorrect.] Inaccurately; not exactly.

And if they had not had the Gospel in their hands, they would have wrote as loosely and incorrectly as the philosophers before them.

Ellis, Knowledge of Div. Things, p. 16.

INCORRECTNESS.† n. s. [in and correctness.] Inaccuracy; want of exactness.

Many of these petty incorrectnesses are not, however, to be imputed to Froissart.

Warton, Hist. E. P. lli. Dissert. p. lxxvii.

INCORRIGIBLE. adj. [incorrigible, Fr. in and corrigeble.]

1. Bad beyond correction; depraved beyond amendment by any means; erroneous beyond hope of instruction: of persons.

Provok'd by those incorrigible fools,

Whilst we are incorrigible, God may in vengeance continue to chastise us with the judgement of war. Smalridge.

The most violent party-men are such as have discovered least sense of religion or morality; and when such are laid aside, as shall be found incorrigible, it will be no difficulty to reconcile the rest. Swift.

2. Not capable of amendment: of things.

The loss is many times irrecoverable, and the inconvenience incorrigible. More, Divine Dialogues.

What are their thoughts of things, but variety of incorrigible error? L'Estrange.

INCORRIGIBILITY.* n. s. [from incorrigible.] Depravity beyond amendment.

To see so plainly, to feel so thoroughly, the trouble, the blindness, the folly, the imbecility, the ingratitude, the incorrigibility, the strange perverseness, perfidiousness, malice, and cruelty of mankind in so many instances — would it not astone a mind so pure? Barrow, Works, i. 474.

INCORRIGIBLENESS. n. s. [from incorrigible.] Hopeless depravity; badness beyond all means of amendment.

What we call penitence becomes a sad attestation of our *incorrigible*ness. Decay of Piety.

I would not have chiding used, much less blows, till obstinacy and *incorrigible*ness make it absolutely necessary. Locke.

INCORRIGIBLY. adv. [from incorrigible.]

To a degree of depravity beyond all means of amendment.

Some men appear incorrigibly mad;
They cleanliness and company renounce.

Roscommon.

INCORRUPT.† } adj. [in and corrupt; INCORRUPTED.} tus, Latin; incorrompu, French.]

1. Free from foulness or depravation.

The first church of the apostles was most pure and incorrupt; but the papists have clearly varied from the usage and example of that church. Alp. Cranmer, Def. of the Sacr. (1530), fol. 116.

Sin, that first

Distemper'd all things, and, of incorrupt,
Corrupted. Milton, P. L.

2. Pure of manners; honest; good. It is particularly applied to a mind above the power of bribes.

Where the multitude is incorrupt and religious, all things are done justly, and without compulsion. Raleigh, Arts of Empire, ch. 26.

INCORRUPTIBILITY.† n. s. [incorruptibilité, Fr. from incorruptible.] Insusceptibility of corruption; incapacity of decay.

Philo, in his book of the world's incorruptibility, allegeth the verses of a Greek tragic poet.

Hakewell on Providence.

A testification of our faith in the resurrection of bodies, and a symbol of future incorruptibility.

Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 64.

INCORRUPTIBLE. adj. [incorruptible, Fr. in and corrumpible.] Not capable of corruption; not admitting decay.

In such abundance lies our choice,
As leaves a great store of fruit untouch'd,
Still hanging incorruptible. Milton, P. L.

Our bodies shall be changed into incorruptible and immortal substances, our souls be entertained with the most ravishing objects, and both continue happy throughout all eternity. Wake.

INCORRUPTION. n. s. [incorruption, Fr. in and corruption.] Incapacity of corruption.

So also is the resurrection of the dead: it is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption.

1 Cor. xv. 42.

INCORRUPTNESS. n. s. [in and corrupt.]

1. Purity of manners; honesty; integrity. Probity of mind, integrity, and incorruptness of manners, is preferable to fine parts and subtle speculations. Woodward.

2. Freedom from decay or degeneration.

INCORRUPTIVE.* adj. [from incorrupt.]

Free from decay or corruption.

The wreath of incorruptive praise.

Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. 1.

To INCRASSATE. v. a. [in and crassus, Lat.] To thicken; the contrary to attenuate.

If the cork be too light to sink under the surface, the body of water may be attenuated with spirits of wine; if too heavy, it may be incrassated with salt. Broum, Vulg. Err.

Acids dissolve or attenuate, alcalies precipitate or incrassate. Newton, Opticks.

Acids, such as are austere, as unripe fruits, produce too great a stricture of the fibres, incrassate and coagulate the fluids; from whence pains and rheumatism. Arbuthnot.

To INCRASSATE.* v. n. To become thick; to grow fat.

Their spirits fattened and incrassated within them. Hammond, Works, iv. 651.

INCRASSATE.* part. adj. [from the verb.] Fattened; filled. Sherwood.

Their understandings were so gross within them, being fattened and incrassated with magical phantasms. Hammond, Works, iv. 657.

INCRASSA'TION. n. s. [from incrassate.]

1. The act of thickening.
2. The state of growing thick.

Nothing doth conglaciate but water; for the determination of quicksilver is fixation, that of milk coagulation, and that of oil incrassation.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

INCRASSATIVE. n. s. [from incrassate.]

That which has the quality of thickening.

The two latter indicate restringents to stench, and incrassatives to thicken the blood. Harvey.

To INCREASE. v. n. [increasco, Lat. encresser, old Fr. See To ENCREASE.]

1. To grow more in number, or greater in bulk; to advance in quantity or value, or in any quality capable of being more or less.

Hear and observe to do it, that it may be well with thee, and that ye may increase mightily.

Deut. vi. 3.
Profane and vain babbling will increase unto ungodliness. 2 Tim. ii. 16.

From fifty to threescore he loses not much in fancy, and judgement, the effect of observation, still increases. Dryden.

Henry, in knots, involv'd his Emma's name
Upon this tree; and, as the tender mark,
Grew with the year, and widen'd with the bark:
Venus had heard the virgin's soft address,
That as the wound the passion might increase. Prior.

2. To be fertile.

Fishes are more numerous or increasing than beasts or birds, as appears by their numerous spawn. Hale.

To INCREASE. v. a. [See To ENCREASE.]

To make more or greater.
Hye thee from this slaughter-house,
Lest thou increase the number of the dead. Shakspeare.

He hath increased in Judah mourning and lamentation. Sam.
I will increase the famine. Ezek. v. 16.
I will increase them with men like a flock. Ezek. xxvii.

It serves to increase that treasure, or to preserve it. Temple.

INCREASE. v. n. [from the verb. Though, in the poetical examples, the accent falls on the last syllable of this word, and Dr. Johnson accordingly so marks it; it has, in modern times, been often placed on the first; by way of so distinguishing the substantive from the verb.]

1. Augmentation; the state of growing more or greater.

For three years he liv'd with large increase
In arms of honour, and esteem in peace. Dryden.
Hail, bards triumphant! born in happier days,
Whose honours with increase of ages grow,
As streams roll down, enlarging as they flow. Pope.

2. Increment; that which is added to the original stock.

Take thou no usury of him nor increase. Levit. xxv. 36.

3. Produce.

The increase of the threshing-floor, and the increase of the wine-press. Num. xviii. 30.
As Hesiod sings, spread waters o'er thy field,
And a most just and glad increase 'twill yield. Denham.

Those grains which grew produced an increase beyond expectation. Mortimer, Husbandry.

4. Generation.

Into her womb convey sterility;
Dry up in her the organs of increase,
And from her derogate body never spring a babe. Shakspeare.

5. Progeny.

All the increase of thy house shall die in the flower of their age. 1 Sam. ii. 33.
Him young Thoasa bore, the bright increase Of Phorcyas. Pope, Odyssey.

6. The state of waxing, or growing full orb'd. Used of the moon.

Seeds, hair, nails, hedges, and herbs, will grow soonest, if set or cut in the increase of the moon. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

INCREASEFUL. adj. [increase and full.]
Abundant of produce.

To cheer the ploughman with increaseful crops. Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

INCREASE. v. n. [from increase.] He who increases.

Though melancholy persons love to be dark and alone, yet darkness is a great increaser of the humours. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 261.

INCREASIBLE. adj. [from increase.] That may be increased. Sherwood.

INCREATE. adj. [in and creatus, Lat.] Not created. Bullockar.

INCREATED. adj. Not created.

Since the desire is infinite, nothing but the absolute and increated Infinite can adequately fill it. Cheyne.

INCREDIBILITY. n. s. [incredibilis, Fr.] The quality of surpassing belief.

For objects of incredibility, none are so removed from all appearance of truth as those of Cornelie's Andromede. Dryden.

INCREDIBLE. adj. [incredibilis, Lat.] Surpassing belief; not to be credited.

The ship Argo, that there might want no incredible thing in this fable, spoke to them. Raleigh.
Presenting things impossible to view,
They wander through incredible to true. Granville.

INCREDIBLENESS. n. s. [from incredible.] Quality of being incredible.

The very strangeness, or incredibleness, of the story. M. Casaubon, Of Credulity, &c. (1668), p. 180.

INCREDIBLY. adv. [from incredible.] In a manner not to be believed.

The arts are incredibly improved. Hakewill on Providence, p. 245.

INCREDULITY. n. s. [incredulitas, Fr.] Quality of not believing; hardness of belief.

Let not the incredulity of them trouble thee, that speak against thee. 2 Esdr. xv. 3.
He was more large in the description of Paradise, to take away all scruple from the incredulity of future ages. Raleigh.

INCREDULOUS. adj. [incredulus, Fr. incredulus, Lat.] Hard of belief; refusing credit.

I am not altogether incredulous but there may be such candles as are made of salamander's wool, being a kind of mineral which whiteneth in the burning, and consumeth not. Bacon.

INCREDULOUSNESS. n. s. [from incredulous.] Hardness of belief; incredulity.

INCREDIBLY. adv. [in and cremo, Lat.] Not consumable by fire.

If from the skin of the salamander these incredible pieces are composed. Brown, Vulg. Err.

INCREMENT. n. s. [incrementum, Lat.]

1. Act of growing greater.

Divers conceptions are concerning the Nile's increment, or inundation. Brown's Vul. Err.

2. Increase; matter added.

This stratum is expanded at top, serving as the seminary that furnisheth matter for the formation and increment of animal and vegetable bodies. Woodward.

3. Produce.

The orchard loves to wave
With winter wind before the gems exert
Their feeble heads: the loosen'd roots then drink
Large increment, earnest of happy years. Philips, Cider, B. 2.

To INCREASE. v. a. [increpo, Lat.] To chide; to reprehend. Cockeram.

INCREASE. n. s. [increpatio, Lat. in-crepation, Fr.] Reprehension; chiding.

His answer was a kind of soft increation to them, and a strong instruction to all times. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. p. i. (1648), p. 311.

Here we have David's increation of Doeg. Bp. Richardson on the Old Test. p. 226.

Whosoever shall in the sincerity of his heart acquit himself as to all the foregoing duties, and thereby prepare and adorn himself to meet and converse with his Saviour at this divine feast, shall never be accosted with the thunder of that dreadful increation from him, "Friend, how camest thou in hither, not having a wedding-garment?" Soult, Serm. ii. 308.

The admonitions, fraternal or paternal, of his fellow Christians, or of the governors of the church; then, more publick reprehensions and inceptions. Hammond.

To INCREASE. v. a. [See To ENCREASE.]

INCRUSTAL. adj. [Lat. incrustus.] Unbloody; without bloodshed.

He musters out as many places as he can find, that make any mention of liturgy, oblation, holy victim, incrustal sacrifice. Brevint, Saul and Sam. at Endor, (1674), p. 408.

To INCRUST. v. a. [incrusto, Lat.]

To INCRUSTATE. v. a. [incruster, Fr.] To cover with an additional coat adhering to the internal matter.

The finer part of the wood will be turned into air, and the grosser stick baked and incrusted upon the sides of the vessel. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Some rivers bring forth spars, and other mineral matter, so as to cover and incruster the stones. Woodward.

Save but our army; and let Jove incruster Swords, pikes, and guns, with everlasting rust. Pope.

Any of these sun-like bodies in the centres of the several vortices, are so incrusted and weakened as to be carried about in the vortex of the true sun. Cheyne.

The shield was purchased by Woodward, who incrusted it with a new rust. Arbutnot and Pope.

INCRUSTATION. n. s. [incrustation, Fr. from incrusto, Lat.] An adherent covering; something superinduced.

Having such a prodigious stock of marble, their chapels are laid over with such a rich variety of incrustations as cannot be found in any other part. Addison on Italy.

To INCRUBATE. v. n. [incubo, Lat.] To sit upon eggs.

INCUBATION. n. s. [incubation, Fr. incubatio, Lat.] The act of sitting upon eggs to hatch them.

Whether that vitality was by incubation, or how else, is only known to God. Raleigh, Hist.

Birds have eggs enough at first conceived in them to serve them, allowing such a proportion for every year as will serve for one or two incubations. Ray on the Creation.

When the whole tribe of birds by incubation produce their young, it is a wonderful deviation, that some few families should do it in a more novel way. Derham.

As the white of an egg by incubation, so can the serum by the action of the fibres be attenuated. Arbuthnot.

INCUBITURE.* n. s. [incubitus, Lat.] Incubation.

If you go on and describe it, [the Manucodiata], as Cardan, Hernandez, Scaliger, and others have done, that it is a bird which lives in the air, without ever coming near the earth till it falls down dead upon it, that its food is the dew of heaven, and the incubiture of the female on the back of the male, their ideas will be enlarged according to the degrees of information; but no fecundity of the mind can make them perceive one single property, farther than they are instructed.

Ellis, Knowledge of Div. Things, p. 153.

INCUBUS.† n. s. [Lat. incube, Fr. We use sometimes the Latin plural incubi; and sometimes incubusses. Dr. Johnson has given only the solitary medical citation from Floyer. The incubus of the older time was a fairy: he succeeded, as Mr. Tyrwhitt observes, to the ancient Fauni, and like them was supposed to inflict that oppression, which goes under the name of the ephaltes, or night-mare. So Bullokar: "The vulgar think it [the incubus] some spirit, but the physicians affirm it to be a natural disease, &c. The incubus had the character also of being a great lover of women.]"

1. A pretended fairy or demon.

A legendary fable, that Luther was begotten by an incubus.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 136.
Stories—of hags, of incubi.

More, Preexist. st. 43.

That old fabulous fancy, which they say some of the fathers had from the Jews, of devils being incubusses, and that in their courtships to women they gratified them with these inventions, which might help their decaying beauties.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom, p. 124.

Belial, the dissolute spirit that fell,
The sensuallest, and, after Asmodai,
The fleshliest incubus. Milton, P. R. ii. 152.

2. The night-mare.

The incubus is an inflation of the membranes of the stomach, which hinders the motion of the diaphragma, lungs, and pulse, with a sense of a weight oppressing the breast. Floyer.

Such as are troubled with incubus, or witch-ridden, as we call it.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 91.

TO INCULCATE.† v. a. [inculco, Lat. inculquer, Fr. We had formerly the pedantick word inculc; but inculcate is also a very old word, although Dr. Johnson could find no earlier example of it than that from Atterbury. It existed a century and a half before his time. Inculk, though not to be used, has publick authority for it; as it occurs in the "Injunctions given by the Queenes Majestie, 1559." Sign. B. ii. b. "The same minister shall inculke these or such sentences." To impress by frequent admonitions; to enforce by constant repetition.

The apostles of Christ the Lord—very often inculcate, that men are justified before God by faith.

Woolton, Chr. Manual, (1576.) E. vii. b.

Manifest truth may deserve sometimes to be inculcated, because we are too apt to forget it.

Atterbury.

Homer continually inculcates morality and piety to the gods.

Broom, Notes to Pope's Odyssey.

INCULCATION.† n. s. [from inculcate. Fr. inculcation.] The act of impressing by frequent admonition; admonitory repetition.

Industry in action being as importunity in speech, by continual inculcation forcing a yielding beyond the strength of reason.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 154.

Often inculcation of warning necessarily implies a danger.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 5.

It requires the helps and assistances of frequent inculcation.

South. Sermon. vii. 32.

INCULPABLE.† adj. [inculpable, old Fr. in and culpabilis, Lat.] Unblamable; not reprehensible.

Ignorance, so far as it may be resolved into natural inability, is as to men, at least inculpable, and consequently not the object of scorn, but pity.

South.

It was an innocent and inculpable piece of ignorance.

Killingbeck, Sermon. p. 140.

INCULPABLENESS.* n. s. [from inculpable.]

Unblamableness.

Since the inculpableness of their merely natural imbecility abates to them the shame of owning it, let them not at least voluntarily surcharge themselves with such imperfections, as want that excuse and extenuation.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. ii. (1654.) p. 120.

INCULPABLY.† adv. [in and culpabilis, Lat.] Unblamably; without blame.

As to errors or infirmities, the frailty of man's condition has invincibly, and therefore inculpably, exposed him.

South.

INCULT.† adj. [inculte, French incultus, Lat.] Uncultivated; untilld. This word is not the coinage of Thomson, as the solitary citation from his Autumn by Dr. Johnson might lead the reader to suppose. It was in use a century before his time.

Germany then, saith Tacitus, was incult and horrid; now full of magnificent cities.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 332.

Her forests huge,

Incult, robust, and tall, by Nature's hand

Planted of old. Thomson, Autumn.

INCULTIVATED.* adj. [in and cultivated.] Not cultivated; not improved by tillage.

The soil, though incultivated, so full of vigour, that it procreates without seed.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 380.

INCULTIVATION.* n. s. [in and cultivation.] Want or neglect of cultivation.

Inhabited by wild beasts, and in that state of incultivation which nature in her luxuriant fancies loves to form, the wilderness was of no value to its proprietors.

Berington, Hist. of Abbeilard, p. 108.

INCULTURE.* n. s. [in and culture.] Want or neglect of cultivation.

The inculture of the world would perish it into a wilderness, should not the activeness of commerce make it an universal city.

Feltham, Res. ii. 49.

INCUMBENCY.† n. s. [from incumbent.]

1. The act or state of lying upon another.

We find them more fragile, and not so well qualified to support great incumbencies and weights.

Evelyn, B. i. ch. 3. sect. 17.

2. Imposition as a duty.

The duties of a man, of a friend, of a husband, of a father; and all the incumbencies of a family.

Donne, Lett. to Sir H. G. Poems, p. 288.

3. The state of keeping a benefice.

These fines are only to be paid to the bishop, during his incumbency in the same see. Swift.

INCUMBENT.† adj. [incumbens, Latin.]

1. Resting upon; lying upon.

Then with expanded wings he steers his flight
Aloft, incumbent on the dusky air,
That felt unusual weight. Milton, P. L.

The ascending parcels of air, having now little more than the weight of the incumbent water to surmount, were able both so to expand themselves as to fill up that part of the pipe which they pervaded, and, by pressing every way against the sides of it; to lift upwards with them what water they found above them.

Boyle.

With wings expanded wide ourselves we'll rear,
And fly incumbent on the dusky air. Dryden.

Here the rebel giants lie;
And when to move th' incumbent load they try,
Ascending vapours on the day prevail. Addison.

Man is the destin'd prey of pestilence,
And o'er his guilty domes
She draws a close incumbent cloud of death.

Thomson.

2. Imposed as a duty.

All men, truly zealous, will perform those good works that are incumbent on all Christians.

Sprat, Sermon.

There is a double duty incumbent upon us in the exercise of our powers.

L'Estrange.

Thus, if we think and act, we shall shew ourselves duly mindful not only of the advantages we receive from thence, but of the obligations also which are incumbent upon us.

Atterbury.

INCUMBENT.† n. s. [incumbens, Latin; old French, incumbent, "pourvu d'un bénéfice, celui qui l'occupe. Lacombe."] He who is in present possession of a benefice.

In many places the whole ecclesiastical dues are in lay hands, and the incumbent lieth at the mercy of his patron. Swift.

TO INCUMBER.† v. a. [encombrer, Fr.; ingombrare, Ital.] To embarrass. See TO ENCUMBER.

So huge a rout

My cause is call'd, and that long look'd-for day

Is still incumber'd with some new delay.

Dryden, Jew.

INCUMBRANCE.* See ENCOMBRANCE.

INCUMEROUS.* adj. [from incumber.] Cumbersome; troublesome.

Harde language, and harde matere,
Is incumberous for thee to here.

Chaucer, House of Fame, ii. 354.

TO INCUR.† v. a. [incurro, Latin.]

1. To become liable to a punishment or reprehension.

I have incurred displeasure from inferiors for giving way to the faults of others. Hayward.

They, not obeying,

Incurr'd what could they less? the penalty;
And, manifold in sin, deserv'd to fall.

Milton, P. L.

So judge thou still, presumptuous! till the wrath,

Which thou incur'st by flying, meet thy flight
Sev'nfold, and scourge that wisdom back to hell.

Milton, P. L.

They had a full persuasive that not to do it were to desert God, and consequently to incur damnation. South.

2. To occur; to press on the senses;
with to or into.

The motions of the minute parts of bodies are invisible, and incur not to the eye: but yet they are to be deprehended by experience.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The mind of man, even in spirituals, acts with corporeal dependence; and so is he helped or hindered in its operations, according to the different quality of external objects that incur into the senses. South.

INCURABILITY. n. s. [incurabilité, Fr. from incurable.] Impossibility of cure; utter insusceptibility of remedy.

We'll instantly open a door to the manner of a proper and improper consumption, together with the reason of the incurability of the former, and facile cure of the other. Harvey.

INCURABLE. adj. [incurable, Fr. in and curable.] Not admitting remedy;
not to be removed by medicine; irremediable; hopeless.

Pause not; for the present time's so sick,
That present medicine must be ministered,
Or overthrow incurable ensues. Shakespeare.

Stop the rage betime,
Before the wound do grow incurable;
For being green, there is great hope of help.

Shakespeare.

A schirrus is not absolutely incurable, because it has been known that fresh pasture has cured
it in cattle. Arbuthnot.

If idiots and lunatics cannot be found, in- curables may be taken into the hospital. Swift.

INCURABLENESS. † n. s. [from incurable.]
State of not admitting any cure.

This incurableness in every sickness — is indeed the very soul of the sickness, whereby it liveth, though the patient dieth.

Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 242.

INCURABLY. adv. [from incurable.] Without remedy.

We cannot know it is or is not, being incurably ignorant. Locke.

INCURIOSITY.  n. s.* [incuriosité, French, Cotgrave.] Want of curiosity; inattentiveness; negligence.

That you may not change me with incuriosity.

Wotton, Lett. (1611.)

Thinking all things become a good man; even his gestures and little incuriosities.

Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1651,) p. 195.

His incuriosity or indifference, when truth was offered to be laid before him as a private man, and by one who, he knew, had the repute of exercising every spiritual power necessary to enforce it, shews him [Pilate] in a light much less excusable.

Warburton, Serm. i. p. 1.

INCURIOS. † adj. [in and curious.
Pronounced by Heylin, in 1656, an uncouth and unusual word. But it had been in use many years before. See also INCURIOSLY, and INCURIOSNESS.]
Negligent; inattentive.

Can we think that the Providence, which is so precisely curious as to mark and observe the falling of sparrows, should be so supinely in- curious as to slight and neglect the falling of kingdoms? Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 270.

The Creator did not bestow so much skill upon his creatures, to be looked upon with a careless incurious eye. Derham.

VOL. II.

He seldom at the Park appear'd;
Yet, not incurious, was inclin'd
To know the converse of mankind.

Swift.

INCURIOSLY.  adv.* [from incurious.]
Without nice examination; without in-quisitiveness.

It is enough for me to rest in the hope, that I shall once see them; in the mean time, let me be learnedly ignorant, and incuriously devout, silently blessing the power and wisdom of my infinite Creator, who knows how to honour himself by all these glorious and unrevealed subordinations.

Bp. Hall, Invisible World, i. § 7.

In such an age publick money will be easily granted, and publick accounts rarely or in- curiously inspected.

Bolingbroke on Parties, Lett. 19.

INCURIOSNESS.  n. s.* [from incurious.]
Negligence; inattentiveness; carelessness.

Our reverential fear of the God of heaven calls us to eschew in the other extreme all sordid in- curiousness, and slovenly neglect, in his immediate services.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 258.

Tell me, have you gone away currently with this incuriousness or unconcernedness for religion?
Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii.

INCURSION. n. s. [from incurro, Latin.]

1. Attack; mischievous occurrence.

Sins of daily incurision, and such as human frailty is unavoidably liable to. South.

2. [Incurision, Fr.] Invasion without conquest; inroad; ravage.

Sir Isaac Newton has shewn, by several experiments of rays passing by the edges of bodies, that they are incurvated by the action of these bodies. Cheyne.

To INCURVE.  v. a.* [incurvo, Lat.] To bow; to bend. Cockeram.

INCURVATION. † n. s. [from incurvo, Lat.]
1. The act of bending or making crooked.

Religious incurvation towards a crucifix, or the host, as to an object, and not a mere unconsidered accidental circumstance, is idolatry.

More, Antid. against Atheism, ch. 1.

They bow down the dead man's thumb into the hollow of the hand; and by that incurvation
they fancy to express the Name of God.

L. Addison, State of the Jews, p. 223.

2. State of being bent; curvity; crooked-
ness.

One part moving while the other rests, one would think, should cause an incurvation in the line. Glanville.

3. Flexion of the body in token of reverence.

He made use of acts of worship which God hath appropriated; as incurvation, and sacrifice.
Stillingsfleet.

INCURVITY. n. s. [from incurvus, Latin.]
Crookedness; the state of bending inward.

The incurvity of a dolphin must be taken not really, but in appearance, when they leap above water, and suddenly shoot down again: strait bodies, in a sudden motion, protruded obliquely downward, appear crooked. Brown.

To INDAGATE. † v. a. [indago, Latin.]
To search; to beat out. Cockeram.

INDAGATION. † n. s. [from indagate.]
Search; enquiry; examination.

In her indagations oft-times new scents put her [the soul] by; and she takes in errors into her by the same conduits she doth truths.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

Paracelsus directs us, in the indagation of colours, to have an eye principally upon salts.

Boyle.

Part hath been discovered by himself, and some by human indagation. Brown, Fulg. Err.

INDAGATOR. † n. s. [indagator, Latin.] A searcher; an enquirer; an examiner.

For men to make nothing of this royal law of Christ, and yet to pretend to be more accurate indagators into matters of religion, and more affectionate lovers of piety than ordinary, is either to be abominably hypocritical, or grossly ignorant in the most precious and necessary parts of Christianity. More, Conj. Cabb. (1658,) p. 200.

The number of the elements of bodies requires to be searched into by such skilful indagators of nature. Boyle.

the most natural foundation of light and complacency. Norris on the Beatitudes, p. 172.

To INDA'RT. v. a. [in and dart.] To dart
in; to strike in.

I'll look to like, if looking liking move;
But no more deep will I indart mine eye,
Than your consent gives strength to make it fly.

Shakespeare.

To INDEBT, v. a.

1. To put into debt.

2. To oblige; to put under obligation.

Forgive us our sins; for we forgive every one that is indebted to us. St. Luke, xi. 4.

He —

Atonement for himself, or offering meet,

Indebted and undone, has none to bring.

Milton, P. L.

This blest alliance may

The indebted nation bounteously repay. Granville.

INDEBTED. participial adj. [in and debt.]
Obliged by something received; bound to restitution; having incurred a debt.
It has to before the person to whom the debt is due, and for before the thing received.

If the course of politick affairs cannot in any good course go forward without fit instruments, and that which fitteth them be their virtues, let polity acknowledge itself indebted to religion, godliness being the chiefest top and well-spring of all true virtues, even as God is of all good things.

Hooker.

Few consider how much we are indebted to government, because few can represent how wretched mankind would be without it. Atterbury.

Let us represent to our souls the love and beneficence for which we daily stand indebted to God. Rogers.

We are wholly indebted for them to our ancestors. Swift.

INDEBTMENT.  n. s.* [from indebt.] The state of being in debt.

Fear thou a worse prison, if thou wilt needs wilfully live and die in a just indebtment, when thou mayest be at once free and honest.

Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

INDE'CENCY. n. s. [indecence, French.] Any thing unbecoming; any thing contrary to good manners; something wrong, but scarcely criminal.

See INDEPENDENT, n. s.

Independence is much more dangerous than Brownism.

Pagitt's Heresiography, p. 79.

O God, put it into the heart of our king and Parliament to take speedy order for the suppression of this wild variety of sects, and lawless independencies, ere it be too late.

Seasonable Sermon. (1644,) p. 24.

INDEPE'NDENT.† adj. [independant, Fr.; in and dependent.]

1. Not depending; not supported by any other; not relying on another; not controlled. It is used with on, of, or from before the object: of which on seems most proper, since we say to depend on, and consequently dependent on.

Creation must needs infer providence, and God's making the world irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect.

South.

Since all princes of independent governments are in a state of nature, the world never was without men in that state.

Locke.

The town of St. Gaul is a protestant republic, independent of the abbot, and under the protection of the cantons.

Addison.

2. Not relating to any thing else, as to a superiour cause or power.

The consideration of our understanding, which is an incorporeal substance independent from matter; and the contemplation of our own bodies, which have all the stamps and characters of excellent contrivance; these alone do very easily guide us to the wise Author of all things.

Bentley.

3. Belonging to the independents.

A very famous independent minister was head of a college in those times.

Addison, Spect.

INDEPE'NDENT. n. s. One who in religious affairs holds that every congregation is a complete church, subject to no superiour authority.

We shall, in our sermons, take occasion to justify such passages in our liturgy as have been unjustly quarrelled at by presbyterians, independents, or other puritan sectaries.

Sanderson.

INDEPE'NDENTLY. adv. [from independent.]

Without reference to other things.

Dispose lights and shadows, without finishing every thing independently the one of the other.

Dryden.

INDEPRECABLE.* adj. [indeprecabilis,

Lat.] That cannot be entreated.

Cockeram.

INDEPREHENSIBLE.* adj. [indeprehensibilis, Lat.] That cannot be found out.

Calling the second a case perplexed and indeprehensible.

Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. (1633,) p. 174.

INDEPRIVABLE.* adj. [in and deprivable.]

That cannot be taken away.

It [the sovereign good] should not be transient, nor derived from the will of others, nor in their power to take away; but be durable, self-derived, and (if I may use the expression) indeprivable.

Harris, Dial. concerning Happiness, P. i.

INDESCRIBABLE.* adj. [in and describable.]

That cannot be described.

INDESE'RT.† n. s. [in and desert.] Want of merit. This is an useful word, but not much received.

Universal contempt is a shrewd, not infallible, sign of an universal indeseert.

Philips, Theatr. Poet. (1675,) Pref.

Those who were once looked on as his equals, are apt to think the fame of his merit a reflection on their own indeseerts.

Addison, Spect.

INDE'SINENT.* adj. [in and desinens, Lat.] Incessant.

The last kind of activity, and the perceptivity resulting from it, is much more noble, more indesinent, and indefeasible, than the first.

Baister on the Soul, i. 351.

INDE'SINENTLY. adv. [indesinenter, Lat.] Without cessation.

They continue a month indesinently.

Ray on the Creation.

INDESTRU'CTIBLE. adj. [in and destructible.] Not to be destroyed.

Glass is so compact and firm a body, that it is indestructible by art or nature.

Boyle.

INDETE'RMINABLE. adj. [in and determinable.] Not to be fixed; not to be defined or settled.

There is not only obscurity in the end, but beginning of the world; that, as its period is inscrutable, so is its nativity indeterminable.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

INDETERMINATE. adj. [indeterminé, Fr.; in and determinate.] Unfixed; not defined; indefinite.

The rays of the same colour were by turns transmitted at one thickness, and reflected at another thickness, for an indeterminate number of successions.

Newton, Opticks.

INDETERMINATELY. adv. [in and determinately.] Indefinitely; not in any settled manner.

His perspicacity discerned the loadstone to respect the North, when ours beheld it indeterminately.

Brown.

The depth of the hold is indeterminately expressed in the description.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

INDETERMINATION. n. s. [in and determination.] Want of determination; want of fixed or stated direction.

By contingents I understand all things which may be done, and may not be done, may happen, or may not happen, by reason of the indetermination or accidental concurrence of the cause.

Bp. Bramhall against Hobbes.

INDETE'RMINED. adj. [in and determined.]

Unsettled; unfixed.

We should not amuse ourselves with floating words of indetermined signification, which we can use in several senses to serve a turn.

Locke.

INDEVO'TE.* adj. [indévoit, Fr.] Coldly devoted; little affected.

Cotgrave.

Mr. Wotton tells me he has disposed of all the Tabula, and Mr. Morlock says the same, and you will have your money by Dr. Mills or me; but they give no good account of the other little book. There are so many of the same arguments, and so indévoté an age. But you must have a little patience.

Bentley, Lett. p. 181.

INDEVO'TED.* part. adj. [in and devote.]

Not attached; disaffected.

It grieved him to find persons of the best condition, and who loved both king and church, exceedingly indévoté to him, [Laud].

Ld. Clarendon, Life, i. 63.

Mr. Cowley's connexions with some persons indévoté to the excellent chancellor, kept him at a distance from a man so congenial to himself.

Hurd, Dial.

INDEVO'TION.† n. s. [indevotion, Fr.; in and devotion.] Want of devotion; irreligion.

That, that was licentiousness, grows ambition; and that comes to indévotion, and spiritual coldness.

Donne, Devot. (1624,) p. 611.

Look on your indévotion, that heartless, zealous behaviour in the house of God.

Hammond, Works, iv. 514.

Their profaneness and indevotion do incense God's displeasure. Barrow, Works, i. 90.

Let us make the church the scene of our penitence, as of our faults; deprecate our former indevotion, and, by an exemplary reverence, redress the scandal of profaneness.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

INDEVOU'T.† adj. [indevot, Fr.; in and devout.] Not devout; not religious; irreligious.

They are only our prayers, that must stay us from being carried away with the violent assaults of discontentment; under which a praying soul can no more miscarry, than an indevout soul can enjoy safety. Bp. Hall, Of Contentation, § 25.

A wretchless, careless, indevout spirit.

Bp. Taylor, Sermon. (1653.)

He prays much, yet curses more; whilst he is meek, but indevout. Decay of Chr. Piety.

INDEVOU'TLY.* adv. [from indevout.] Without devotion.

INDEX.† n. s. [Lat. Our word has sometimes the apparently Latin plural indices. But we have also the singular indice, though hitherto unnoticed. See therefore INDICE.]

1. The discoverer; the pointer out.

Tastes are the indexes of the different qualities of plants, as well as of all sorts of aliment.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

That which was once the index to point out all virtues, does now mark out that part of the world where least of them resides. Decay of Piety.

2. The hand that points to any thing, as to the hour or way.

They have no more inward self-consciousness of what they do or suffer, than the index of a watch, of the hour it points to. Bentley.

3. The table of contents to a book. Formerly prefixed to the book, as the first citation from Shakspeare shews; "indexes to their subsequent volumes." Hence it was used generally for prelude, any thing preparatory to.

In such indexes, although small pricks To their subsequent volumes there is seen The baby figure of the giant mass Of things to come, at large.

Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

Ah me, what act,

That roars so loud, and thunders in the index.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

An index and obscure prologue to the history of lust and lost thoughts. Shakspeare, Othello.

If a book has no index, or good table of contents, 'tis very useful to make one as you are reading it; and in your index to take notice only of parts new to you. Watts.

INDEXTE'RITY. n. s. [in and dexterity.] Want of dexterity; want of readiness; want of handiness; clumsiness; awkwardness.

The indexterity of our consumption-curers demonstrates their dimness in beholding its causes.

Harvey on Consumptions.

INDIAN Arrow-root. n. s. [marcantia, Lat.] A root.

A sovereign remedy for the bite of wasps, and the poison of the manchineel tree. This root the Indians apply to extract the venom of their arrows.

INDIAN Ink.* n. s. A species of ink, not fluid, but solid, which is brought from China, and other parts of the East Indies.

INDIAN Red. n. s. Is a species of ochre; a very fine purple earth, of firm compact texture, and great weight.

Hill on Fossils.

INDICANT. adj. [indicans, Lat.] Showing; pointing out; that which directs what is to be done in any disease.

To INDICATE.† v. a. [indico, Lat.]

1. To show; to point out.

Mentioned in a manner that seems to indicate some connexion between them.

Malone, Note on Boswell's Life of Johnson.

2. [In physick.] To point out a remedy. See INDICATION.

The nature of the disease is to indicate the remedy. Burke.

INDICA'TION. n. s. [indication, Fr.; indicatio, from indico, Lat.]

1. Mark; token; sign; note; symptom.

The frequent stops they make in the most convenient places, are a plain indication of their weakness. Addison.

We think that our successes are a plain indication of the divine favour towards us. Atterb.

2. [In physick.] Indication is of four kinds: vital, preservative, curative, and palliative, as it directs what is to be done to continue life, cutting off the cause of an approaching distemper, curing it whilst it is actually present, or lessening its effects, or taking off some of its symptoms before it can be wholly removed. Quincy.

The depravation of the instruments of mastication is a natural indication of a liquid diet.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Discovery made; intelligence given.

If a person, that had a fair estate in reversion, should be assured by some skilful physician, that he would inevitably fall into a disease that would totally deprive him of his understanding and memory; if, I say, upon a certain belief of this indication, the man should appear overjoyed at the news, would not all that saw him conclude that the distemper had seized him? Bentley.

4. Explanation; display.

These be the things that govern nature principally, and without which you cannot make any true analysis, and indication of the proceedings of nature. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

INDICA'TIVE.† adj. [indicativus, Latin.]

1. Showing; informing; pointing out.

The first sight of a fiery sword was but an indicative sign, an hieroglyphick and obscure image of a war. Spencer on Prod. p. 294.

Ridicule, with ever-pointing hand
Conscious of every shift, of every shift
Indicative, his inmost plot betrays.

Shenstone, Econ. P. iii.

2. [In grammar.] A certain modification of a verb, expressing affirmation or indication.

The verb is formed in a certain manner to affirm, deny, or interrogate; which formation, from the principal use of it, is called the indicative mood. Clarke, Latin Grammar.

INDICATIVELY. adv. [from indicative.]

In such a manner as shows or betokens.

These images, formed in the brain, are indicatively of the same species with those of sense.

INDICATOR.* n. s. [from indicate.] That which shows or points out.

In decrepit age, all the before mentioned indications of strength and perfect confection must be depraved, diminished, or abolished.

Smith on Old Age, (1666,) p. 118.

INDICATORY.* adj. [from indicate.] Demonstrative; clearly pointing out.

The Pharisees pretended, that if they had been in their fathers' days, (those indicatory and judicatory, those critical days) they would not have been partakers of the blood of the prophets.

Donne, Devot. p. 347.

INDICE.* n. s. [indice, Fr. "an index, hand, mark, plain argument, great presumption, &c." Cotgrave; index, indicies, Lat.]

1. Signification; sign.

Too much talking is ever the indice of a fool.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

2. Table of contents to a book.

God hath appointed all tumors and swellings, all the labours of nature, as a kind of indices to this great volume of the world, to declare what desolations and plagues are to be expected therein. Spencer on Prod. p. 71.

Artificial indices, tables, or other helps, for the ready finding, remembering, and well understanding all things contained in these books.

Sir W. Petty, Advice to Hartlib, p. 3.

You know, without my flattering you, too much For me to be your indice. B. Jonson, Underwoods.

To INDICT.† v. a. [endict, old French, To INDITE.] "convaincu, jugé, &c." Lacombe. See To ENDICT.

1. To charge any person by a written accusation before a court of justice. Usually written in this sense indict; but endict, according to the derivation, is right.

He was a second time indicted,

For that by evil zeal excited, —

In letter to one Gilbert West,

He the said Selim did attest, &c.

Moore, Trial of Selim the Persian.

2. To compose; to write. See To ENDITE.

3. To proclaim. [indictus, Lat.]

There be diverse instances of popes applying themselves to the emperors to indict synods.

Barrow on the Pope's Supremacy.

INDICTABLE.* adj. [from indict.] Liable to be indicted.

Anciently where a man was wounded in one county and died in another, the offender was indictable in neither. Blackstone.

INDICTER.*† n. s. [from indict or indICTER.] dite.]

1. One who indicts or accuses. [endicteur, Fr. "an indictor." Sherwood.] See ENDITER.

A clear and real distinction between enditors, triers, and judges.

Sadler, Rights of the Kingdom, (1649,) p. 182.

2. A writer.

He that wilfully strives to fasten some sense of his own upon it, other than the very nature of the place will bear, must needs take upon him the person of God, and become a new inditor of scripture: — If he then that abases the prince's coin deserves to die, what is his desert, that, instead of the tried silver of God's word, stamps the name and character of God upon Nehushtan, upon base brazen stuff of his own. Hales, Rem. p.14.

INDICTION.† n. s. [indiction, Fr.; indico, Lat.]

1. Declaration; proclamation.

After a legation ad res repetendas, and a refusal, and a denunciation, and indiction of a war, the war is left at large. Bacon.

There is a solemn mourning, and there is a private and domestic; the solemn is by public indiction of authority. Bp. Hall, Rem. p.166.

2. [In chronology.] The indiction, instituted by Constantine the Great, is properly a cycle of tributes, orderly disposed, for fifteen years, and by it accounts of that kind were kept. Afterwards, in memory of the great victory obtained by Constantine over Mezentius, 8 Cal. Oct. 312, by which an entire freedom was given to Christianity, the council of Nice, for the honour of Constantine, ordained that the accounts of years should be no longer kept by the Olympiads, which till that time had been done; but that, instead thereof, the indiction should be made use of, by which to reckon and date their years, which hath its epocha A. D. 313, Jan. 1.

The emperor Justinian made a law, that no writing should pass without the date of the indictions. Gregory, Posthum. p.140.

INDICTIVE.* adj. [indictivus, Lat.] Proclaimed; declared.

In all the funerals of note, especially in the public or indictive, the corpse was first brought with a vast train of followers, into the forum.

Kennet, Rom. Antig. ii. 5.

INDICTMENT.* n. s. See ENDICTMENT. In the legal sense, usually written indictment.

Read the indictment. Shakspeare, Wind. Tale.

INDIFFERENCE. } n. s. [indifference, Fr.;
INDIFFERENCY. } indifferentia, Latin.]

1. Neutrality; suspension; equipoise or freedom from motives on either side.

In choice of committees it is better to chuse indifferent persons, than to make an indifference by putting in those that are strong on both sides. Bacon, Ess.

By an equal indifference for all truth, I mean, not loving it as such, before we know it to be true. Locke.

A perfect indifference in the mind, not determinable by its last judgement, would be as great an imperfection as the want of indifference to act, or not to act till determined by the will. Locke.

Those who would borrow light from expositors, either consult only those who have the good luck to be thought sound and orthodox, avoiding those of different sentiments; or else with indifference look into the notes of all commentators. Locke.

2. Impartiality.

Read the book with indifference and judgement, and thou canst not but greatly commend it. Whitgift.

3. Negligence; want of affection; unconcernedness.

Indifference cannot but be criminal, when it is conversant about objects which are so far from being of an indifferent nature, that they are of the highest importance. Addison.

A place which we must pass through, not only with the indifference of strangers, but with the vigilance of those who travel through the country of an enemy. Rogers.

Indifference, clad in wisdom's guise,
All fortitude of mind supplies;
For how can stony bowels melt,
In those who never pity felt? Swift.

He will let you know he has got a clasp with as much indifference as he would a piece of public news. Swift.

The people of England should be frightened with the French king and the pretender once a year: the want of observing this necessary precept, has produced great indifference in the vulgar. Arbutnot.

4. State in which no moral or physical reason preponderates; state in which there is no difference.

The choice is left to our discretion, except a principal bond of some higher duty remove the indifference that such things have in themselves: their indifference is removed, if we take away our own liberty. Hooker.

INDIFFERENT. adj. [indifferent, Fr.;
indifferens, Lat.]

1. Neutral; not determined to either side.

Doth his majesty

Incline to it or no?

— He seems indifferent. Shakspeare, Hen. V.
Being indifferent, we should receive and embrace opinions according as evidence gives the attestation of truth. Locke.

Let guilt or fear

Disturb man's rest; Cato knows neither of them; Indifferent in his choice to sleep or die. Addison, Cato.

2. Unconcerned; inattentive; regardless.

One thing was all to you, and your fondness made you indifferent to every thing else. Temple.
It was a law of Solon, that any person who, in the civil commotions of the republic, remained neuter, or an indifferent spectator of the contending parties, should be condemned to perpetual banishment. Addison, Freeholder.

But how indifferent soever man may be to eternal happiness, yet surely to eternal misery none can be indifferent. Rogers.

3. Not to have such difference as that the one is for its own sake preferable to the other.

The nature of things indifferent is neither to be commanded nor forbidden, but left free and arbitrary. Hooker.

Customs, which of themselves are indifferent in other kingdoms, became exceeding evil in this realm, by reason of the inconveniences which followed thereupon. Davies.

Though at first it was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet, the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not so indifferent. South.

This I mention only as my conjecture, it being indifferent to the matter which way the learned shall determine. Locke.

4. Impartial; disinterested.

Metcalf was partial to none, but indifferent to all; a master for the whole, and a father to every one. Ascham.

I am a most poor woman and a stranger, Born out of your dominions; having here No judge indifferent, and no more assurance Of equal friendship and proceeding. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

There can hardly be an indifferent trial had between the king and the subject, or between party and party, by reason of this general kindred and consanguinity. Davies.

5. Passable; having mediocrity; of a middling state; neither good nor worst.

This is an improper and a colloquial use, especially when applied to persons.

Some things admit of mediocrity:

A counsellor or pleader at the bar,
May want Messala's powerful eloquence,
Or be less read than deep Cassilius;
Yet this indifferent lawyer is esteem'd. Rosconi.

Who would excel, when few can make a test,
Betwixt indifferent writing and the best? Dryden.

This has obliged me to publish an indifferent collection of poems, for fear of being thought the author of a worse. Prior.

There is not one of these subjects that would not sell a very indifferent paper, could I think of gratifying the publick by such mean and base methods. Addison.

6. In the same sense it has the force of an adverb.

I am myself indifferent honest; but yet I could accuse me of such things, that it were better that my mother had not born me. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

This will raise a great scum on it, and leave your wine indifferent clear. Mortimer.

INDIFFERENTLY. adv. [indifferenter, Lat.]

1. Without distinction; without preference.

Whiteness is a mean between all colours, having itself indifferently to them all, so as with equal facility to be tinged with any of them. Newton, Opticks.

Were pardon extended indifferently to all, which of them would think himself under any particular obligation? Addison.

Though a church of England-man thinks every species of government equally lawful, he does not think them equally expedient, or for every country indifferently. Swift.

2. Equally; impartially.

That they may truly and indifferently minister justice. Common Prayer.

3. In a neutral state; without wish or aversion.

Set honour in one eye, and death i' the other,
And I will look on death indifferently. Shakspeare, Jul. Cas.

4. Not well; tolerably; passably; middlingly.

A moyle will draw indifferently well, and carry great burthens. Carew.

I hope it may indifferently entertain your lordship at an unbending hour. Rowe.

An hundred and fifty of their beds, sown together, kept me but very indifferently from the floor. Swift, Gullio. Trav.

INDIGENCE.† n. s. [indigence, Fr.; in- INDIGENCY. } gentia, Lat.] Want;

penury; poverty.

The chiefest tie and bond of all human society is neither reason, nor speech, nor indigency; but religion and piety.

Fotherby, Atheom. (1622), p. 38.

Such indigencies as by the curse of God, and restraint of his blessings, [were] on the fruits of their land. Pococke on Isaiah, p. 66.

Where there is happiness, there must not be indigency, or want of any due comforts of life.

Burnet, Theory.

For ev'n that indigence, that brings me low,
Makes me myself, and him above to know. Dryden.

Athens worshipped God with temples and sacrifices, as if he needed habitation and sustenance; and that the heathens had such a mean apprehension about the indigency of their gods, appears from Aristophanes and Lucian. Bentley.

INDIGENE.* n. s. [indigene, Fr.; indigena, Lat.] A native.

The alaternus, which we have lately received from the hottest parts of Languedoc, thrives with us, as if it were an indigene. Evelyn.

INDIGENOUS. adj. [indigene, Fr.; indigena, Latin.] Native to a country; originally produced or born in a region.

Negroes were all transported from Africa, and are not indigenous or proper natives of America.

INDIGEST. † adj. [indigeste, Fr.; indigestus, Lat.]

1. Not separated into distinct orders; not regularly disposed.

This mass, or indigested matter, or chaos, created in the beginning, was without the proper form, which it afterwards acquired.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

Before the seas, and this terrestrial ball,

One was the face of nature, if a face;

Rather a rude and indigested mass. Dryd. Ovid.

2. Not formed or shaped. Indigest is not now in use.

Monsters and things indigest. Shaks. Sonn. 114.

Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested lump;

As crooked in thy manners as thy shape. Shaks.

3. Not well considered and methodised.

By irksome deformities, through endless and senseless effusions of indigested prayers, they oftentimes disgrace the worthiest part of Christian duty towards God. Hooker.

The political creed of the high-principled men sets the protestant succession upon a firmer foundation than all the indigested schemes of those who profess revolution principles. Swift.

4. Not concocted in the stomach.

Dreams are bred

From rising fumes of indigested food. Dryden.

5. Not purified or sublimed by heat.

That it [the air] be not too gross, nor too penetrative; — not indigested, for want of sun; not unexercised, for want of wind.

Wotton on Architecture, P. i.

6. Not brought to supuration.

His wound was indigested and inflamed.

Wiseman.

INDIGESTIBLE. † adj. [from in and digestible.]

1. Not conquerable in the stomach; not convertible to nutriment.

Eggs are the most nourishing and exalted of all animal food, and most indigestible: no body can digest the same quantity of them as of other food. Arbutnot on Diet.

2. Not capable of being received.

Who but a boy, fond of the florid and the descriptive, could have poured forth such a torrent of indigestible similes? Warton, Rowley Eng. p. 79.

INDIGESTION. † n. s. [indigestion, Fr.; from in and digestion.]

1. A morbid weakness of the stomach; want of concoctive power.

2. The state of meats unconcocted.

The fumes of indigestion may indispose men to thought, as well as to diseases of danger and pain.

Temple.

3. Want of concoction.

Those things which, whether in nature or art, are wont to pass for the carriages of light, have in them sometimes, at least in respect of our sight, some kind of dimness and opacity. The candle hath his snuff, the fire his smoke and blackness of indigestion, the moon her spots, and the very sun itself his eclipses. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 37.

TO INDIGITATE. v. a. [indigito, Lat.]

To point out; to show by the fingers.

Antiquity expressed numbers by the fingers: the depressing this finger, which in the left hand implied but six, in the right hand indigitated six hundred. Brown, Vulg. Err.

As though there were a seminality of urine, we foolishly conceive we behold therein the anatomy of every particle, and can thereby indigitate their affections. Brown, Vulg. Err.

We are not to indigitate the parts transmitted.

Harvey.

INDIGITA'TION. n. s. [from indigitate.] The act of pointing out or shewing, as by the finger.

Which things I conceive no obscure indigitation of providence. More against Atheism.

That discourteous dame with scornfull pryde, And foule entreaty him indignifyde

Spenser, F. Q. vi. i. 30.

2. To treat unbecomingly.

Therefore in closure of a thankful mind,

I deem it best to hold eternally

Their bounteous deeds and noble favour's shrin'd,

Than by discourse them to indignify.

Spenser, Colin Clout.

INDIGNITY. n. s. [indignitas, from indignus, Lat.; indignité, Fr.] Contumely; contemptuous injury; violation of right, accompanied with insult.

Bishops and prelates could not but have bleeding hearts to behold a person of so great place and worth constrained to endure so foul indignities.

Hooker.

No emotion of passion transported me, by the indignity of his carriage, to any thing unbecoming myself.

King Charles.

Man he made, and for him built Magnificent this world, and earth his seat,

Him loud pronounce'd; and, O indignity!

Subjected to his service angel-wings

And flaming ministers, to watch and tend

He does not see how that mighty passion for the church can well consist with those indignities and that contempt men bestow on the clergy. Swift.

To more exalted glories born

Thy mean indignities I scorn.

Pattison.

INDIGO. n. s. [indicum, Lat.] A plant, by the Americans called anil. In the middle of the flower is the style, which afterwards becomes a jointed pod, containing one cylindrical seed in one partition, from which indigo is made, which is used in dying for a blue colour.

Milker.

INDILATORY.  adj.* [in and dilatory.] Not slow; not delaying.

Since you have firm'd — new orders, — you would be pleased in like manner to give them a new form of indilatory execution.

Cornwallis to Sp. King, Suppl. to Cabala, (1654,) p. 105.

INDILIGENCE.  n. s.* [in and diligence.] Slothfulness; carelessness.

Is it not as great an indignity, that an excellent conceit and capacity, by the indilgence of an idle tongue, should be disgraced?

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

He that is bound to use all diligence to subdue his corruptions, at least to repress them; if he do not so, this indilgence of his hath some of his consent.

Hammond, Works, i. 191.

He taxeth them not with indilgence and ignorance, but with folly also.

Bp. Cosin, Can. of Scripture, p. 194.

INDILIGENT.  adj.* [indiligent, Fr. Cotgrave.] Not diligent; careless.

Neither are they [wisdom and knowledge] so casual — as to fall upon the indiligent and underserving.

Feltham, Serm. on Eccl. ii. 11.

INDILIGENTLY.  adv.* [from indiligent.] Without diligence.

I had spent some years, not altogether indiligently, under the ferule of such masters as the place afforded.

Bp. Hall, Specialties of his Life.

INDIMINISHABLE.  adj.* [in and diminishable.] Not to be diminished.

Have they not been bold of late to check the common law, to slight and brave the indiminishable majesty of our highest court, the lawgiving and sacred parliament? Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. ii.

INDIRE/CT. adj. [indirect, Fr.; indirectus, Lat.]

1. Not strait, rectilinear.
2. Not tending otherwise than obliquely or consequentially to a purpose; as, an indirect accusation.
3. Wrong; improper.

Would fain have come with me to meet thy grace;
But by his mother was perforce with-held.

—Fy, what an indirect and peevish course
Is this of hers? Shakespeare, Rich. III.

4. Not fair; not honest.

Think you, that any means under the sun
Can as secure so indirect a course?

Daniel, Civil Wars.

Those things which they do know they may,
Upon sundry indirect considerations, let pass; and although themselves do not err, yet may they deceive others. Hooker.

O pity and shame! that they who to live well
Enter'd so fair, should turn aside, to tread
Paths indirect. Milton, P. L.

Indirect dealing will be discovered one time or other, and then he loses his reputation.

Tillotson.

INDIRE/CTION.† n. s. [in and direction.]

1. Oblique means; tendency not in a straight line.

And thus do we, of wisdom and of reach,
With windlasses, and with essays of bias,
By indirections find directions out.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

2. Dishonest practice.

I had rather coin my heart than wring
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash,
By any indirections. Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

Most of the indirection and artifice, which is used among men, does not proceed so much from a degeneracy in nature, as an affectation of appearing men of consequence by such practices.

Tatler, N. 191.

INDIRE/CTLY. adv. [from indirect.]

1. Not in a right line; obliquely.
2. Not in express terms.

Still she suppresses the name, which continues his doubts and hopes; and at last she indirectly mentions it. Broomer.

3. Unfairly; not rightly.

He bids you then resign

Your crown and kingdom indirectly held
From him the true challenger. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

He that takes any thing from his neighbour, which was justly forfeited, to satisfy his own revenge or avarice, is tied to repentance, but not to restitution: because I took the forfeiture indirectly,
I am answerable to God for my unhandsome, unjust, or uncharitable circumstances. Bp. Taylor.

INDIRE/CTNESS.† n. s. [in and directness.]

1. Obliquity.
2. Unfairness; dishonesty; fraudulent art.

The maligners of this doctrine of purgatory have,
methinks, used a worse kind of indirectness in their exposure of it.

W. Mountagu, Div. Ess. P. ii. (1654.) p. 142.

INDISCERNIBLE.† adj. [in and discern-ible.] Not perceptible; not discoverable.

Speculation, which, to my dark soul,
Depriv'd of reason, is as indiscernible
As colours to my body, wanting sight.

Denham, Sophy.

A motion that was almost instantaneous, and so indiscernible. South, Sermon vii. 17.

These small and almost indiscernible beginnings and seeds of ill humour, have ever since gone on in a very visible encumbrance and progress.

Burnet, Hist. of his own Time, an. 1680.

Although the ministry of angels be now for the most part invisible, yet to the observant it is not altogether indiscernible. Bp. Bull, Works, ii. 494.

INDISCERNIBLENESS.* n. s. [from indis-cernible.] Incapability of discernment.

I should have shew'd you also the indiscernible-ness, to the eye of man, of the different states, till God by his promulgate sentence have made the separation. Hammond, Works, iv. 494.

INDISCERNIBLY.† adv. [from indiscernible.] In a manner not to be perceived.

Much guile often lurks indiscernibly under the fairest appearances. Lively Oracles, p. 21.

INDISCERNIBILITY.* n. s. [from indiscernible.] Incapability of dissolution or separation.

To such a being (God) belongs spirituality, which implies indiscernibility; and who but a madman can imagine the Divine essence discernible into parts? Annot. on Glanville, &c. (1682.) p. 181.

INDISCERNIBLE.* adj. [in and discernible.] See DISCERNIBLE.] Incapable of being broken or destroyed by dissolution of parts.

A soul—is a spirit, and therefore of an indivisible, that is of an indiscernible essence.

More, Immortality of the Soul, p. 118.
The nature of the soul, which is immortal and indiscernible. Glanville, Pre-exist. p. 35.

INDISCERNIBLENESS.* n. s. [from indis-cernible.] The quality or state of being indiscernible.

He must understand the term of an indiscernible-ness not arising from thinner and thinner parts of matter, as he imagines air to be more hardly dis-cernible than earth or water.

Annot. on Glanville, &c. pp. 221, 222.

INDISCERNPTIBLE.† adj. [in and dis-cernptible.] Not to be separated; incapable of being broken or destroyed by dissolution of parts.

We have no way of determining, by experience, what is the certain bulk of the living being each man calls himself: and yet, till it be determined that it is larger in bulk than the solid elementary particles of matter, which there is no ground to think any natural power can dissolve, there is no sort of reason to think death to be the dissolution of it, of the living being, even though it should not be absolutely indiscernptible.

Bp. Butler, Analogy of Religion, p. i. ch. i.

INDISCERNPTIBILITY. n. s. [from indiscernptible.] Incapability of dissolution.

INDISCIPLINABLE.* adj. [in and disciplin-able.] Incapable of improvement by discipline.

Nothing can be to us a law, which is by us indiscoverable. Conybeare, Sermon. ii. 166.

INDISCOVERY. n. s. [in and discovery.] The state of being hidden. An unusual word.

The ground of this assertion was the magnifying esteem of the ancients, arising from the indiscovery
of its head. Brown.

INDISCREET adj. [indiscret, Fr.; in and discret.] Imprudent; incautious; inconsiderate; injudicious.

Why then

Are mortal men so fond and indiscreet,
So evil gold to seek unto their aid;
And having not complain, and having it upbraid?

Spenser, F. Q.

If thou be among the indiscreet, observe the time; but be continually among men of understanding. Ecclesi. xxvii. 12.

INDISCREETLY. adv. [from indiscreet.]

Without prudence; without consideration; without judgment.

Job on justice hath aspersions flung,
And spoken indiscreetly with his tongue. Sandys.

Let a great personage undertake an action passionately, let him manage it indiscreetly, and he shall have enough to flatter him.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.

INDISCRETE.* adj. [indiscretus, Lat.] Not separated or distinguished.

A chaos, in which the terrestrial elements were all in an indiscrete mass of confused matter.

Pownall on Antiq. p. 132.

INDISCRETION. n. s. [indiscretion, Fr.; in and discretion.] Imprudence; rashness; inconsideration.

Indiscretion sometimes serves us well,
When our deep plots do fail. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
His offences did proceed rather from negligence, rashness, or other indiscretion, than from any malicious thought. Hayward.

Loose papers have been obtained from us by the importunity and divulged by the indiscretion of friends, although restrained by promises. Swift.

INDISCRIMINATE.† adj. [indiscrimi-natus, Latin.] Undistinguishable; not marked with any note of distinction.

Could ever wise man wish, in good estate,
The use of all things indiscriminate?

Bp. Hall, Sat. v. 3.

INDISCRIMINATELY. adv. [from indiscriminate.] Without distinction.

Others use defamatory discourse purely for love of talk, whose speech, like a flowing current, bears away indiscriminately whatever lies in its way. Gov. of the Tongue.

Liquors, strong of acid salts, destroy the blue-ness of the infusion of our wood; and liquors in-discriminately, that abound with sulphureous salts, restore it. Boyle.

INDISCRIMINATING.* adj. [from indiscriminate.] Making no distinction.

We should be cautious of asserting in general and indiscriminating terms. Warton.

The king was sufficiently indisposed towards the persons or the principles of Calvin's disciples.

Clarendon.

INDISPOSEDNESS.† n. s. [from indisposed.] State of unfitness or disinclination; disordered state.

A sensible indisposedness of heart.

Bp. Hall, Soliloq. 73.

The quantity we take in, more than agreeth with nature, whose burden appeareth by too much dullness, drowsiness, or indisposedness of head or stomach.

Whilock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 500.

It is not any innate harshness in piety that renders the first essays of it unpleasant; that is owing only to the indisposedness of our own hearts.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

INDISPOSITION. n. s. [indisposition, Fr. from indispose.]

1. Disorder of health; tendency to sickness; slight disease.

The king did complain of a continual infirmity of body, yet rather as an indisposition in health than any set sickness.

Hayward.

I have known a great fleet lose great occasions, by an indisposition of the admiral, while he was neither well enough to exercise, nor ill enough to leave the command.

Temple.

Wisdom is still looking forward, from the first indispositions, into the progress of the disease.

L'Estrange.

The sole point of individueation between Alexander the Great, Jack of Leyden, and Monsieur Des Cartes. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 9.

What is the principle of individueation? Or what is it that makes any one thing the same as it was before? Watts.

INDIVIDUITY. n. s. [from individuus, Lat.]

The state of being an individual: separate existence.

INDIVINITY. n. s. [in and divinity.] Want of divine power. Not in use.

How openly did the oracle betray his indivinity unto Croesus, who being ruined by his amphibology, and expostulating with him, received no higher answer than the excuse of his impotency!

Brown, Vulg. Err.

INDIVISIBILITY. } n. s. [from indivisible.]

INDIVISIBLENESS. } State in which no more division can be made.

A pestle and mortar will as soon bring any particle of matter to indivisibility as the acutest thought of a mathematician. Locke.

INDIVISIBLE. adj. [indivisible, Fr. in and divisible.] That cannot be broken into parts; so small as that it cannot be smaller; having reached the last degree of divisibility.

By atom, no body will imagine we intend to express a perfect indivisible, but only the least sort of natural bodies. Digby.

Here is but one indivisible point of time observed, but one action performed; yet the eye cannot comprehend at once the whole object.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

INDIVISIBLE.* n. s. That which is incapable of division.

If quantity consists of indivisibles or atoms, it will follow that a scaleum is all one with an isosceles, &c.

More, Song of the Soul, Notes, p. 376.

INDIVISIBLY.† adv. [from indivisible.] So as it cannot be divided.

Their act of allowance to the Greek church implies a fair independency of these two, which some of their clamorous clients appear to have indivisibly coupled.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Mar. Clergy, p. 11.

INDOCIBLE.† adj. [in and docible.] Unteachable; insusceptible of instruction.

Contracted and clung together with sensual delights, now he becomes utterly indocible.

Bp. Hall, Occas. Medit. 106.

They are as ignorant and indocile as any fool.

Dr. Griffith, Fear of God and the King, p. 72.

INDOCILE.† adj. [indocile, Fr. indocilis, Lat. Dr. Johnson gives our word without the e final, indocil; though he writes docile with it. The solitary instance of the present word, which he brings from Bentley's Sermons, is certainly indocil; but indocile is the elder and preferable way of writing it.]

Un teachable; incapable of being instructed.

Hogs and more indocile beasts shall be taught to labour.

Sir W. Petty, Adv. to Hartlib, (1648), p. 23.

These certainly are the fools in the text, indocil, intractable fools, whose stolidity can baffle all arguments, and be proof against demonstration itself.

Bentley, Serm. i.

INDOCILITY.† n. s. [indocilité, Fr. in and docility.] Un teachableness; refusal of instruction.

To have left us in their miserable darkness and indocility.

Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

The stiffness and indocility of the Pharisees.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. I. Pref. to the Court.

To INDOCRINATE. v. a. [indocriner, old French.] To instruct; to tincture with any science, or opinion.

Under a master that discoursed excellently, and took much delight in indocrinating his young unexperienced favourite, Buckingham had obtained a quick conception of speaking very gracefully and pertinently.

Clarendon.

They that never peep beyond the common belief, in which their easy understandings were at first indocrinated, are strongly assured of the truth of their receptions.

Glaville.

INDOCTRINATION. n. s. [from indocrinate.]

Instruction; information.

Although postulates are very accommodable unto junior indocrinations, yet are these authorities not to be embraced beyond the minority of our intellectuals.

Brown.

INDOLENCE. } n. s. [in and dole, Latin; indolency, French.]

1. Freedom from pain.

As there must be indolency where there is happiness, so there must not be indigency.

Burnet, Theory.

I have ease; if it may not rather be called indolence. Hough.

2. Laziness; inattention; listlessness.

Let Epicurus give indolency as an attribute to his gods, and place in it the happiness of the blest: the divinity which we worship has given us not only a precept against it, but his own example to the contrary. Dryden.

The Spanish nation, roused from their ancient indolence and ignorance, seem now to improve trade. Bolingbroke.

INDOLENT. adj. [French.]

1. Free from pain. So the chirurgeons speak of an indolent tumour.

To waste long nights in indolent repose.

Pope, Iliad.

INDOLENTLY. adv. [from indolent.]

1. With freedom from pain.

2. Carelessly; lazily; inattentively; listlessly.

While lull'd by sound, and undisturb'd by wit,
Calm and serene you indolently sit. Addison.

INDOMABLE.* [indomabilis, Lat.] Un-tamable. Cockeram.

INDOMITABLE.* adj. [indomitable, Fr. indomitus, Lat.] Untamable.

It is so fierce and indomitable.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 383.

INDOMITE.* adj. [indomitus, Lat.] Untamed; wild; savage.

No tiger so fierce, no fowl so ravening, no whale so monstrous, no subject any creature, so indomite, but that it was subject to man's dominion, while man was subject to his Lord and Maker.

Salkeld, Treat. of Paradise, (1617), p. 122.

TO INDOURSE.* See TO ENDORSE, and its derivatives.

TO INDO'W. v. a. [indotare, Latin.] To portion; to enrich with gifts, whether of fortune or nature. See ENDOW.

INDRAUGHT. n. s. [in and draught.]

1. An opening in the land into which the sea flows.

Ebbs and floods there could be none, when there was no indraughts, bays, or gulphs, to receive a flood. Raleigh.

2. Inlet; passage inwards.

Navigable rivers are indraughts to attain wealth.

Bacon.

TO INDR'ENCH.† v. a. [from drench. Sax. in-hyencan.] To soak; to drown.

My hopes lie drown'd; in many fathoms deep
They lie indr'ench'd. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

If in this flesh, where thou indr'ench'd dost lie,
Poore soule, thou canst reare up thy limed wings,
Carry my thoughts up to the sacred skie.

Jones's Muscicall Dreame, (1609.)

INDUBIOUS. adj. [in and dubious.] Not doubtful; not suspecting; certain.

Hence appears the vulgar way of reposing an indubious confidence in those antipestilential spirits.

Harvey.

INDUBITABLE.† adj. [indubitabilis, Lat. indubitable, Fr. in and dubitable.] Undoubted; unquestionable; evident; certain in appearance; clear; plain.

The invocation of them is notwithstanding a very presumptuous invasion of the indubitable rights of God.

More against Idolatry, ch. 2.

When general observations are drawn from so many particulars as to become certain and indubitable, these are jewels of knowledge.

Watts on the Mind.

INDUBITABLENESS.* n. s. [from indubitable.] The state of being indubitable.

Ash.

INDUBITABLY. adv. [from indubitable.] Undoubtedly; unquestionably.

If we transport these proportions from audible to visible objects, they will indubitably result from either a graceful and harmonious contentment.

Wotton, Architecture.

The patriarchs were indubitably invested with both these authorities.

Sprat.

I appeal to all sober judges, whether our souls may be only a mere echo from clashing atoms; or rather indubitably must proceed from a spiritual substance.

Bentley.

INDUBITATE. adj. [indubitatus, Latin.] Unquestioned; certain; apparent; evident.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, he knew it was condemned by parliament, and tended directly to the disinherison of the line of York, held then the indubitatus heirs of the crown.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

I have been tempted to wonder how, among the jealousies of state and court, Edgar Atheling could subsist, being then the apparent and indubitatus heir of the Saxon line.

Wotton.

TO INDOUCE. v. a. [induire, Fr. induco, Latin.]

1. To influence to any thing; to persuade; of persons.

The self same argument in this kind, which doth but induce the vulgar sort to light, may constrain the wiser to yield.

Hooker.

This lady, albeit she was furnished with many excellent endowments, both of nature and education, yet would she never be induced to entertain marriage with any.

Hayward.

Desire with thee still longer to converse

Induc'd me. Milton, P. L.

Let not the covetous design of growing rich induce you to ruin your reputation, but rather satisfy yourself with a moderate fortune; and let your thoughts be wholly taken up with acquiring to yourself a glorious name.

Dryden.

2. To produce by persuasion or influence; of things.

Let the vanity of the times be restrained, which the neighbourhood of other nations have induced, and we strive apace to exceed our pattern.

Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

As belief is absolutely necessary to all mankind, the evidence for inducing it must be of that nature as to accommodate itself to all species of men.

Forbes.

3. To offer by way of induction, or consequential reasoning.

They play much upon the simile, or illustrative argumentation, to induce their enthymemes unto the people, and take up popular conceits.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

4. To inculcate; to enforce.

This induces a general change of opinion, concerning the person or party like to be obeyed by the greatest or strongest part of the people.

Temple.

5. To cause extrinsically; to produce; to effect.

Sour things induce a contraction in the nerves, placed in the mouth of the stomach, which is a great cause of appetite.

Bacon.

Acidity, as it is not the natural state of the animal fluids, but induced by aliment, is to be cured by aliment with the contrary qualities.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

6. To introduce; to bring into view.

To exprobrate their stupidity, he inducteth the providence of storks; now, if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobration not so proper.

Brown.

The poet may be seen inducing his personages in the first Iliad, where he discovers their humours, interests, and designs.

Pope.

7. To bring on; to superinduce; to effect gradually.

Schism is marked out by the apostle as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces that induration to which the fearful expectation of wrath is consequent.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

INDUCEMENT. n. s. [from induce.] Motive to any thing; that which allures or persuades to any thing.

The former inducements do now much more prevail, when the very thing hath ministered farther reason.

Hooker.

Many inducements, besides Scripture, may lead me to that, which if Scripture be against, they are of no value, yet otherwise are strongly effectual to persuade.

Hooker.

That mov'd me to't,

Then mark th' inducement. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

He lives

Higher degree of life; inducement strong

For us. Milton, P. L.

My inducement hither,
Was not at present here to find my son.

Milton, S. A.

Instances occur of oppression, to which there appears no inducement from the circumstances of the actors.

Rogers.

INDUCER.† n. s. [from induce.] A persuader; one that influences.

How can he be a mete perswader or inducer of the people to widowhead, which hath himselfe been often married?

Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554.) C. iii. b.

As if he were the great impeller and inducer of men to sin.

South, Serm. viii. 85.

INDUCIBLE.* adj. [from induce.]

1. That may be offered by way of induction.

Many things in philosophy [are] confirmable by sense, yet not inducible by reason.

Brown, Rel. Medici.

2. That may be caused.

The satisfaction of prosperity, issuing from sense, is subject to all the changes inducible from the restless commotions of outward causes affecting and altering the sense.

Barrow, Works, iii. 99.

TO INDUCT. v. a. [inductus, Lat.]

1. To introduce; to bring in.

The ceremonies in the gathering were first inducted by the Venetians.

Sandys, Trav.

2. To put into actual possession of a benefice.

If a person thus instituted, though not inducted, takes a second benefice, it shall make the first void.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

INDUCTION.† n. s. [induction, Fr. induction, Lat.]

1. Introduction; entrance; anciently preface, and also something introductory to a play.

This is well knowne to be true, of them, that have any leisure to read Holy Scripture; who, remembering themselves by this my little induction, will leave to neglect history.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 205. b.

These promises are fair, the parties sure, And our induction full of prosperous hope.

Shaks.

Inductions are out of date, and a prologue in verse is as stale as a black velvet cloak.

Benum. and Fl. Woman-Hater, Prol.

This is but an induction; I will draw The curtains of the tragedy hereafter.

Massinger, Guardian.

An induction to those succeeding evils, which pursued that inconsiderate marriage.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. Rich. III. p. 118.

2. Induction is when, from several particular propositions, we infer one general: as, the doctrine of the Socinians cannot be proved from the gospels, it cannot be proved from the acts of the apostles, it cannot be proved from the epistles, nor the book of Revelation; therefore it cannot be proved from the New Testament. Watts, Logick.

The inquisition by induction is wonderful hard; for the things reported are full of fables, and new experiments can hardly be made but with extreme caution. Bacon.

Mathematical things are only capable of clear demonstration: conclusions in natural philosophy are proved by induction of experiments, things moral by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony. Tillotson.

Although the arguing from experiments and observations by induction be no demonstration of general conclusions, yet it is the best way of arguing which the nature of things admits of, and may be looked upon as so much the stronger by how much the induction is more general; and if no exception occur from phenomena, the conclusion may be general. Newton, Opticks.

He brought in a new way of arguing from induction, and that grounded upon observation and experiments. Baker.

5. The act of giving possession to the person, who has received institution of his church; by virtue of a mandate from the archdeacon, empowering another clergyman to induct him into the real, actual, and corporal possession of his rectory or vicarage; first laying his hand on the key of the church, in the church door; and the incumbent afterwards tolling one of the bells. See INDUCTOR. Institution is the investiture of the spiritual part of the benefice; induction, of the temporal.

In dignities possession is given by instalment; in rectories and vicarages, by induction.

Blackstone.

INDUCTIVE. adj. [from induct.]

1. Leading; persuasive: with to.

A brutish vice,

Inductive mainly to the sin of Eve. Milton, P. L.

2. Capable to infer or produce.

Abatement may take away infallible conclusion in these evidences of fact, yet they may be probable and inductive of credibility, though not of science. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

3. Proceeding not by demonstration, but induction.

INDUCTIVELY.* adv. [from inductive.] By induction; by inference.

This I shall make appear inductively, by recounting the several ends and intents, to which, with any colour of reason, it may be designed.

South, Serm. vii. 197.

INDUCTOR.* n. s. [from induct.] The person who inducts another into a benefice.

He puts the incumbent into possession of the church, who, when he has tolled a bell, comes forth; and the inductor indorses a certificate of such his induction on the warrant of the archdeacon, attested by those who were present.

Directions, &c. Clergyman's Assist. (2d edit.) p. 312. n.

TO INDUE.† v. a. [induo, Lat.]

1. To invest; to clothe.

Diana's shape and habit then indued,
He said; My huntress, &c. Sandys, Ovid, B. 2.

One first matter all,

2. It seems sometimes to be, even by good writers, confounded with endow or indow, to furnish or enrich with any quality or excellence. Dr. Johnson.—This, however, is more fully explained under the second sense of TO ENDUE.

The angel, by whom God indued the waters of Bethesda with supernatural virtue, was not seen; yet the angel's presence was known by the waters.

Hooker.

His powers, with dreadful strength indit'd.

Chapman.

INDU'EMENT.* n. s. [from indue.] Endowment. Not now in use.

Solomon's experience should disabuse all men in relying upon the virtue of their spirit, when we see that his so singular induement with the Holy Spirit was not security against the danger of this presumption.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648.) p. 170.

TO INDU'LGE.† v. a. [indulgeo, Lat.]

1. To encourage by compliance.

The lazy glutton safe at home will keep,
Indulge his sloth, and fatten with his sleep. Dryd.

2. To fondle; to favour; to gratify with concession; to foster. If the matter of indulgence be a single thing, it has with before it; if it be a habit, it has in; as, he indulged himself with a draught of wine; and, he indulged himself in shameful drunkenness. It has sometimes, though rarely, to.

By the excess of pleasures, which he indulged to himself, he was inducted without the true delight and relish of any. L. Clarendon, Life, iii. 681.

A mother was wont to indulge her daughters with dogs, squirrels, or birds; but then they must keep them well. Locke.

To live like those that have their hope in another life, implies that we indulge ourselves in the gratifications of this life very sparingly. Atterbury.

3. To grant not of right, but favour.

Ancient privileges, indulged by former kings to their people, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

The virgin enter'ing bright, indulgd the day
To the brown cave, and brush'd the dreams away.

Dryden.

But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,
And mingle something of our times to please.

Dryden, Juv.

My friend, indulge one labour more,
And seek Atrides. Pope, Odys.

Yet, yet a moment, one dim ray of light
Indulge, dread chaos and eternal night! Pope.

TO INDU'LGE.† v. n. [A Latinism not in use.] To be favourable; to give indulgence: with to.

He must, by indulging to one sort of reprovable discourse himself, defeat his endeavours against the rest. Gov. of the Tongue.

INDU'LGE.NCE.† n. s. [indulgence, Fr. from INDU'LGENCY.] indulge.

1. Fondness; fond of kindness.

Restraint she will not brook;
And left to herself, if evil thence ensue,
She first his weak indulgence will accuse.

Milton, P. L.

The glories of our isle,
Which yet like golden ore, unripe in beds,
Expect the warm indulgency of heaven. Dryden.

2. Forbearance; tenderness: opposite to rigour.

Your majesty is still pleased, by the excellency of your nature, and by the indulgency of your judgement, to accept honest zeal for discretion.

Wotton, Despatch dated 1620, Rem. p. 524.

They err, that through indulgence to others, or fondness to any sin in themselves, substitute for repentance any thing less.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

In known images of life, I guess
The labour greater, as the indulgence less. Pope.

3. Favour granted; liberality.

If all these gracious indulgences are without any effect on us we must perish in our own folly.

Rogers.

4. Compliance with; gratification of; as, self-indulgence; indulgence in any vice.

The loosenesses and indulgences of this age—bear a proportion with the religion of the Ottomans.

Sir R. Tempest, Entert. of Solit. (1649.) p. 5.

5. Grant of the church of Rome, not defined by themselves. Dr. Johnson.—

This is a definition of it according to one of that church: "The true meaning and signification of indulgences, and their efficacy, consists in this, viz. that it is a release of the temporal penalty remaining due to sin, after the guilt thereof, and the eternal punishment entailed on it, had been remitted in the sacrament of penance, or through a sincere and unfeigned contrition." Important Inquiry, &c. 2d edit. 1758, p. 227.—The church of Rome makes a distinction also of partial and plenary indulgence. See the example from bishop Jeremy Taylor.

The exposition of the present sense of indulgences, in the unanswerable remarks of one of the brightest ornaments of the Protestant church, must also here follow.

"The doctrine of indulgences, as it was before the council of Trent, and hath been since taught in the church of Rome, is big with gross errors. It depends on the fiction of purgatory; it supposeth a superfluity of the satisfactions of the saints; which, being jumbled together (horreo referens) with the merits and satisfaction of our Saviour, make up one treasury of the church; that the bishop of Rome keeps the key of it, as having the sole power of granting indulgences, either by himself immediately, or by others commissioned from him. Lastly, it very absurdly extends the effect of the power of the keys, left by Christ in his church, to men in the other world." Bishop Bull, Corrupt. of the Ch. of Rome, in Ans. to the Bishop of Meux's Queries.

Thou, that giv'st whores indulgences to sin,
I'll canvass thee. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Indulgences dispenses, pardons, bulls.
The sport of winds. Milton, P. L.

Your best way is to get a plenary indulgence; and that may be had on reasonable terms: but take heed you do not think yourself secure; for a plenary indulgence does not do all that it may be you require; for there is an indulgence more full, and another most full; and it is not agreed upon among the doctors, whether a plenary indulgence is to be extended beyond the taking off those penances, which were actually enjoined by the confessor, or how far they go further.

Bp. Taylor, Dissuasive from Popery, § 4.

In purgatory, indulgences, and supererogation, the assertors seem to be unanimous in nothing but profit.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

Leo X. is deservedly infamous for his base prostitution of indulgences. Asterbury.

INDULGENT. adj. [indulgent, Fr. indulgens, Lat.]

1. Kind; gentle; liberal.

God has done all for us that the most indulgent Creator could do for the work of his hands. Rogers.

2. Mild; favourable.

Hereafter such in thy behalf shall be Th' indulgent censure of posterity. Waller.

3. Gratiating; favouring; giving way to: with of.

The feeble old, indulgent of their ease. Dryden, En.

INDULGENTIAL.* adj. [from indulgent.] Relating to the indulgences of the Romish church.

You are fitted with rare indulgent privileges. Brevint, Saul and Sam. at End. ch. 10.

INDULGENTLY.† adv. [from indulgent.] Without severity; without censure; without self-reproach; with indulgence.

He that not only commits some act of sin, but lives indulgently in it, is never to be counted a regenerate man. Hammond.

Ills?—There are none; All-gracious, none from Thee!—

Whose threats are mercies, whose injunctions guides,

Assisting, not restraining, reason's choice; Whose sanctions, unavoidable results

From nature's course, indulgently reveal'd. Young, Night Th. 9.

INDULGER.* n. s. [from indolge.] One who indulges.

If, as Saint Peter saith, the severest watchers of their nature have task hard enough, what shall be hoped of the indulgents of it? W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648), p. 160.

INDULT.† n. s. [Ital. and Fr.] Privilege INDULTO. } or exemption.

It was a tax laid upon the English a great many years ago, with their own consent, for the privilege of going to Aleppo. — This is a most scandalous indulto. Drummond, Trav. (dat. 1746), p. 180.

To INDURATE. v. n. [induro, Lat.] To grow hard; to harden.

Stones within the earth at first are but rude earth or clay; and so minerals come at first of juices concrete, which afterwards indurate. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

That plants and ligneous bodies may indurate under water, without approachment of air, we have experiments in coral-lines. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To INDURATE.† v. a.

1. To make hard. Glass may be so indurated by fire, that it may scorn the force of the hammer. Gayton on D. Quix. (1654.)

A contracted indurated bladder is a circumstance sometimes attending on the stone, and indeed an extraordinary dangerous one. Sharp, Surgery.

2. To harden the mind; to sear the conscience.

Love's and friendship's finely pointed dart Fall blunted from each indurated heart. Goldsmith, Traveller.

INDURATE.* adj. [from the verb.]

1. Impenitent; hard of heart; obdurate.

After he hath passed one yere and a half in repentance,—then, lest he maie be indurate, let him be admitted to the receiving of the body and bloud of Christ. Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554.)

Thine heart is full hard, indurate, as was the heart of Pharoa.

For, Acts, &c. Exam. of W. Thorpe.

O insensible, indurate, and intolerable unthankfulness of the sons of Adam!

Loc, Bliss of Br. Beauty, (1614), p. 13.

2. Hard; not soft; dried; made hard.

Dried, souced, indurate fish. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 70.

Avoid at all times indurate, salt, and especially spice and windy meat. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 402.

INDURATION. n. s. [from indurate.]

1. The state of growing hard. This is a notable instance of condensation and induration, by burial under earth, in caves, for a long time. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. The act of hardening.

3. Obduracy; hardness of heart. Schism is marked out by the apostle as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces that induration to which the fearful expectation of wrath is consequent. Decay of Chr. Piety.

INDUSTRIOUS. adj. [industrieux, Fr. industrius, Lat.]

1. Diligent; laborious; assiduous: opposed to slothful.

Frugal and industrious men are commonly friendly to the established government. Temple.

2. Laborious to a particular end: opposite to remiss.

He himself, being excellently learned, and industrious to seek out the truth of all things concerning the original of his own people, hath set down the testimony of the ancients truly. Spenser on Ireland.

Let our just censures Attend the true event, and put we on Industrious soldiiership. Shakespeare.

His thoughts were low: To vice industrious; but to nobler deeds

Timorous and slothful. Milton, P. L.

3. Designed; done for the purpose.

The industrious perforation of the tendons of the second joints of fingers and toes, draw the tendons of the third joints through. More, Divine Dialogues.

Observe carefully all the events which happen either by an occasional concurrence of various causes, or by the industrious application of knowing men. Watts on the Mind.

INDUSTRIOUSLY.† adv. [from industrious.] 1. With habitual diligence; not idly.

And of myself industriously inclin'd. Mir. for Mag. p. 525.

2. Diligently; laboriously; assiduously. Great Britain was never before united under one king, notwithstanding that the uniting had been industriously attempted both by war and peace. Bacon.

3. For the set purpose; with design.

Some friends to vice industriously defend These innocent diversions, and pretend That I the tricks of youth too roughly blame. Dryden, Juv.

I am not under the necessity of declaring myself, and I industriously conceal my name, which wholly exempts me from any hopes and fears. Swift.

INDUSTRY.† n. s. [industrie, Fr.; industrius, Latin.] "Industry hath not bene so long time used in the English tongue, as providence: wherefore, it is the more strange, and requireth the more plaine exposition. It is a qualitie proceeding of witte and experience, by the which a man perceyeth quickely, inventeth freshly, and counseyleth speedily. Wherefore they, that be called industrious, doo moste craftely and deeplye understande in all affairs what is expedient, and by what means and wayes they may soonest exployte them." Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 73.] Diligence; assiduity; habitual or actual laboriousness.

The sweat of industry would dry and die, But for the end it works to. Shakespeare, Cymb.

See the laborious bee For little drops of honey flee, And there with humble sweets content her industry. Cowley.

Providence would only initiate mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry, that we might not live like idle loiterers. More.

INDWELLER.* n. s. [in and dwell.] An inhabitant.

Too true that lands indwellers since have found. Spenser, F. Q. vii. vi. 55.

Uncapable of any mortal indweller. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

An house ready to fall on the head of the indweller. Bp. Hall, Occas. Med. § 110.

To INEBRIATE. v. a. [inebrio, Lat.] To intoxicate; to make drunk.

Wine sugared inebrieth less than wine pure: sops in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriate more than wine of itself. Bacon.

Fish, entering far in and meeting with the fresh water, as if inebriated, turn up their bellies and are taken. Sandys.

To INEBRIATE.† v. n. To grow drunk; to be intoxicated.

At Constantinople fish, that come from the Euxine sea into the fresh water, do inebriate and turn up their bellies, so as you may take them with your hand. Bacon.

Thy brains inebriate so, That thou thy nakedness shall boldly shew. Sandys, Paraphr. Lament. ch. 4.

INEBRIATION. n. s. [from inebriate.] Drunkenness; intoxication.

That cornelians and bloodstones may be of virtue, experience will make us grant; but not that an amethyst prevents inebriation. Brown.

INE'DITED.* adj. [ineditus, Lat.] Not published; not put forth.

An inedited coin of queen Sexaburgeo. Watson, Hist. Eng. Poetry, vol. ii. Add.

INEFFABILITY. n. s. [from ineffable.] Unspeakableness.

INEFFABLE. adj. [ineffable, Fr.; ineffabilis, Lat.] Unspeakable; unutterable; not to be expressed. It is used almost always in a good sense.

To whom the Son, with calm aspect and clear, Lightning divine, ineffable, serene, Made answer. Milton, P. L.

Reflect upon a clear, unblotted, acquitted conscience, and feed upon the ineffable comforts of the memorial of a conquered temptation. South.

INEFFABLENESS.* n. s. [from ineffable.] Unspeakableness. Scott.

INEFFABLY.† adv. [from ineffable.] In a manner not to be expressed.

So dyd the divinity ineffably put itselfe into the visible sacrament.

Abp. Croomer, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 371.

He all his Father full express'd

INEFFECTIVE. adj. [ineffectif, Fr; in and effective.] That can produce no effect; unactive; inefficient; useless.

As the body, without blood, is a dead and lifeless trunk; so is the word of God, without the spirit, a dead and ineffective letter. Bp. Taylor.

He that assures himself he never errs, will always err; and his presumptions will render all attempts to inform him ineffective. Glanville.

INEFFECTUAL. adj. [in and effectual.]
Unable to produce its proper effect;
weak; wanting power.

The public reading of the Apocrypha they condemn as a thing effectual unto evil: the bare reading even of Scriptures themselves they mislike, as a thing ineffectual to do good. Hooker.

The death of Patrocles, joined to the offer of Agamemnon, which of itself had proved ineffectual. Pope.

INEFFECTUALLY. adv. [from ineffectual.]
Without effect.

In nineteen days' time there were above 1000 great shot spent ineffectually on the brave loyalists, who held out against the menaces of Manchester's whole army. Ashmole, Hist. of Berks, ii. 286.

INEFFECTUALNESS. n. s. [from ineffectual.]
Inefficacy; want of power to perform the proper effect.

St. James speaks of the ineffectualness of some men's devotion, Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss. Wake.

INEFFECTUOUS. adj. [inefficace, Fr.; inefficax, Latin.] Unable to produce effects; weak; feeble. Ineffectual rather denotes an actual failure; and inefficacious, an habitual impotence to any effect.

Is not that better than always to have the rod in hand, and, by frequent use, misapply and render inefficacious this useful remedy? Locke.

INEFFECTUOUSNESS. n. s. [from inefficacious.]
Want of power to perform the proper effect.

To this we may probably impute that strange ineffectuousness we see of the word: Alas! men rarely apply it to the right place. Lively Oracles, &c. p. 194.

INEFFICACY. n. s. [in and efficacie, Lat.]
Want of power; want of effect.

INEFFICIENCY. n. s. [in and efficiency.]
Want of power; inactivity.

Venice owes its security to its neutrality and inefficiency. Ld. Chesterfield.

INEFFICIENT. adj. [in and efficient.]
Unactive; ineffective. See Dr. Johnson's definition of INEFFECTIVE.

He is as insipid in his pleasures, as inefficient in every thing else. Ld. Chesterfield.

INELABORATE. n. s. [in and elaborate.] Not done with much care. Cockeram.

INELEGANCE. n. s. [from inelegant.] ABINELEGANCY. sence of beauty; want of elegance.

INELEGANT. adj. [inelegans, Lat.]
1. Not becoming; not beautiful; opposite to elegant.

What order, so contriv'd as not to mix Taste, not well join'd, inelegant, but bring Taste after taste, upheld with kindest change. Milton, P. L.

This very variety of sea and land, hill and dale, which is here reputed so inelegant and unbecoming, is indeed extremely charming and agreeable. Woodward.

2. Wanting ornament of language.
Modern critics, having never read Homer, but in low and inelegant translations, impute the meanness of the translation to the poet. Broome on the Odyssey.

INELEGANTLY. adv. [from inelegant.]
1. Not becomingly; not beautifully.

The pediments of the southern transept is pinnaled, not inelegantly, with a flourish cross. Watson, Hist. of Kildington, p. 8.

2. Coarsely; without ornament of language.

Nor will he, if he have the least taste or application; talk inelegantly. Ld. Chesterfield.

In an invocation to rime, while he is not inelegantly illustrating the pleasingness of an easy association of consonant syllables, he artfully intermixes the severities of satire. Watson, Hist. E. P. iv. 60.

INELOQUENT. adj. [in and eloquens, Lat.]
Not persuasive; not oratorical; opposite to eloquent.

INELUCTABLE. adj. [ineluctabilis, Lat.]
Not to be avoided or overcome. Cockeram.

As if the damnation of all sinners now were ineluctable and eternal. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 5.

INELUDIBLE. adj. [in and eludible.] Not to be defeated.

Most pressing reasons, and ineludible demonstrations. Glanville, Pre-Exist. p. 14.

INENARRABLE. adj. [inenarrable, old French; inenarrabilis, Lat.] Not capable of being told; inexpressible. Cockeram.

INEPT. adj. [inepte, old Fr.; ineptus, Lat.]

1. Trifling; foolish.

The works of nature being neither useless nor inept, must be guided by some principle of knowledge. More.

After their various unsuccessful ways, Their fruitless labour, and inept essays, No cause of these appearances they'll find, But power exerted by th' Eternal Mind. Blackmore.

2. Unfit for any purpose; useless.

When the upper and vegetative stratum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the strata below yielding only mere sterile matter, such as was wholly inept and improper for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.

INEPTITUDE. n. s. [from ineptus, Latin.]
Unfitness.

The grating and rubbing of axes against the sockets, wherein they are placed, will cause some ineptitude or resistency to rotation of the cylinder. Wilkins.

An omnipotent agent works infallibly and irresistibly, no ineptitude or stubbornness of the matter being ever capable to hinder him. Ray on the Creation.
There is an ineptitude to motion from too great laxity, and an ineptitude to motion from too great tension. Arbutnot.

INEPTLY. adv. [inepté, Lat.] Triflingly; foolishly; unfitly.

None of them are made foolishly or ineptly. More.

All things were at first disposed by an omniscient intellect, that cannot contrive ineptly. Glanville.

INEPTNESS. n. s. [from inept.] Unfitness. The feebleness and miserable ineptness of infancy. More, Pre-exist. of the Soul, (1647), Pref.

INEQUAL. adj. [inegal, Fr. inequalis, Lat.] This is the ancient form of our word unequal, used by Chaucer, and given in the old dictionary of Barret, viz. "an inequal or unjust contention." In modern times, Shenstone often uses it. Welcome all toils the inequal fates decree, While toils endear thy faithful charge to thee. Shenstone, Judg. of Hercules.

He, not imprudent, at the sight declin'd the inequal conflict. Shenstone, Econ. P. ii.

INEQUALITY. n. s. [inegalité, Fr. from inequalitas, Latin.]

1. Difference of comparative quantity.

There is so great an inequality in the length of our legs and arms, as makes it impossible for us to walk on all four. Ray.

2. Unevenness; interchange of higher and lower parts.

The country is cut into so many hills and inequalities as renders it defensible. Addison on Italy.

The glass seemed well wrought; yet when it was quick-silvered, the reflexion discovered innumerable inequalities all over the glass. Newton, Opt.

If there were no inequalities in the surface of the earth, nor in the seasons of the year, we should lose a considerable share of the vegetable kingdom. Bentley.

3. Disproportion to any office or purpose; state of not being adequate; inadequateness.

The great inequality of all things to the appetites of a rational soul appears from this, that in all worldly things a man finds not half the pleasure in the actual possession that he proposed in the expectation. South.

4. Change of state; unlikeness of a thing to itself; difference of temper or quality.

In some places, by the nature of the earth, and by the situation of woods and hills, the air is more unequal than in others; and inequality of air is ever an enemy to health. Bacon.

5. Difference of rank or station.

If so small inequality between man and man make in them modesty a commendable virtue, who respecting superiors as superiors, can neither speak nor stand before them without fear. Hooker.

INEQUITABLE. adj. [in and equitable.]
Not equitable; unjust.

The way of process men take in this affair is so inequitable, as certainly presages the partiality of the sentence. Dec. of Chr. Piety, p. 64.

INERRABILITY. n. s. [from inerrable.]
Exemption from error; infallibility.

Those hideous novelties of the inerrability of a man of sin. By. Hall, Rem. p. 402.

I cannot allow their wisdom such a completeness and inerrability as to exclude myself from judging. King Charles.

INERRABLE. adj. [in and err.] Exempt from error.

We have conviction from reason, or decisions from the inerrable and requisite conditions of sense. Brown.

Infallibility and inerrableness is assumed by the Romish church, without any inerrable ground to build it on. Hammond.

INERRABLENESS. n. s. [from inerrable.]
Exemption from error.

Infallibility and inerrableness is assumed and inclosed by the Romish church, without any inerrable ground to build it on. Hammond on Fundamentals.

INERRABLY. adv. [from inerrable.] With security from error; infallibly.

INERRINGLY. adv. [in and erring.] Without error; without mistake; without deviation.

That divers limners at a distance, without copy, should draw the same picture, is more conceivable, than that matter should frame itself so inerringly according to the idea of its kind. Glanville.

INERT. adj. [iners, Lat.] Dull; sluggish; motionless.

Body alone, inert and brute you'll find; The cause of all things is by you assigned. Blackmore.

Informer of the planetary train! Without whose quickening glance their cumbrous orbs

Were brute unlively mass, inert and dead. Thomson.

INE'RTLY. adv. [from inert.] Sluggishly; dully.

Ye powers,
Suspend a while your force inertly strong.
Pope, Dunciad.

INE'RTNESS.* n. s. [from inert.] Want of motion.

A state of silence and inertness.
Glanville, Pre-exist. p. 125.
Into a state of more stupor and inertness.
Ibid. p. 127.

TO INE'SCATE.* v. a. [inesco, inescatus, Latin.] To lay a bait for; to allure.

Many such pranks are played by our Jesuits, sometimes in their own habits, sometimes in others, — to inescate and beguile young women.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 505.

INESCA'TION.† n. s. [in and esca, Lat.] The act of baiting.

Herein lies true fortitude and courage, in overcoming all the deceitful allurements and inescations of flesh and blood.

Hallywell, Excell. of Moral Virtue, (1692,) p. 107.
INE'STIMABLE. adj. [inestimabile, Fr. inestimabilis, Lat.] Too valuable to be rated; transcending all price.

I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks,
A thousand men that fishes know'd I upon;
Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl,
Inestimable stones, unvalu'd jewels.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.
The pope thereupon took advantage, abusing the simplicity of the king to suck out inestimable sums of money, to the intolerable grievance of both the clergy and temporality.
Abbot.

There we shall see a sight worthy dying for, that blessed Saviour, of whom the Scripture does so excellently entertain us, and who does so highly deserve of us, upon the score of his infinite perfections, and his inestimable benefits.
Boyle.

And shall this prize, the inestimable prize,
On that rapacious hand for ever blaze!
Pope.

INE'STIMABLY.* adv. [from inestimable.] So as not to be sufficiently rated.

Things inestimably excellent.
More, Sleep of the Soul, iii. iii. 7.
Heavenly and instructive volumes, inestimably overvaluing any the earth affords.

Boyle, Style of Holy Script. p. 87.
INE'VIDENCE.* n. s. [in and evidence.] Obscurity; uncertainty.

Charge them, says St. Paul, that they trust not in uncertain riches, that is, in the obscurity or evidence of riches.
Barrow, Works, i. 1449.

INE'VIDENT.† adj. [inevident, Fr. in and evident.] Not plain; obscure. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Brown. It is a word, however, which boasts better authority than that of Brown; and has been adopted, from them, by a modern author of eminence. See also INEVIDENCE.

Our schoolmen make a distinction of a certainty; evident and inevident.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 267.
The habit of faith in divinity is an argument of things unseen, and a stable assent unto things inevident, upon authority of the divine revealer.

Brown, Vulg. Err.
The object of faith is inevident.

Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 556.
"Faith is the evidence of things not seen;" by which words I conceive we may understand an un-doubting assent to those things which are of themselves inevident. Bp. Conybeare, Sermon. vol. ii. S. 3.

INEVITAB'ILITY.† n. s. [from inevitable.] Impossibility to be avoided; certainty.
By liberty, I do understand neither a liberty from sin, misery, servitude, nor violence, but from necessity, or rather necessitation; that is, an universal immunity from all inevitability and determination to one.

Bp. Bramhall against Hobbes.

The overthrow is described to be given as it were by a double blow and a twofold weapon, to shew the certainty and inevitability of it.

Shelford, Learned Discourses, p. 289.
INE'VITABLE. adj. [inevitable, French; inevitabilis, Lat.] Unavoidable; not to be escaped.

I had a pass with him: — he gives me the stick-in with such a mortal motion, that it is inevitable.
Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

Fate inevitable
Subdues us.
Milton, P. L.
Since my inevitable death you know,
You safely unavailing pity show.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.
INE'VITABLENESS.* n. s. [from inevitable.] Certainty; inevitability.

The inevitableness of the account we are to make, and the uncertainty of the time we shall be called to it.
Bp. Prideaux, Euchoi. p. 106.

INE'VITABLY. adv. [from inevitable.] With out possibility of escape.

The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command Transgress, inevitably thou shalt die.
Milton, P. L.
How inevitably does an immoderate laughter end in a sigh?
South.

If they look no further than the next line, it will inevitably follow that they can drive to no certain point.
Dryden.

Inflammations of the bowels oft inevitably tend to the ruin of the whole.
Harvey on Consumptions.

If our sense of hearing were exalted, we should have no quiet or sleep in the silentest nights, and we must inevitably be stricken deaf or dead with a clap of thunder.
Bentley.

INEXCUTION.* n. s. [in and execution.] Non-performance.

This word has been pronounced an Americanism in a "Vocabulary, or Collection of Words and Phrases which have been supposed to be peculiar to the United States of America, by John Pickering, 8vo. Boston, 1816," in which it is said, that "English writers use the term non-execution;" and the American example is, "the inexecution of the treaty of peace," from Judge Marshall's Life of Washington, Vocab. p. 113. It happens, however, that this is an old overpassed English word.

They not only deferred to his counsels in public assemblies, but he was moreover the umpire of domestic matters, and decided quarrels arising between husbands and wives, without there ever being any inexecution or complaint against his decisions and decrees.

Spence, Tr. of Varilla's Hist. of the H. of Medici, (1696,) p. 306.

INEXCUSABLE. adj. [inexcusable, Fr. inexcusabilis, Latin, in and excusable.] Not to be excused; not to be palliated by apology.

It is a temerity and a folly inexcusable, to deliver up ourselves needlessly into another's power.
L'Estrange.

As we are an island with ports and navigable seas, we should be inexcusable if we did not make these blessings turn to account.

Addison, Frecholder.
Such a favour could only render them more obdurate, and more inexcusable: it would inebriate their guilt.

Atterbury.
If learning be not encouraged under your administration, you are the most inexcusable person alive.
Swift.

A fallen woman is the more inexcusable, as, from the cradle, the sex is warned against the delusions of men.
Richardson, Clarissa.

INEXCUSABLENESS. n. s. [from inexcusable.] Enormity beyond forgiveness or palliation.

Their inexcusableness is stated upon the supposition of this very thing, that they knew God, but for all that did not glorify him as God.

South, Sermon. ii. 263.
INEXCUSABLY.† adv. [from inexcusable.] To a degree of guilt or folly beyond excuse.

Behold here wherein Eve, and after her Adam, did fail inexcusably!

Harmer, Tr. of Beza's Sermon. (1587,) p. 35.
It will inexcusably condemn some men, who having received excellent endowments, yet have frustrated the intention.
Brown.

INEXHA'LEABLE. adj. [in and exhale.] That cannot evaporate.

A new-laid egg, will not so easily be boiled hard, because it contains a great stock of humid parts, which must be evaporated before the heat can bring the inexhalable parts into consistence.

Brown, Vulg. Err.
INEXHA'USTED.† adj. [in and exhausted.] Unemptied; not possible to be emptied.

So wert thou born into a tuneful strain,
An early, rich, and inexhausted vein.
Dryden.

Let us consider the ample provision of waters, those inexhausted treasures of the ocean.

Bentley, Sermon. viii.
INEXHAUSTIBLE. adj. [in and exhaustible.] Not to be drawn all away; not to be spent.

Reflect on the variety of combinations which may be made with number, whose stock is inexhaustible, and truly infinite.
Locke.

The stock that the mind has in its power, by varying the idea of space, is perfectly inexhaustible, and so it can multiply figures in infinitum. Locke.

INEXHAUSTIBLENESS.* n. s. The state or quality of being inexhaustible. Scott.

INEXHAUSTIVE.* adj. [in and exhaust.] Not to be all drawn off; inexhaustible.

Whose power,
To life approaching, may perfume my lays
With that fine oil, those aromatic gales,
That inexhaustive flow continual round.

Thomson, Spring.

INEXI'STENT. adj. [in and existent.] 1. Not having being; not to be found in nature.

To express complexed significations they took a liberty to compound and piece together creatures of allowable forms into mixtures inexistent.

Brown, Vulg. Err.
2. Existing in something else. This use is rare.

We doubt whether these heterogeneities be much as inexistent in the concrete, whence they are obtained.
Boyle.

INEXI'STENCE.† n. s. [in and existence.] 1. Want of being; want of existence.

He calls up the heroes of former ages from a state of inexistence to adorn and diversify his poem.

Broomo on the Odyssey.
2. State of existing; inherence. So used by South, but improperly.

Concerning these gifts, we must observe also, that there was no small difference amongst them, as to the manner of their inexistence in the persons who had them.
South, Sermon. iii. 414.

INEXORAB'ILITY.* n. s. [from inexorable.] The state or quality of being inexorable.

Your father's incorability not only grieves but amazes me. Johnson, Letter in Boswell's Life of him.
INEXORABLE. adj. [inexorable, Fr. inexorabilis, Lat.] Not to be entreated; not to be moved by entreaty.

You are more inhuman, more inexorable,
 Oh ten times more, than tigers of Hyrcania!

Shakespeare.

Inexorable dog. Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice.

The scourge

Inexorable calls to penance. Milton, P. L.

The guests invited came,

And with the rest th' inexorable dame. Dryden.

Th' inexorable gods were barr'd,

And nought was seen, and nought was heard,

But dreadful gleams, shrieks of woe.

Pope, St. Cecilia.

We can be deaf to the words of so sweet a charmer, and inexorable to all his invitations.

Rogers.

INEXORABLENESS. * n. s. [from inexorable.]

The state of being inexorable.

The former aversion, and inexorableness, is taken away. Chillingworth, Serm. on Rom. viii. 34.

INEXORABLY. * adv. [from inexorable.]

So as not to be moved by entreaty.

Phocion the good, in public life severe,

To virtue still inexorably firm. Thomson, Winter.

INEXPECTATION. * n. s. [in and expectation.]

State of having no expectation, either with hope or fear; want of forethought.

It is therefore fit, we take heed of such things as are like multiplying glasses, and show fears either more numerous or bigger far, than they are. Such are inexpectation, the sudden blow astonishes; but, foreseen, is either warded or avoided. A surprise alone is torture. Feltham, Res. ii. 5.

INEXPECTED. * adj. [inexpectatus, Lat.]

Not expected.

If the suddenness of an inexpected evil have surprised his thoughts, and infected his cheeks with paleness: he had no sooner digested it in his conceit, than he gathers up himself, and insults over mischief. Bp. Hall, Charact. p. 34.

Our greatest ills we least mistrust, my lord,
 And inexpected harms do hurt us most.

Kyd, Span. Trag.

INEXPECTEDLY. * adv. [from inexpected.]

Without expectation.

Such marvellous light opened itself inexpectedly to us. Bp. Hall, Specialties of his Life.

INEXPE'DIENCE. } n. s. [in and expe-

INEXPE'DIENCY. } diency.] Want of fitness; want of propriety; unsuitableness to time or place; inconvenience.

It concerneth superiors to look well to the expediency and inexpediency of what they enjoin in indifferent things. Sanderson.

INEXPE'DIENT. adj. [in and expedient.]

Inconvenient; unfit; improper; unsuitable to time or place.

It is not inexpedient they should be known to come from a person altogether a stranger to chymical affairs. Boyle.

We should be prepared not only with patience to bear, but to receive with thankfulness a repulse, if God should see them to be inexpedient.

Smalbridge.

* INEXPERIENCE. n. s. [inexperience,

Fr. in and experience.] Want of experimental knowledge; want of experience.

Thy words at random

Argue thine inexperience. Milton, P. L.

Prejudice and self-sufficiency naturally proceed from inexperience of the world, and ignorance of mankind. Addison.

INEXPERIENCED. † adj. [inexpertus, Lat.] Not experienced.

They fright all inexperienced young men, from any tolerable compliance in matters of religion.

More, Conf. Cobb. (1653,) p. 227.

INEXPERT. † adj. [inexpertus, Lat. in and expert.] Unskilful; unskilled.

It must be considered, — whether he be learned or ignorant; whether skilful in languages and arts, or whether inexpert in both.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

The race elect

Safe towards Canaan from the shore advance

Through the wild desert, not the readiest way;

Lest, entering on the Canaanite alarm'd,

War terrify them inexpert. Milton, P. L.

In letters and in laws

Not inexpert. Prior.

INEXPIABLE. † adj. [inexpiable, Fr. inexpiable, Latin.]

1. Not to be atoned.

A papist writes it; and then it is well enough. For some of our writers to have said but as much, or scarce so much as these, in this matter and manner, in them is an inexpiable transgression.

Dr. Favour, Antiq. Tr. over Nov. (1619,) p. 223.

It is such an inexpiable crime in poets, to tax vices generally. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

2. Not to be mollified by atonement.

Love seeks to have love:

My love how could'st thou hope, who took'st the way

To raise in me inexpiable hate? Milton, S. A.

INEXPIABLY. adv. [from inexpiable.] To a degree beyond atonement.

Excursions are inexpiably bad,

And 'tis much safer to leave out than add.

Roscommon.

INEXPLAINABLE. * adj. [in and explainable.] That cannot be explained.

Cockeram.

INEXPLEABLY. adv. [in and expleo, Lat.]

Insatiably. A word not in use.

INEXPLICABLE. adj. [inexplicable, Fr. in and explico, Lat.] Incapable of being explained; not to be made intelligible;

not to be disentangled.

What could such apprehensions breed, but, as their nature is, inexplicable passions of mind, desires abhorring what they embrace, and embracing what they abhor?

Hooker.

To me at least this seems inexplicable, if light be nothing else than pression or motion propagated through either.

Newton.

None eludes sagacious reason more, Than this obscure inexplicable power. Blackmore.

INEXPLICABLENESS. * n. s. [from inexplicable.] The state or quality of being inexplicable.

Ash.

INEXPLICABLY. † adv. [from inexplicable.]

In a manner not to be explained.

The power of godliness is denied by wicked men. How then? What is their case? Surely inexplicably, unconceivably fearful.

Bp. Hall, The Hypocrite, Works, ii. 302.

INEXPLORABLE. * adj. [inexploratus, Lat.]

Not to be discovered.

It was the king's own immovable and inexplorable doom.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. Rich. III. (1646,) p. 82.

INEXPRESSIBLE. adj. [in and express.]

Not to be told; not to be uttered; unutterable.

Thus when in orbs

Of circuit inexpressible they stood,

Orb within orb. Milton, P. L.

Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of human nature, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs, and groan his pains, to sing his joys, and do and feel every thing by sympathy and secret inexpressible communications. South.

The true God had no certain name given to him; for Father, and God, and Creator, are but titles arising from his works; and God is not a name, but a notion ingrafted in human nature of an inexpressible being. Stillingfleet.

There is an inimitable grace in Virgil's words; and in them principally consists that beauty, which gives so inexpressible a pleasure to him who best understands their force: this diction of his is never to be copied. Dryden.

INEXPRESSIBLY. adv. [from inexpressible.]

To a degree or in a manner not to be uttered; unutterably.

God will protect and reward all his faithful servants in a manner and measure inexpressibly abundant. Hammond.

He began to play upon it: the sound was exceeding sweet, and wrought into a variety of tunes that were inexpressibly melodious. Addison, Spect.

INEXPRESSIVE. * adj. [See UNEXPRES-

SIVE.] Ineffable. Dr. Johnson has been publicly blamed for not inserting inexpressive, in his Dictionary, because "Milton makes such fine use of it in his Lycidas." The word in Lycidas is inexpressive; so it is in the same poet's Ode on the Nativity, from which Dr. Johnson has inaccurately cited it, as if it were inexpressive. Nor is it inexpressive in Shakespeare, whose poetry is also miscited. Inexpressive has since been found in the poetry of Akenside by one of those gentlemen who have made additions to Johnson:

The inexpressive strain

Diffuses its enchantment.

Pleasures of Imag. B. i. 124.

INEXPUGNABLE. † adj. [inexpugnabile, Fr.; inexpugnabilis, Latin.] Impregnable; not to be taken by assault; not to be subdued.

He may have fortified himself in some inexpugnabile castle or fortress.

Shelton, Tr. of Don Quix. iv. 19.

Fortified, as it were, with a trench and pallisado, and with inexpugnabile endowments.

Donne, Hist. of the Septuagint, p. 95.

Philip, king of Macedon, thought of cities. There is none so inexpugnabile, but an ass laden with gold may enter them.

Howell, Lett. (dat. 1637,) ii. 4.

There is one objection, — which the Smeectymians press thrice, as being inexpugnabile.

Bp. Morton, Episcopacy Assert. p. 88.

This castle — was accounted inexpugnabile.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 89.

INEXTINCT. * adj. [inextinctus, Lat.]

Not quenched; not put out. Cockeram.

INEXTINGUISHABLE. † adj. [inextinguible,

Fr.; in and extinguo, Lat.] Our own word was formerly, like the French, inextinguible. "Perpetual motion, inextinguible lights." Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 281.] Unquenchable.

Pillars, statues, and other memorials, are a sort of shadow of an endless life, and show an inextinguishable desire which all men have of it.

Grew.

INEXTIRPABLE. * adj. [in and extirpare.]

Not to be rooted out. Cockeram.

INE'XTRICABLE. adj. [inextricable, Fr.; inextricabilis, Lat.] Not to be disentangled; not to be cleared; not to be set free from obscurity or perplexity.

He that should tye inextricable knots, only to baffle the industry of those that should attempt to unloose them, would be thought not to have served his generation. Decay of Chr. Piety.

Stopt by awful heights, and gulphs immense
Of wisdom, and of vast omnipotence,
She trembling stands, and does in wonder gaze,
Lost in the wild inextricable maze. Blackmore.
Men are led into inextricable mazes by setting up themselves as judges of the world. Sherlock.

INE'XTRICABLENESS.* n. s. [from inextricable.] The state or quality of being inextricable.

There is no perplexity in thee, my God, no inextricableness in thee.

Domne, Devot. (1625,) p. 122.

INE'XTRICABLY. adv. [from inextricable.] To a degree of perplexity not to be disentangled.

The mechanical atheist, though you grant him his laws of mechanism, is nevertheless inextricably puzzled and baffled with the first formation of animals. Bentley.

In vain they strive; the intangling snares deny,
Inextricably firm, the power to fly. Pope, Odys.

INEXU'PERABLE.* adj. [inexuperabilis, Lat.] Not to be passed over; not superable; not to be conquered.

Cockeram.

To INE'YE. v. n. [in and eye.] To inculcate; to propagate trees by the insinuation of a bud into a foreign stock.

Let sage experience teach thee all the arts
Of grafting and ineying. Philips.

INFA'BRICATED.* adj. [infabricatus, Lat.] Unwrought. Cockeram.

INFALLIB'LITY.† } n. s. [infallibilit , INFALLIBLENESS. } Fr.; from infallibil- errour. } errour.] Inerrability; exemption from errour.

The veracity and infallibleness of the party that affirms it. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 267.

Infallibility is the highest perfection of the knowing faculty, and consequently the firmest degree of assent. Tillotson.

INFALLIBLE. adj. [infallible, Fr.; in and fallible.] Privilege from errour; incapable of mistake; not to be misled or deceived; certain. Used both of persons and things.

Every cause admitteth not such infallible evidence of proof, as leaveth no possibility of doubt or scruple behind it. Hooker.

Believe my words;
For they are certain and infallible.

The success is certain and infallible, and none ever yet miscarried in the attempt. South.

INFALLIBLY. adv. [from infallible.]

1. Without danger from deceit; with security from errour.

We cannot be as God infallibly knowing good and evil. Snatridge, Serm.

2. Certainly.

Our blessed Lord has distinctly opened the scene of futurity to us, and directed us to such a conduct as will infallibly render us happy in it. Rogers.

To INFA'ME. v. a. [infamer, Fr.; infamo, Lat.] To represent to disadvantage; to defame; to censure publicly; to make infamous; to brand. To defame is now used.

Livia is infamed for the poisoning of her husband. Bacon.

Hitherto obscur'd, infam'd,
And thy fair fruit let hang, as to no end
Created. Milton, P. L.

INFAMOUS.† adj. [infam , infamant, Fr.; infamis, Lat.] It had the accent formerly on the second syllable.]

1. Publicly branded with guilt; openly censured; of bad report.

Many there she found, which sore accus'd
His falsehood, and with foul infamous blot
His cruel deeds and wicked wyles did spot. Spenser, F. Q. iii. vi. 13.

Those that be near, and those that be far from thee, shall mock thee which art infamous.

These are as some infamous bawd or whore
Should praise a matron; what could hurt her more? B. Jonson.

After-times will dispute it, whether Hotham were more infamous at Hull or at Tower-hill. King Charles.

Persons infamous, or branded in any public court of judicature, are forbidden to be advocates. Ayliffe.

2. With for.

The fleet
Glides by the Sirens' cliffs, a shelfy coast,
Long infamous for ships and navies lost. Dryden,  neid.

3. Dismal. A Latinism.

And now he haunts the infamous woods and downs. P. Fletcher, Pisc. Ecl. i. 14.
Infamous hills, and sandy perilous wilds. Milton, Comus.

INFAMOUSLY.† adv. [from infamous.]

1. With open reproach; with public notoriety of reproach.

He that wrongs me, better I proclaim,
He never had assay'd to touch my fame:
For he shall weep, and walk with every tongue
Throughout the city, infamously sung. B. Jonson, Poetaster.

2. Shamefully; scandalously.

That poem was infamously bad. Dryd. Dufresn.

INFAMOUSNESS. } n. s. [infamie, Fr.;
INFAMY. } infamia, Lat.] Public reproach; notoriety of bad character.

Ye are taken up in the lips of talkers, and are the infamy of the people. Ezek. xxxvi. 3.
The noble isle doth want her proper limbs,
Her face defac'd with scars of infamy. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

INFANCY. n. s. [infantia, Lat.]

1. The first part of life. Usually extended by naturalists to seven years.

Dare we affirm it was ever his meaning, that unto their salvation, who even from their tender infancy never knew any other faith or religion than only Christian, no kind of teaching can be available, saving that which was so needful for the first universal conversion of Gentiles hating Christianity? Hooker.

Pirithous came to attend
This worthy Theseus, his familiar friend;
Their love in early infancy began,
And rose as childhood ripen'd into man. Dryden.
The insensible impressions on our tender infancies have very important and lasting consequences. Locke.

2. Civil infancy, extended by the English law to one-and-twenty years.

3. First age of any thing; beginning; original; commencement.

In Spain, our springs, like old men's children, be Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy. Dryden.

The difference between the riches of Roman citizens in the infancy and in the grandeur of Rome, will appear by comparing the first valuation of estates with the estates afterwards possessed. Arbutnot on Coins.

INFA'NDOUS.* adj. [infandus, Lat.] So abominable as not to be expressed.

This infandous custom of swearing, I observe, reigns in England lately more than any where else; though a German, in highest puff of passions, swears a hundred thousand sacraments. Hovell, Lett. (dat. 1628,) i. v. 11.

INFA'NGTHEF, or hing fangtheft, or infang-theof, is compounded of three Saxon words: the preposition, in, fang, or fong, to take or catch, and thef. It signifies a privilege or liberty granted unto lords of certain manors to judge any thief taken within their fee. Cowel.

INFANT.† n. s. [enfant, Fr.; infans, Lat.] "The common word infant, Latin infans, comes not from in and fari, one who cannot speak, as our herd of lexicographers say; but from fu, to nourish, to feed, whence fari itself is derived.—Lye mentions fauntekin as an old English word, signifying an infant or little boy, which he rightly derives from the Icelandick fante, a young man; whence the Italian fante, a page or servant, and the French fantassin, a soldier who serves on foot, and of those whom we call infantry." Callander, Observ. on Two Anc. Scott. Poems, p. 65. See also INFANTRY.

1. A child from the birth to the end of the seventh year.

It being a part of their virtuous education, serveth greatly both to nourish in them the fear of God, and to put us in continual remembrance of that powerful grace, which openeth the mouths of infants to sound his praise. Hooker.

There shall be no more than an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days. Isa. lxx. 20.

Young mothers wildly stare, with fear possess'd,
And strain their helpless infants to their breast. Dryden,  n.

2. [In law.] A young person to the age of one-and-twenty.

The noble infant [Rinaldo] stood a space
Confused, speechless. Fairfax, Tass. xvi. 34.

INFANT. adj. Not mature; in a state of initial imperfection.

Within the infant rind of this small flower
Poison hath residence, and medicine power. Shakspeare.

First the shrill sound of a small rural pipe,
Was entertainment for the infant stage. Roscommon.

In their tender nonage, while they spread
Their springing leaves and lift their infant head, Indulge their childhood. Dryden, Virg.

INFANTA.† n. s. [Spanish.] A princess descended from the royal blood of Spain.

What new-come power can so
Transplant a land, and all the people? O
Royal infanta, but a child in age,
Yet ev'n already as a matron sage,
The virtue of your name, power of your blood,
Great Catharina, (now 'tis understood),
Wrought this, that from that great house descended, which
New kingdoms daily, and new worlds enrich.

Fanshawe, Tr. of Pastor Fido, Prol.

INFANTICIDE.† n. s. [infanticide, Fr.; infanticidium, Lat.]

1. The slaughter of the infants by Herod.
2. The act of slaughtering infants.

The madness did not cease to rage till it terminated in infanticide, or in offering up to their grim idols (instead of themselves) the children of their bowels.
Warburton, Div. Legat. ix. 2.

3. A slayer of infants.

Christians accounted those to be infanticides — who did but only expose their own infants.

Dr. Potter, Christophalgia, (1680,) p. 52.

INFANTILE. adj. [infantilis, Lat.] Pertaining to an infant.

The fly lies all the Winter in these balls in its infantile state, and comes not to its maturity till the following Spring.
Desham.

INFANTINE.* adj. [infantin, Fr. from infant.] Childish; young; tender. This word is old in our language, though it has escaped the notice of Dr. Johnson, and even of Ash. Cotgrave and Sherwood both give it.

The sole comfort of his declining years, almost in infantine imbecility.

Burke, Speech on the Marriage Act.

It might have been hazardous to expose its tender and infantine form to barbarous critics.

Porson, Lett. to Travis, p. 117.

INFANTLIKE.* adj. [infant and like.] Like an infant's.

Your abilities are too infantlike for doing much alone.

Harvey.

INFASHIONABLE.* adj. [in and fashionable.] Not fashionable.

His band

May be disorder'd, and transform'd from lace
To cutwork; his rich clothes be discomplextion'd
With blood, beside the infashionable slashes.

Beaum. and Fl. The Coronation.

INFATIGABLE.* adj. [infatigabilis, Lat.] not to be wearied. This is the word of elder times. Bullokar, Cockeram, and Sherwood give it, in their vocabularies. We now say indefatigable.

TO INFATUATE.† v. a. [infatuo, from in and fatuus, Latin; infatuer, French.] To strike with folly; to deprive of understanding.

He hath many other baits to inveigle and infatuate them farther yet.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 657.

He those, who others rule,
Infatuates, and makes the judge a fool.

Sandys, Job, p. 20.

It is not so much of a soporiferous quality to procure sleep, as to stupefy and infatuate the intellect.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 837.

The judgement of God will be very visible in infatuating a people, as ripe and prepared for destruction, into folly and madness, making the weak to contribute to the designs of the wicked; and suffering even those, out of a conscience of their guilt, to grow more wicked.
Clarendon.

It is the reforming of the vices and sottishness that had long overspread the infatuated, gentle world; a prime branch of that design of Christ's sending his disciples.
Hammond.

The people are so universally infatuated with the notion, that if a cow falls sick, it is ten to one but an old woman is clapt up in prison for it.

Addison on Italy.

INFATUATE.* part. adj. [from the verb.] Stupified.

May hypocrites,
That slyly speak one thing, another think,
Drink on unwarn'd; till, by enchanting cups
Infatuate, they their wily thoughts disclose.

Philips.

The carriage of our atheists or deists is amazing: no dotage so infatuate, no phrenzy so extravagant, as theirs.
Bentley.

INFATUATION. n. s. [from infatuate.] The act of striking with folly; deprivation of reason.

Where men give themselves over to the defence of wicked interests and false propositions, it is just with God to smite the greatest abilities with the greatest infatuations.
South.

INFATUING. n. s. [from infatuatus, Lat.] The act of making unlucky. An odd and inelephant word.

As the king did in some part remove the envy from himself, so he did not observe that he did withal bring a kind of malediction and infatuating upon the marriage, as an ill prognostick.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

INFEEASIBLE. adj. [in and feasible.] Impracticable; not to be done.

This is so difficult and infeasible, that it may well drive modesty to despair of science.
Glanville.

INFEEASIBLENESS.* n. s. [from infeasible.] Impracticability.

He began the work; and, being disabused in point of the infeasibleness, pursued his task, and perfected it.

W. Mountagu, Dev. Ess. P. ii. (1654,) p. 117.

TO INFECT. v. a. [infector, Fr. infectus, Lat.]

1. To act upon by contagion; to affect with communicated qualities; to hurt by contagion; to taint; to poison; to pollute.

One of those fantastical mind infected people, that children and musicians call lovers.
Sidney.

Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine.
Shakspeare.

The nature of bad news infects the teller.
Shakspeare.

Every day

It would infect his speech, that if the king
Should without issue die, he'd carry it so
To make the sceptre his. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Infected minds

To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets.
Shakspeare.

She speaks poniards, and every word stabs; if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her; she would infect to the north star.
Shakspeare.

I am return'd your soldier;
No more infected with my country's love,
Than when I parted hence. Shakspeare, Coriol.

The love tale

Infected Sion's daughters with like heat.

Milton, P. L.

2. To fill with something hurtfully contagious.

Infected be the air whereon they ride,
And damn'd all those that trust them!

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

INFECT.* part. adj. [from the verb.] Infected; polluted.

Infect with synne. By. Fisher, Ps. p. 11.

Are you not she,

For whose infect persuasions, I could scarce
Kneel out my prayers?

Tournour, Revenger's Tragedy.

A blinded eye, a closed ear,
A hand with hbrine infect.

Harrington, Br. View of the Ch. p. 54.

INFECTIOUS. n. s. [infection, Fr. infectio, Lat.] Contagion; mischief by communication; taint; poison.

Infection is that manner of communicating a disease by some effluvia, or particles which fly off from distempered bodies, and mixing with the juices of others, occasion the same disorders as in the bodies they came from. Quincy.

What a strange infection

Is fall'n into thy ear! Shakspeare, Cymb.

The blessed gods

Purge all infections from our air, whilst you Do climate here. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Vouchsafe, diffus'd infection of a man,

For these known evils but to give me leave,
By circumstance, to curse thy cursed self.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Hence,

Lest that the infection of his fortune take Like hold on thee. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The transmission or emission of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies, as in odours and infections, is, of all the rest, the most corporeal; but withal there be a number of those emissions, both wholesome and unwholesome, that give no smell at all.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

INFECTIOUS. adj. [from infect.] Contagious; influencing by communicated qualities.

The most infectious pestilence upon thee!

Shakspeare.

In a house,

Where the infectious pestilence did reign. Shakspeare.
Some known diseases are infectious, and others are not: those that are infectious are such as are chiefly in the spirits, and not so much in the humours, and therefore pass easily from body to body; such as pestilences and lippitudes. Bacon.

Smells may have as much power to do good as to do harm, and contribute to health as well as to diseases; which is too much felt by experience in all that are infectious, and by the operations of some poisons, that are received only by the smell.

Temple.

INFECTIOUSLY. adv. [from infectious.] Contagiously.

The will dotes, that is inclinable

To what infectiously itself affects. Shakspeare.

INFECTIOUSNESS. n. s. [from infectious.] The quality of being infectious; contagiousness.

INFECTIVE. † adj. [from infect.] Having the quality of acting by contagion.

True love, well considered, hath an infective power. Sidney.

There is no stink in the world so infective as they are.

Outred, Tr. of Cope on Proverbs, (1580.) fol. 190. b. Command her, you grave beldam, that know better

My deadly resolutions; since I drew them

From the infective fountain of your own.

Beaum. and Fl. Bloody Brother.

INFECUND. n. s. [infecundus, Lat.] Unfruitful; infertile.

How safe and agreeable a conservatory the earth is to vegetables, is manifest from their rotting, drying, or being rendered infecund in the waters, or the air; but in the earth their vigour is long preserved. Derham, Physico-Theol.

INFECUNDITY. † n. s. [infecunditas, Lat.]

Want of fertility; barrenness. Bullock.

To INFEEBLE. * See To ENFEEBLE.

Huloet.

INFELICITY. n. s. [infelicité, Fr. infelicitas, Lat.] Unhappiness; misery; calamity.

Whatever is the ignorance and infelicity of the present state, we were made wise and happy.

Glanville.

Here is our great infelicity, that, when single words signify complex ideas, one word can never distinctly manifest all the parts of a complex idea.

Watts.

INFEOADATION. * See INFEOADATION.

To INFEOFF. * See To ENFEOFF.

To INFERR. † v. a. [inferer, Fr. infero, Lat.]

1. To bring on; to induce.

Serena — fled away, afraid

Of villainy to be to her infer'd.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 32.

Vomits infer some small detriment to the lungs.

Harvey.

2. To infer is nothing but, by virtue of one proposition laid down as true, to draw in another as true, i. e. to see or suppose such a connection of the two ideas of the inferred proposition. Locke.

Yet what thou can'st attain, which best may serve

To glorify the Maker, and infer

Thee also happier, shall not be with-held

Great

Or bright, infers not excellence: the earth Though in comparison of heaven so small, Nor glistering, may of solid good contain More plenty than the sun, that barren shines.

Milton, P. L.

One would wonder how, from so differing premises, they should all infer the same conclusion.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

They have more opportunities than other men have of purchasing publick esteem, by deserving well of mankind; and such opportunities always infer obligations. Atterbury.

3. To offer; to produce. Not in use.

Full well hath Clifford play'd the orator,

Infering arguments of mighty force.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

INFERRABLE. * adj. [from infer.] Deducible from premised grounds. This is the modern way of writing and pronouncing what was formerly inferible or rather inferrible, with the accent on the second syllable. See INFERRIBLE.

A sufficient argument — is inferable from these premises. Burke.

INFERENCE. n. s. [inference, Fr. from infer.]

Conclusion drawn from previous arguments.

Though it may chance to be right in the conclusion, it is yet unjust and mistaken in the method of inference. Glanville.

These inferences or conclusions are the effects of reasoning, and the three propositions, taken all together, are called syllogism or argument. Watts.

INFERRIBLE. † adj. [from infer.] It should be rather inferrible, as Sir T. Brown certainly wrote it; and as Dr. Johnson himself writes referrible; though in the first of the following examples he has given it inferible.] Deducible from premised grounds.

As simple mistakes commonly beget fallacies, so men from fallacious foundations, and misapprehended mediums, erect conclusions no way inferible from their premises. Brown.

That Sodom could not be far from Segor, which was seated under the mountains near the side of the lake, seems inferrible from the sudden arrival of Lot, who, coming from Sodom at day-break, attained to Segor at sun-rising.

Brown, Miscell. p. 164.

INFERRIORITY. n. s. [inferiorité, Fr. from inferiour.] Lower state of dignity or value.

The language, though not of equal dignity, yet as near approaching to it as our modern barbarism will allow; and therefore we are to rest contented with that only inferiority which is not possibly to be remedied. Dryden.

INFERRIOUR. adj. [inferior, Lat. inferieur, Fr.]

1. Lower in place.

2. Lower in station or rank of life; correlative to superiour.

Render me more equal, or perhaps

Superiour, for inferiour who is free? Milton, P. L.

3. Lower in value or excellency.

The love of liberty with life is giv'n,

And life itself t' inferiour gift of heav'n. Dryden.

I have added some original papers of my own, which, whether they are equal or inferiour to my other poems, an author is the most improper judge of.

Dryden.

4. Subordinate.

General and fundamental truths in philosophy, religion, and human life, conduct our thoughts into a thousand inferiour and particular propositions. Watts.

INFERRIOUR. n. s. [from the adjective.]

One in a lower rank or station than another.

A great person gets more by obliging his inferiour than by disdainning him. South.

INFERNAL. † adj. [infernal, Fr. infernus, Lat.] Hellish; tartarean; detestable.

His gigantic limbs, with large embrace,

Infolds nine acres of infernal space, Dryden, Æn.

The instruments of abettors in such infernal dealings. Addison, Spect. No. 243.

INFERNAL Stone. n. s.

Infernal stone, or the lunar caustick, is prepared from an evaporated solution of silver, or from crystals of silver. It is a very powerful caustick, eating away the flesh and even the bones to which it is applied. Hill, Mat. Med.

INFERNALLY. * adv. [from infernal.] In a detestable and infernal way.

All this I perceive is infernally false.

Hacket's Life of Abp. Williams, (1693.) p. 211.

INFERTILE. adj. [infertile, Fr. in and fertile.] Unfruitful; not productive; wanting fecundity; infecund.

Ignorance being of itself, like stiff clay, an infertile soil, when pride comes to scorch and harden it, it grows perfectly impenetrable.

Gov. of the Tongue.

INFERTILITY. n. s. [infertilité, Fr. from infertile.] Unfruitfulness; want of fertility.

The same distemperature of the air that occasioned the plague, occasioned the infertility or noxiousness of the soil, whereby the fruits of the earth became either very small, or very unwholesome. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

To INFEST. v. a. [infester, Fr. infesto, Lat.] To harass; to disturb; to plague.

Unto my feeble breast

Come gently; but not that mighty rage Wherever the martial troops thou dost infest, And hearts of greatest heroes dost enrage. Spenser.

They ceased not, in the mean while, to strengthen that part which in heart they favoured, and to infest by all means, under colour of other quarrels, their greatest adversaries in this cause.

Hooker.

Although they were a people infested, and mightily hated of all others, yet was there nothing of force to work the ruin of their state, till the time beforementioned was expired.

Hooker.

They were no mean, distressed, calamitous persons that fled to him for refuge; but of so great quality, as it was apparent that they came not thither to protect their own fortune, but to infest and invade his. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Envy, avarice, superstition, love, with the like cares and passions infest human life.

Addison, Spect.

No disease infests mankind more terrible in its symptoms and effects. Arbutnot on Diet.

INFEST.* adj. [infestus, Latin.] Mischievous; hurtful; dangerous. Obsolete.

Bp. Horne, Letters on Infidelity, L. 15.

INFIDELITY. n. s. [infidelité, Fr. infidelitas, Lat.]

1. Want of faith.

The consideration of the divine omnipotence and infinite wisdom, and our own ignorance, are great instruments of silencing the murmurs of infidelity. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

2. Disbelief of Christianity.

One would fancy that infidels would be exempt from that single fault, which seems to grow out of the imprudent fervours of religion; but so it is, that infidelity is propagated with as much fierceness and contention, as if the safety of mankind depended upon it. Addison, Spect.

3. Treachery; deceit; breach of contract or trust.

The infidelities on the one part between the two sexes, and the caprices on the other, the vanities and vexations attending even the most refined delights that make up this business of life, render it silly and uncomfortable. Spectator.

INFINITE. adj. [infini, French, infinitus, Lat.]

1. Unbounded; boundless; unlimited; immense; having no boundaries or limits to its nature.

Impossible it is, that God should withdraw his presence from any thing because the very substance of God is infinite. Hooker.

What's time, when on eternity we think?

A thousand ages in that sea must sink:
Time's nothing but a word; a million
Is full as far from infinite as one. Denham.

Thou sov'reign pow'r, whose secret will con-trouls

The inward bent and motion of our souls!

Why hast thou plac'd such infinite degrees
Between the cause and cure of my disease? Prior.

When we would think of infinite space or duration, we at first make some very large idea; as perhaps of millions of ages or miles, which possibly we multiply several times. Locke.

Even an angel's comprehensive thought
Cannot extend as far as thou hast wrought:
Our vast conceptions are by swelling brought,
Swallow'd and lost in infinite, to nought. Dennis.

The cunning of his flattery, the readiness of his tears, the infiniteness of his vows, were but among the weakest threads of his net. Sidney.

Let us always bear about us such impressions of reverence, and fear of God, that we may humble ourselves before his Almightyness, and express that infinite distance between his infiniteness and our weaknesses. Bp. Taylor.

INFINITE-SIMAL.† adj. [from infinite.] Infinitely divided.

The notion or idea of an infinitesimal quantity, as it is an object simply apprehended by the mind, hath been already considered.

Bp. Berkeley, Analyst. § 12.

INFINITIVE.† adj. [infinitiv, Fr. infinitivus, Lat.] In grammar, the infinitive affirms, or intimates the intention of affirming, which is one use of the indicative; but then it does not do it absolutely.

Clarke, Lat. Grammar.

The mode is the manner of representing the being, action, or passion. When it is simply declared, or a question is asked concerning it, it is called the indicative mode. — When it is barely expressed, without any limitation of person or number, it is called the infinitive.

Louth, Introduct. Eng. Grammar.

INFINITUDE. n. s. [from infinite.]

1. Infinity; immensity.

Confusion heard his voice, and wild uproar
Stood rul'd, stood vast infinitude confin'd.

Milton, P. L.

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally incompatible to continued or successive motion, or continued quantity, and depends upon the impossibility of the very nature of things successive or extensive with infinitude; yet that impossibility is more conspicuous in discrete quantity, that ariseth from parts actually distinguished. Hale.

2. Boundless number.

We see all the good sense of the age cut out, and minced into almost an infinitude of distinctions. Addison, Spect.

INFINITY. n. s. [infinité, French, infinitas, Lat.]

1. Immensity; boundlessness; unlimited qualities.

There cannot be more infinities than one; for one of them would limit the other. Raleigh, Hist.

The better, the more desirable; that therefore must be desirable, wherein there is infinity of goodness; so that if any thing desirable may be infinite, that must needs be the highest of all things that are desired: no good is infinite but only God, therefore he is our felicity and bliss.

Hooker.

2. Endless number. An hyperbolical use of the word.

Homer has conceiv'd faults under an infinity of admirable beauties. Broom, Notes on the Odyssey.

The liver, being swelled, compresseth the stomach, stops the circulation of the juices, and produceth an infinity of bad symptoms.

Incomparable lady, your commandment doth not only give me the will, but the power to obey you; such influence hath your excellency. Sidney.

God hath his influence into the very essence of all things, without which influence of Deity supporting them, their utter annihilation could not chuse but follow. Hooker.

A wise man shall over-rule his stars, and have a greater influence upon his own content than all the constellations and planets of the firmament.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

Religion hath so great an influence upon the felicity of men, that it ought to be upheld, not only out of a dread of the divine vengeance in another world, but out of regard to temporal prosperity. Tillotson.

Our inconsistency in the pursuit of schemes thoroughly digested, has a bad influence on our affairs. Addison.

So astonishing a scene would have present influence upon them, but not produce a lasting effect. Atterbury.

Where it ought to have greatest influence, this obvious indisputable truth is little regarded. Rogers.

TO INFLUENCE. † v. a. [from the noun. Addison has used the following expression: "To influence the reader with pity and compassion towards them." Spect. No. 357. Upon which bishop Hurd justly remarks, that it is hard and scarcely allowable. "When we use influence, as a verb," he says, "we use it absolutely; as, such considerations influenced him; that is, had an effect or influence upon him; without specifying the effect produced. He had expressed himself better, if he had said, to fill the reader's mind with; or, to engage the reader's pity." To act upon with directive or impulsive power; to modify to any purpose; to guide or lead to any end.

These experiments succeed after the same manner in vacuo as in the open air, and therefore are not influenced by the weight or pressure of the atmosphere. Newton, Opticks.

This standing revelation was attested in the most solemn and credible manner; and is sufficient to influence their faith and practice, if they attend. Atterbury.

All the restraint men are under is, by the violation of one law, broken through; and the principle which influenced their obedience has lost its efficacy on them. Rogers.

All alike inform'd

With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire.

Milton, P. L.

Let others better mold the running mass

Of metals, and inform the breathing brass;

And soften into flesh a marble face. Dryden, Æn.

As from chaos, huddled and deform'd,

The god struck fire, and lighted up the lamps

That beautify the sky; so he inform'd

This ill-shap'd body with a daring soul.

Dryden and Lee.

Breath informs this fleeting frame. Prior.

This sovereign arbitrary soul

Informs, and moves, and animates the whole. Blackmore.

While life informs these limbs, the king

reply'd,

Well to deserve be all my cares employ'd.

Pope, Odyssey.

2. To instruct; to supply with new knowledge; to acquaint. Before the thing communicated was anciently put with; now generally of; sometimes in, I know not how properly.

The drift is to inform their minds with some method of reducing the laws into their original causes. Hooker.

I have this present evening from my sister

Been well informed of them, and with cautions. Shakespeare.

Our ruin, by thee inform'd, I learn.

Milton, P. L.

The long speeches rather confounded than in- formed his understanding. Clarendon.

The difficulty arises not from what sense in- forms us of; but from wrong applying our notions. Digby.

Though I may not be able to inform men more than they know, yet I may give them the occasion to consider. Temple.

The ancients examined in what consists the beauty of good postures, as their works sufficiently inform us. Dryden.

He may be ignorant of these truths, who will never take the pains to employ his faculties to in- form himself of them. Locke.

INFRIGIDA'TION.* n. s. [from To infrigidate.] The act of rendering cold.

Madam de Bourignon — used to boast, that she had not only the spirit of continency in herself, but that she had also the power of communicating it to all who beheld her. This the scoffers of those days called the gift of infrigidation; and took occasion from it to rally her face, rather than admire her virtue. Tutler, No. 126.

To INFRINGE. v. a. [infringo, Lat.]

1. To violate; to break laws or contracts.

Those many had not dar'd to do that evil,
If the first man that did th' edict infringe,
Had answer'd for his deed.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.
Having infring'd the law, I wave my right
As king, and thus submit myself to fight.

Waller.

2. To destroy; to hinder.

Homilies, being plain and popular instructions,
do not infringe the efficacy, although but read.

Hooker.

Bright as the deathless gods and happy, she
From all that may infringe delight is free.

Waller.

INFRINGEMENT. n. s. [from infringe.]

Breach; violation.

The punishing of this infringement is proper to that jurisdiction against which the contempt is.

Clarendon.

INFRINGER. n. s. [from infringe.] A breaker; a violator.

lace, under a severe penalty to be inflicted on the infringers of the provincial constitution.

Ayliffe, Paeragon.

INFRUGAL* adj. [in and frugal.] Not frugal; extravagant; careless.

What should betray them to such infrugal experiences of time, I can give no account without making severe reflexions on their discretion.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conference, (1720), p. 21.

INFUMED* adj. [infumatus, from in and fumus, smoke, Lat.] Dried in smoke.

Cockeram.

Let them no more produce their enfum'd titles, nor the walls of their churches which time hath covered with ivy and moss: these are but feeble arguments to combat with a faith, which hath been from the beginning. We care not if our walls be new, so that our doctrine be ancient.

Hewitt, Serm. (1658), p. 177.

INFUNDIBULIFORM. n. s. [infundibulum and forma, Lat.] Of the shape of a funnel or tundish.

INFURIATE adj. [in and furia, Lat.] Enraged; raging.

To INFUSE* v. a. [infuser, Fr. infusus, Lat.]

1. To pour in; to instill.

Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith,
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That souls of animals infuse themselves
Into the trunks of men.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

My early mistress, now my ancient muse,
That strong Circean liquor cease t' infuse,
Wherewith thou didst intoxicate my youth.

Denham.

Why should he desire to have qualities infused into his son which himself never possessed?

Swift.

2. To pour into the mind; to inspire into.

For when God's hand had written in the hearts
Of our first parents all the rules of good,
So that their skill infus'd surpass'd all hearts
That ever were before, or since the flood.

Davies.

Sublime ideas, and apt words infuse;

The muse instruct my voice, and thou inspire the muse.

Roscommon.

He infus'd

Bad influence into the unwary breast.

Milton, P. L.

Infuse into their young breasts such a noble ardour as will make them renowned.

Milton on Education.

Meat must be with money bought;
She therefore, upon second thought,
Infus'd, yet as it were by stealth,
Some small regard for state and wealth.

Swift.

Infused with a fortitude from heav'n.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

Infuse his breast with magnanimity,
And make him, naked, foil a man at arms.

Shakespeare.

INFUSE* n. s. [from the verb.] Infusion. Not in use.

Vouchsafe to shed into my barren spright

Some little drop of thy celestial dew,

That may my rhimes with sweet infuse embrew.

Spenser, Hymns.

INFUSER* n. s. [from infuse.] He who pours into the mind.

The sole infuser of grace.

Dr. White, Serm. (1615), p. 33.

INFUSIBLE adj. [from infuse.]

1. Possible to be infused.

From whom the doctrines being infusible into all, it will be more necessary to forewarn all of the danger of them.

Hammond.

2. Incapable of dissolution; not fusible; not to be melted.

Vitrification is the last work of fire, and a fusion of the salt and earth, wherein the fusible salt draws the earth and infusible part into one continuum.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

INFUSION. n. s. [infusion, French, infusio, Lat.]

1. The act of pouring in; instillation.

Our language has received innumerable elegancies and improvements from that infusion of Hebraisms, which are derived to it out of the poetical passages in holy writ.

Addison.

2. The act of pouring into the mind; inspiration.

We participate Christ partly by imputation, as when those things which he did and suffered for us are imputed to us for righteousness; partly by habitual and real infusion, as when grace is inwardly bestowed on earth, and afterwards more fully both our souls and bodies in glory.

Hooker.

3. Suggestion; whisper.

They found it would be matter of great debate, and spend much time; during which they did not desire their company, nor to be troubled with their infusions.

Clarendon.

Here his folly and his wisdom are of his own growth, not the echo or infusion of other men.

Swift.

4. The act of steeping any thing in moisture without boiling.

Repeat the infusion of the body oftener. Bacon.

5. The liquor made by infusion.

To have the infusion strong, in those bodies which have finer spirits, repeat the infusion of the body oftener.

Bacon.

INFUSIVE adj. [from infuse.] Having the power of infusion, or being infused.

A word not authorised.

Still let my song a nobler note assume,

And sing the infusive force of Spring on man.

Thomson.

ING.* See INGE.

INGATE. n. s. [in and gate.] Entrance; passage in. An old word.

One noble person — stoppeth the ingate of all that evil which is looked far, and holdeth in all those which are at his beck.

Spenser on Ireland.

INGANNATION. n. s. [ingannare, Italian.] Cheat; fraud; deception; juggle; delusion; imposture; trick; slight. A word neither used nor necessary.

Whoever shall resign their reasons, either from the root of deceit in themselves, or inability to resist such trivial ingannations from others, are within the line of vulgarity.

Brown.

INGATHERING. n. s. [in and gathering.]

The act of getting in the harvest.

Thou shalt keep the feast of ingathering, when thou hast gathered in thy labours out of the field.

Ezod. xxiii. 16.

Milton, Areopagitica.

INGENDERER.* See ENGENDERER.

INGENERABLE. adj. [in and generate.] Not to be produced or brought into being.

Divers naturalists esteem the air, as well as other elements, to be ingenerable and incorruptible.

Boyle.

To INGENERATE.* v. a. [ingenero, Lat.] To beget; to produce.

A natural ceremony both to express and ingenerate, or encrease, this lowliness of disposition.

Mede, Disc. xli.

Those noble habits are ingenerated in the soul; as religion, gratitude, obedience, and tranquillity.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Virtues are ingenerated in our souls, by due submission of this will to the Divine Will.

Spiritual Conflict, (1652.) P. i. p. 51.

INGENERATE. } adj. [ingeneratus, Lat.]

INGENERATED. }

1. Inborn; innate; inbred.

Those virtues were rather feigned and affected things to serve his ambition, than true qualities ingenerate in his judgement or nature.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

In divers children their ingenerate and seminal powers lie deep, and are of slow disclosure.

Wotton on Education.

2. Unbegotten. Not commonly used.

Yet shall we demonstrate the same, from persons presumed as far from us in condition as time; that is, our first and ingenerated forefathers.

Brown.

INGENIOUS.† adj. [ingenieus, Fr. ingeniosus, Latin.] This word, in our old writers, is often improperly used for ingenuous. The complaint was made by Coles in his dictionary, 1677. But the confusion continued till the beginning of the last century. Mr. Reed says, that in the first edition of the Spectator, it occurs: "A parent who forces a child of a liberal and ingenious spirit." No. 437. So Hearne, in Leland's Itinerary, speaks of "Mr. Dodwell's pleasant and ingenious countenance." Pegge, Anonym. vi. 52.]

1. Witty; inventive; possessed of genius. 'Tis a per'ous boy, Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable.

Shakespeare.

Our ingenious friend Cowley not only has employed much eloquence to persuade that truth in his preface, but has in one of his poems given a noble example of it.

Boyle.

The more ingenious men are, the more they are apt to trouble themselves.

Temple.

2. Mental; intellectual. Not in use.

The king is mad: how stiff is my vile sense, That I stand up, and have ingenious feeling Of my huge sorrows! better I were distract.

Shakespeare.

INGENIOUSLY. adv. [from ingenious.] Wittily; subtly.

I will not pretend to judge by common fears, or the schemes of men too ingeniously poltick.

Temple.

INGENIOUSNESS. n. s. [from ingenious.]

Wittiness; subtilty; strength of genius. The greater appearance of ingeniousness there is in the practice I am disapproving, the more dangerous it is.

Boyle.

INGENITE. adj. [ingenitus, Lat.] Innate; inborn; native; ingenerate.

VOL. II.

Aristotle affirms the mind to be at first a mere rasa tabula; and that notions are not ingenite, and imprinted by the finger of Nature, but by the latter and more languid impressions of sense, being only the reports of observation, and the result of so many repeated experiments. South.

We give them this ingenite, moving force, That makes them always downward take their course.

Blackmore.

INGENUITY. n. s. [ingenuité, French, from ingenuous.]

1. Openness; fairness; candour; freedom from dissimulation.

Such of high quality, or other of particular note, as shall fall under my pen, I shall not let pass without their due character, being part of my professed ingenuity.

Wotton.

My constancy I to the planets give; My truth, to them who at the court do live; Mine ingenuity and openness

To jests; to buffoons my pensiveness. Donne.

I know not whether it be more shame or wonder, that men can so put off ingenuity, and the native greatness of their kind, as to descend to so base, so ignoble a vice.

Gov. of the Tongue.

If a child, when questioned for any thing, directly confess, you must commend his ingenuity, and pardon the fault, be it what it will. Locke.

2. [From ingenious.] Wit; invention; genius; subtilty; acuteness.

These are but the frigidities of wit, and become not the genius of manly ingenuities.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The ancient atomical hypothesis might have slept for ever, had not the ingenuity of the present age recalled it from its urn and silence. Glanville.

Such sots have neither parts nor wit, ingenuity of discourse, nor fineness of conversation, to entertain or delight any one. South.

A pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity, and how much an honest simplicity is preferable to fine parts and subtle speculations.

Woodward.

INGENUOUS. adj. [ingenueus, Latin.]

1. Open; fair; candid; generous; noble. Many speeches there are of Job's, whereby his wisdom and other virtues may appear: but the glory of an ingenueus mind he hath purchased by these words only, Behold I will lay mine hand upon my mouth; I have spoken once, yet will I not therefore maintain argument; yea twice, howbeit for that cause further I will not proceed.

Hooker.

Infuse into their young breasts such an ingenueus and noble ardour, as would not fail to make many of them renowned.

Milton on Education.

If an ingenueus detestation of falsehood be but carefully and early instilled, that is the true and genuine method to obviate dishonesty. Locke.

2. Freeborn; not of servile extraction.

Subjection, as it preserves property, peace, and safety, so it will never diminish rights nor ingenueus liberties.

King Charles.

INGENUOUSLY. adv. [from ingenueus.]

Openly; fairly; candidly; generously. Ingenueously I speak,

No blame belongs to thee. Shakespeare, Timon.

It was a notable observation of a wise father, and no less ingenueously confessed, that those which held and persuaded pressure of consciences were commonly interested.

Bacon.

I will ingenueously confess, that the helps were taken from divines of the church of England.

Dryden.

INGENUOUSNESS.† n. s. [from ingenueus.]

Openness; fairness; candour.

There seems to have been no occasion for the equivocal word "ingenuity" to distinguish between "openness" and "dissimulation," while we have the term ingenueusness to answer the purpose distinctly. Pegge, Anecd. Eng. Lang.

INGENY. n. s. [ingenium, Lat.] Genius; wit. Not now in use.

Whatever of the production of his ingeny comes into foreign parts, is highly valued. Boyle.

To INGEST. v. a. [ingestus, Lat.] To throw into the stomach.

Nor will we affirm that iron, ingested, receiveth in the belly of the ostridge no alteration.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Some the long funnel's curious mouth extend, Through which ingested meats with ease descend.

Blackmore.

INGESTION. n. s. [from ingest.] The act of throwing into the stomach.

It has got room enough to grow into its full dimension, which is performed by the daily ingestion of milk and other food, that's in a short time after digested into blood. Harvey.

INGLE.* n. s. [probably from igniculus, dimin. of ignis, Lat. a sparkle of fire. Dr. Jamieson notices the Gael. aingeal, which has been rendered, fire.] Fire, or flame; a blaze. North. Ray, Yorkshire Glossary, and Grose. "Angle, or ingle-wood, signifies wood for firing." Ritson, Anc. Popular Poet. Englewood, or Inglewood, is the name of a forest in Cumberland. An ingle of sticks is a common expression in Cumberland.

INGLORIOUS.† adj. [inglorius, Lat.]

1. Void of honour; mean; without glory. Lest fear return them back to Egypt, choosing inglorious life with servitude. Milton, P. L.

It was never held inglorious or derogatory for a king to be guided by his great council, nor dishonourable for subjects to yield and bow to their king.

Howell.

Yet though our army brought not conquest home,

I did not from the fight inglorious come. Dryden.

2. Regardless of glory; insensible to the charms of glory; unambitious.

Great Julius, whom now all the world admires, The more he grew in years, the more inflam'd With glory, wept that he had liv'd so long inglorious. Milton, P. R.

My next desire is, void of care and strife, To lead a soft, secure, inglorious life.

Dryden, Georg.

INGLORIOUSLY.† adv. [from inglorious.]

With ignominy; with want of glory. Herod Archelaus died ingloriously at Vienna in Austria. Loe, Blisse of Br. Beaut. (1614), p. 53.

Pride and regret broke his heart, and so he [Boniface the eighth] there died ingloriously.

More on the Seven Churches, p. 63.

This vase the chief of o'ercome, Replenish'd not ingloriously at home. Pope.

Their flaming courage being ingloriously extinguished. 3 Maccab. vi. 51. Bp. Wilson's Bible.

INGLORIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from inglorious.]

State of being inglorious. Seeing the outward meanness, poverty, and ingloriousness of his life and death. Bp. Gauden, Hierasp. (1653), p. 306.

To INGOUGE.* See To ENGORGE.

INGOT.† n. s. [ingot, French; or from ingenoten, melted, Dutch. Dr. Johnson.

—ingot, q. d. inguten, from in and Goth. giota, Su. guta, fundere. Serenus. Chaucer uses ingot, repeatedly, for a mould for casting ingots.] A mass of metal.

If thou art rich, thou'rt poor;
For like an ass, whose back's with ingots bound,
Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
And death unloatheth thee. Shaksp. Meas. for Meas.
Within the circle arms and tripods lie,
Ingots of gold and silver heap'd on high.

Every one of his pieces is an ingot of gold, intrinsically and solidly valuable. Prior.

To INGRAFF, } v. a. [in and graff.]
To INGRAFT. }

1. To propagate trees by insition.

Nor are the ways alike in all

How to ingraft, how to inoculate. May, Virgil.
2. To plant the sprig of one tree in the stock of another; as, he ingrafted an apple upon a crab.

3. To plant or introduce any thing not native.

All his works on me,
Good, or not good, ingraft; my merit those
Shall perfect, and for these my death shall pay.

As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;
This fellow would ingraft a foreign name
Upon our stock. Dryden.

4. To fix deep; to settle.

For a spur of diligence, we have a natural thirst after knowledge ingrafted in us. Hooker.

'Thy great pity that the noble Moor
Should hazard such a place as his own second,
With one of an ingraft infirmity. Shaksp. Othello.
Ingrafted love he bears to Cæsar.

IMGRAFTMENT. n. s. [from ingraft.]

1. The act of ingrafting.

2. The sprig ingrafted.

INGRAINED.* adj. [from grain.] Dyed in grain; deeply infixed.
Ingain'd habits, dy'd with often dips,
Are not so soon discoloured.

Marston, Scourge of Vill. i. 4. (1599).
'Tis an ingrain'd, rational, and judicious sorrow. Norris, Lett. on his Niece's Death.

INGRAFFLED.* adj. [from grapple.] See
To ENGRAPPLE.] Seized on; twisted together.

Two lions—

With their armed paws ingrappled dreadfully.

Drayton, Polyolb. B. 12.

INGRATE.† } adj. [ingratus, Lat.;
INGRATEFUL. } ingrat, French. Ingrate is proper, but ingrateful less proper than ungrateful. Dr. Johnson.—
Accordingly Dr. Johnson gives but a solitary example of ingrateful, and that under the second definition. Yet no word has been more in use, by our best writers, in both senses, than ingrateful.]

1. Ungrateful; unthankful.

That we have been familiar,
Ingrate forgetfulness shall poison, rather Than pity note how much. Shaksp. Coriol.
And you degenerate, you ingrate revolve.

Shaksp. Lear.

No man could be so impiously ingrate.

Younger Brother's Apology, (1635), p. 55.

So will fall

He and his faithless progeny: whose fault?
Whose but his own? Ingrate; he had of me
All he could have: I made him just and right,
Sufficient to have stood, though free to fall.

Milton, P. L.

Is this the love, is this the recompence
Of mine to thee, ingrateful Eve? Milton, P. L.
Ingrateful and treacherous guests to their best friends and entertainers.

Milton, Observ. on the Art. of Peace.

He found that city which he had saved so in-grateful. Hakewill on Providence, p. 443.

He proved extremely false and ingrateful to me.
Atterbury, vol. iv. Lett. lxviii.

Perfidious and ingrate!

His stores ye ravage, and usurp his state.

Pope, Odyssey.

2. Unpleasing to the sense.

The causes of that which is unpleasing or ingrate to the hearing, may receive light by that which is pleasing and grateful to the sight.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

How ingrate soever it [assa-fœtida] may seem at first, yet by use it becomes sufficiently pleasant.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 118.

No ingrateful food. Milton, P. L.

Few would venture upon the ingrateful office of reproving. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. p. iii.

He was never suspected—in the least degree to dissemble his own opinions or thoughts, how ingrateful soever it often proved.

Ld. Clarendon, Life, i. 68.

INGRATEFULLY.* adv. [from ingrateful.]
Ungratefully; without gratitude.

Sir Robert Carew, her near kinsman, and whose family and himself she [Queen Elizabeth] had raised from the degree of a mean gentleman to high honour in title and place, most ingrate-fully did catch at her last breath, to carry it to the rising sun then in Scotland.

Sir A. Weldon, Court of King James, p. 2.

INGRATEFULNESS.* n. s. [from ingrateful.]
Unthankfulness. Bullockar.

INGRATELY.* adv. [from ingrate.] Un-gratefully.

Nor may we smother or forget, ingrately,
The heaven of silver that was sent but lately
From Ferdinand, &c.

Sylvester, Du Bart. 1621, p. 135.

To INGRATIATE.† v. a. [in and gratia,
Lat.]

1. To put in favour; to recommend to kindness. It has with before the person whose favour is sought, Dr. Johnson says; and accordingly the examples, which he gives, are only of ingratiate with. Hammond and Scott use it also with to.

They will be fit helms for such hatchets;—to humour them, and ingratiate themselves.

Bp. Richardson on the O. Test. (1655), p. 303.

They endeavour, with all manner of address, to render their company acceptable and diverting;
and when they have thus ingratiated themselves,
if you speak of any of our books or divines, they will with a slighting accent tell you, they are not worth their minding.

The Missionaries' Arts Discovered, (1688), p. 18.

Their managers make them see armies in the air, and give them their word, the more to ingratiate themselves with them, that they signify nothing less than future slaughter and desolation.

Addison.

Politicians, who would rather ingratiate themselves with their sovereign than promote his real service, accommodate his counsels to his inclinations. Spectator.

2. To recommend; to render easy: applied to things.

What difficulty would it not ingratiate to us?

Hammond, Works, iv. 564.

When once we come to feel the good effects of those duties in our natures, how fast our lusts do decline, our dispositions mend, and all our graces improve in the use of them, the sense of this will mightily endear and ingratiate them to us. Scott, Christian Life, i. 4.

INGRATIATING.* n. s. [from the verb.]
Recommendation; the act of putting in favour.

Those have been far from receiving the rewards of such *ingratiating*s with the people. King Charles.
Which had been a very great indulgence and ingratiating to women of great quality.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 176.

INGRATITUDE.† n. s. [ingratitude, French;
in and gratitude. It is not often used in the plural. Nor has Dr. Johnson given an example of it in that number. Shakspeare affords one.] Retribution of evil for good; unthankful-
ness.

Ingratitude! thou marble-hearted fiend,
More hideous, when thou show'st thee in a child,
Than the sea monster. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his back,
Wherein he puts aims for oblivion,
A great-siz'd monster of *ingratitude*s.

Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

Ingratitude is abhorred both by God and man, and vengeance attends those that repay evil for good. L'Estrange.

Nor was it with ingratitude return'd
In equal fires the blissful couple burn'd;
One joy possess'd 'em both, and in one grief they mourn'd. Dryden.

To INGRAVE.* v. a. [from grave.] To bury. See the fourth sense of To ENGRAVE.

Thy corps, as in the custome old,
With thy forefathers doth not lie ingrav'd.

Gamage, Epigr. (1613), sign. C. 5.

To INGRAVIDATE.* v. a. [gravidatus, Latin.] To impregnate; to make prolific.

They may be so pregnant and ingravitated with lustful thoughts, that they may as it were die in travail, because they cannot be delivered.

Fuller, Holy State, p. 35.

To INGREAT.* v. a. [from great.] To make great.

It appeareth, that there is, in all things, a desire to dilate and to ingreat themselves.

Fotherby, Atheism. (1622), p. 174.

As some are gentle and benign, so some others, to ingreat themselves, might strain more than the strong will bear.

Abp. Abbott, Speech in Rushworth's Collect. i. 455.

INGREDIENT. n. s. [ingredient, French;
ingrediens, Latin.]

1. Component part of a body, consisting of different materials. It is commonly used of the simples of a medicine.

The ointment is made of divers ingredients, whereof the hardest to come by is the moss upon the skull of a dead man unburied.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

So deep the power of these ingredients pierc'd,
Even to the inmost seat of mental sight,
That Adam, now enforc'd to shut his eyes,
Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd.

Milton, P. L.

By this way of analysis we may proceed from compounds to ingredients, and from motions to the forces producing them; and in general, from effects to their causes, and from particular causes to more general ones, till the argument end in the more general. Newton, Opticks.

I have often wondered, that learning is not thought a proper ingredient in the education of a woman of quality or fortune. Addison, Guardian.

Parts, knowledge, and experience, are excellent ingredients in a public character. Rogers.

Water is the chief ingredient in all the animal fluids and solids. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. It is used by Temple with into, properly, but not according to custom.

Spleen is a bad ingredient into any other distemper. Temple.

INGRESS. n. s. [ingressus, Latin.] Entrance; power of entrance; intromission.

All putrefactions come from the ambient body; either by ingress of the substance of the ambient body into the body putrefied; or else by excitation of the body putrefied by the body ambient.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Those air bladders, by a sudden subsidence, meet again by the ingress and egress of the air.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

INGRESSION. n. s. [ingression, French; ingressio, Lat.] The act of entering; entrance.

The fire would strain the pores of the glass too suddenly, and break it all in pieces to get ingression.

Digby on Bodies.

INGUINAL. adj. [inguinal, French; inguen, Lat.] Belonging to the groin.

The plague seems to be a particular disease, characterised with eruptions in buboes, by the inflammation and suppuration of the axillary, inguinal, and other glands.

Arbuthnot.

TO INGU'LF. v. a. [in and gulf. See TO ENGULF.]

1. To swallow up in a vast profundity.

Southward through Eden went a river large,
Nor chang'd his course, but through the shaggy hill

Pass'd underneath ingulf'd.

Milton, P. L.

Him who disobeys,
Me disobeys, breaks union, and that day,
Cast out from God and blessed vision, falls
Into utter darkness deep ingulf'd.

Milton, P. L.

The river flows redundant;
Then rowling back, in his capacious lap

Ingulfs their whole militia, quick immerst, Philips.

2. To cast into a gulf.

If we ingulf to the lords, whether they prevail or not, we ingulf ourselves into assured danger.

Hayward.

That we ingulf not ourselves too deeply in the businesses and pleasures of this life.

Bp. Hopkins, Exp. on the Lord's Pr. &c. p. 264.

TO INGU'RGITATE. v. a. [ingurgiter, Fr.; ingurgito, Latin.]

1. To plunge down.

Ingurgitating sometimes whole half glasses.

Cleveland Poems, &c. p. 112.

2. To plunge into; to engulf.

If a man do but once set his appetite upon it, [pleasure,] let him ingurgitate himself never so deep into it, yet shall he never be able to fill his desire with it. Fotherby, Atheom. (1622) p. 206.

TO INGU'RGITATE.* v. n. To drink largely; to swig.

Nothing pesters the body and mind sooner, than to be still fed, to eat and ingurgitate beyond all measure, as many do.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 235.

INGURGITA'TION. n. s. [from ingurgitate.] The act of intemperate swallowing.

Inconveniences always do happen by ingurgitations and excessive feedings.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 191.

Too much abstinence turns vice, and too much ingurgitation is one of the seven, and at once destroys both nature and grace.

Bp. Hall, Of Contentation, § 13.

INGUSTABLE. adj. [in and gusto, Lat.] Not perceptible by the taste.

As for their taste, if the camelion's nutriment be air, neither can the tongue be an instrument thereof; for the body of the element is ingustable, void of all sapidity, and without any action of the tongue, is, by the rough artery, or wizen, conducted into the lungs.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

INHABILE. adj. [inhabile, French; inhabilis, Lat.] Unskilful; unready; unfit; unqualified.

INHABILITY.* n. s. [inhabilité, French, "disability, insufficiency, weakness, &c." Cotgrave.] Unskilfulness.

Whatever evil blind ignorance, — inhability, unwieldiness, and confusion of thoughts beget, wisdom prevents.

Barrow, Serm. i.

TO INHABIT. v. a. [habito, Lat.] To dwell in; to hold as a dweller.

Not all are partakers of that grace, whereby
Christ inhabith whom he saveth.

Hooker.

They shall build houses and inhabit them.

Isaiah, lxx. 21.

She shall be inhabited of devils. Baruch, iv. 35.

TO INHABIT. v. n. To dwell; to live.

Learn what creatures there inhabit.

Milton, P. L.

They say, wild beasts inhabit here;

But grief and wrong secure my fear.

Waller.

INHABITABLE. adj. [from inhabit.]

1. Capable of affording habitation.

All which live

In the inhabitable world. Donne, Poems, p. 363.

The fixed stars are all of them suns, with systems of inhabitable planets moving about them.

Locke.

2. [Inhabitable, French.] Incapable of inhabitants; not habitable; uninhabitable.

Not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing Shakspeare. Formerly this was the sole explanation of the word in our old lexicography. And so Ben Jonson and others used it. The earliest use of the preceding and present sense of the word
Dr. Johnson assigns to Locke; but Donne, half a century before him, so employed it.

The frozen ridges of the Alps,

Or any other ground inhabitable. Shaksp. Rich. II.

INHABITANCE. n. s. [from inhabit.] Residence of dwellers.

So the ruins yet resting in the wild moors, testify a former inhabitation. Carver, Surv. of Cornwall.

No promise of inhabitation; neither track of beast, nor foot of man. We have searched all this rocky desert.

Beaumont and Fl. Sea-Voyage.

INHABITANT. n. s. [from inhabit.] Dweller; one that lives or resides in a place.

In this place they report that they saw inhab- itants, which were very fair and fat people.

Abbott.

If the fervour of the sun were the sole cause of blackness in any land of negroes, it were also reasonable that inhabitants of the same latitude, subjected unto the same vicinity of the sun, should also partake of the same hue.

Brown.

For his supposed love a third
Lays greedily upon a bird,
And stands amaz'd to find his dear
A wild inhabitant o' the air.

Waller.

What happier natures shrink at with affright,
The hard inhabitant contends is right.

Pope.

INHABITATION. n. s. [from inhabit.]

1. Abode; place of dwelling.

Noise call you it, or universal groan,
As if the whole inhabitation perish'd! Milton, S. A.

2. The act of inhabiting, or planting with dwellings; state of being inhabited.

By knowing this place we shall the better judge of the beginning of nations, and of the world's inhabitation.

Raleigh.

The inhabitation of the Holy Ghost maketh a temple, as we are informed by the Apostle, "What know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you?"

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 8.

3. Quantity of inhabitants.

We shall rather admire how the earth contained its inhabitation than doubt it. Brown, Vulg. Err.

INHABITER. n. s. [from inhabit.] One that inhabits; a dweller.

Woe to the inhabiters of the earth. Rev. viii. 13.

The same name is given unto the inlanders, or midland inhabiters, of this island.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

They ought to understand, that there is not only some inhabiter in this divine house, but also some ruler.

Derham.

INHABITRESS.* n. s. [from inhabiter.] A female inhabitant.

O inhabitant of the fortress, [in the margin, inhabitrress.]

Jerem. x. 17.

Thou inhabitant of Saphir, [in the margin, inhab- itrress.]

Micah, i. 11.

The church here called the inhabitrress of the gardens.

Bp. Richardson on the O. Test. (1655), p. 350.

TO INHA'NCE.* See TO ENHANCE.

TO INHA'LE. v. a. [inhale, Latin.] To draw in with air; to inspire: opposed to ex- hale or expire.

Martin was walking forth to inhale the fresh breeze of the evening.

Arbuthnot and Pope.

But from the breezy deep the blest inhale

The fragrant murmurs of the western gale.

Pope, Odyssey.

There sits the shepherd on the grassy turf,
Inhaling healthful the descending sun. Thomson.

INHARMONICAL.* adj. [in and harmonical.] Discordant. A term in music.

INHARMONIOUS. adj. [in and harmonious.] Unmusical; not sweet of sound.

Catullus, though his lines be rough, and his numbers inharmomious, I could recommend for the softness and delicacy, but must decline for the looseness, of his thoughts.

Fellon.

The identity of sound may appear a little inharm- omious, and shock the ear.

Broome.

TO INHE'RE. v. n. [inhereo, Latin.] To exist in something else.

For, nor in nothing, nor in things
Extreme, and scattering bright, can love inhere.

Donne, Poems, p. 17.

They do but inhere in their subject which supports them; their being is a dependence on a subject.

Digby on Bodies.

INHER'ENCE.* n. s. [from inherent.] Ex-INHER'ENCY. n. s. [from inherent.] Instance in something else,
so as to be inseparable from it; conjunction.

The gift of tongues, after its first infusion by the Spirit, might be in a man by habitual inhe- rence, as a standing principle or power residing in the soul, and enabling it, upon any occasion, to express itself in several languages.

South, Serm. iii. 415.

The immanency and inherency of this power in Jesus, is evident in this, that he was able to communicate it to whom he pleased.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

It is I that am pleased with beholding his gayety, and the gay man in his greatest bravery is only pleased because I am pleased with the sight; so borrowing his little and imaginary complacency from the delight that I have, not from any inhe- reny of his own possession.

Bp. Taylor, Serm. xviii.

INHER'ENT. adj. [inherent, Fr. inherens,
Lat.]

1. Existing in something else; so as to be inseparable from it.

I will not do't,

Lest I surcease to honour mine own truth;
And by my body's action teach my mind
A most inherent baseness.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

2. Naturally conjoined; innate; inborn.

I mean not the authority which is annexed to your office: I speak of that only which is inborn and inherent to your person. Dryden, Jew.

The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a load-stone; and a power to be so drawn is a part of the complex one of iron; which powers pass for inherent qualities. Locke.

Animal oil is various according to principles inherent in it. Arbutnot on Aliments.

They will be sure to decide in favour of themselves, and talk much of their inherent right. Swift.

The ideas of such modes can no more be subsistent, than the idea of redness was just now found to be inherent in the blood, or that of whiteness in the brain. Bentley.

The obligations we are under of distinguishing ourselves as much by an inherent and habitual, as we are already distinguished by an external and relative holiness. Bentley.

INHERENTLY.* adv. [from inherent.] By inheritance.

They may assert, that matter hath inherently and essentially such an internal energy. Bentley, Serm. vii.

TO INHERIT.† v. a. [emheriter, French.]

1. To receive or possess by inheritance.

Treason is not inherited, my lord. Shakespeare.
Why all delights are vain; but that most vain,
Which, with pain purchas'd, doth inherit pain. Shakespeare.

Prince Harry is valiant; for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father he hath, like lean, sterile land, manured with excellent good store of fertile sherris. Shakespeare.

Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. St. Matt. v. 5.

The son can receive from his father good things, without empire, that was vested in him for the good of others; and therefore the son cannot claim or inherit it, by a title, which is founded wholly on his own private good. Locke.

We must know how the first ruler, from whom any one claims, came by his authority, before we can know who has a right to succeed him in it, and inherit it from him. Locke.

Unwilling to sell an estate he had some prospect of inheriting, he formed delays. Addison.

2. To possess; to obtain possession of: in Shakespeare. Not used.

This, or else nothing, will inherit her.

Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.
He, that had wit, would think that I had none,
To bury so much gold under a tree,
And never after to inherit it. Titus Andronicus.

INHERITABLE. adj. [from inherit.] Transmissible by inheritance; obtainable by succession.

A kind of inheritable estate accrued unto them. Carew.

By the ancient laws of the realm, they were not inheritable to him by descent. Hayward.

Was the power the same, and from the same original in Moses as it was in David? And was it inheritable in one and not in the other? Locke.

INHERITABLY.* adv. [from inheritable.] By inheritance. Sherwood.

INHERITANCE. n. s. [from inherit.]

1. Patrimony; hereditary possession.

When the son dies, let the inheritance descend unto the daughter. Shakespeare, Hen. V.
Is there yet any portion or inheritance for us in our father's house? Gen. xxxi. 14.

Claim our just inheritance of old. Milton, P. L.
Oh dear, unhappy babe! must I bequeath thee
Only a sad inheritance of woe?

Gods! cruel gods! can't all my pains atone,
Unless they reach my infant's guiltless head? Smith.

2. The reception of possession by hereditary right.

Men are not proprietors of what they have merely for themselves, their children have a title to part of it, which comes to be wholly theirs, when death has put an end to their parents' use of it; and this we call inheritance. Locke.

3. In Shakespeare, possession.

You will rather shew our general louts
How you can frown, than spend a fawn upon them,
For the inheritance of their loves, and safeguard
Of what that want might ruin. Shakespeare, Coriol.

INHERITOR. n. s. [from inherit.] An heir; one who receives any thing by succession.

You, like a letcher, out of whorish loins,
Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors. Shaksp.
The very conveyances of his lands will hardly lie in this box; and must the inheritor himself have no more? Shakespeare.

Marriage, without consent of parents they do not make void, but they mulct it in the inheritors; for the children of such marriages are not admitted to inherit above a third part of their parents, inheritance. Bacon, New Atlantis.

INHERITRESS. n. s. [from inheritor.] An heiress; a woman that inherits.

He had given artificially some hopes to marry
Anne, inheritress to the duchy of Bretagne.
Bacon, Hen. VII.

INHERITRIX.† n. s. [from inheritor.] An heiress. This is now more commonly used, though inheritress be a word more analogically English. Dr. Johnson.—

The word had formerly also a kind of form between both, viz. inheritrice:

"Both queens of Scotland, regent and inheritrice in our dayes." Proceedings against Garnet and the late traitors, 1606, sign. E. e. 4. b.

No female

Should be inheritrix in Salique land.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.
The foul inheritrix of the dregs of wrath.

Beaumont, Psyche, ix. 53.
TO INHERSE. v. a. [in and herse.] To enclose in a funeral monument.

See, where he lies, inherst in the arms
Of the most bloody nurser of his harms. Shaksp.

INHERSION.† n. s. [inhercio, Latin.] Inheritance; the state of existing in something else.

Neither was this the [gift of prophecy and foretelling future events,] in the soul by constant inhesion and habitual abode; but, as we may not unfitly express it, only by sudden strictures, by transient immissions, and representations of the ideas of things future, to the imagination. In a word, it was in the mind not as an inhabitant, but as a guest. South, Serm. iii. 416.

And for a like reason, activity and perceptivity, by which powers alone we discover that there is a substance different from matter, and which is the necessary subject of their inhesion, must be in the mind. Baxter on the Soul, i. 328.

INHAI'ION.* n. s. [inhaitio, Latin.] A gaping after; a great desire.

An inhaition after obscene lusts.
Eph. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Cler. p. 24.

TO INHIBIT. v. a. [inhibeo, Lat. inhiber, French.]

1. To restrain; to hinder; to repress; to check.

Holding of the breath doth help somewhat to cease the hiccough; and vinegar put to the nostrils or gargarised, doth it also, for that it is astrigent, and inhibiteth the motion of the spirits.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The stars and planets being whirled about with great velocity, would suddenly, did nothing inhibit it, be shattered in pieces. Ray on the Creation.

Their motions also are excited and inhibited, are moderated and managed by the objects without them. Bentley, Serm. ii.

2. To prohibit; to forbid.

All men were inhibited by proclamation, at the dissolution, so much as to mention a parliament. Clarendon.

Burial may not be inhibited or denied to any one. Ayliffe.

INHIBITION.† n. s. [inhibition, Fr. inhibitio, Lat.]

1. Restraint; hindrance.

This ligation of senses proceeds from an inhibition of spirits, the way being stopped up by which they should come. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 24.

2. Prohibition; embargo.

He might be judged to have imposed an envious inhibition on it, because himself has not stock enough to maintain the trade. Gov. of the Tongue.

3. [In law.] Inhibition is a writ to inhibit or forbid a judge from farther proceeding in the cause depending before him. Inhibition is most commonly a writ issuing out of a higher court Christian to a lower and inferiour, upon an appeal; and prohibition out of the king's court to a court Christian, or to an inferiour temporal court. Cowel.

The decrees and inhibycions of my lorde ordynare of London.

Bale, Yet a Course, &c. (1543), fol. 19. b.

No inhibition shall be granted out of any court belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury, at the instance of any party, unless it be subscribed by an advocate practising in the said court.

Const. and Canons Eccl. 96.

TO INHIVE.* v. a. [from hive.] To put into a hive. Colgrave, and Sherwood.

TO INHOLD. v. a. [in and hold.] To have inherent; to contain in itself.

It is disputed, whether this light first created be the same which the sun inholeth and casteth forth, or whether it had continuance any longer than till the sun's creation. Ralegh.

TO INHOOP.* v. a. [in and hoop.] To confine in an enclosure.

His quails ever

Beat mine inhood'd at odds.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

INHO'SPITABLE. adj. [in and hospitable.] Affording no kindness nor entertainment to strangers.

All places else

Inhospitable appear, and desolate;

Nor knowing us, nor known. Milton, P. L.

Since toss'd from shores to shores, from lands to lands,

Inhospitable rocks, and barren sands.

Dryden, Virg.

INHO'SPITABLY. adv. [from inhospitable.] Unkindly to strangers.

Of guests, he makes them slaves
Inhospitably, and kill their infant males.

Milton, P. L.

INHO'SPITABLENESS.† n. s. [in and hospitability, Fr.] Want of hospitality; want of courtesy to strangers.

Their inhospitality is punishment enough to itself: they have lost the honour and happiness of being host to their God.

Eph. Hall, Contempl. Birth of Christ.

Those rude heaps have had the dust of his feet shaken against them for their inhospitableness.

Hewitt, Serm. p. 79. (1658).

INHUMAN.† adj. [inhumain, Fr.; inhumanus, Lat.] There is now no distinction observed between inhuman and inhumane. Formerly it was inhumane, with the accent on the last syllable. See the citations from Marston and Goodman, under INHUMANLY.] Barbarous; savage; cruel; uncompassionate.

A just war may be prosecuted after a very unjust manner; by perfidious breaches of our word, by inhuman cruelties, and by assassinations.

Atterbury.

The more these praises were enlarged, the more inhuman was the punishment, and the sufferer more innocent.

Swift.

Princes and peers attend! while we impart
To you the thoughts of no inhuman heart.

Pope, Odyssey.

INHUMANITY. n. s. [inhumanité, Fr.; from inhuman.] Cruelty; savageness; barbarity.

Love which lover hurts is inhumanity. Sidney.
The rudeness of those who must make up their want of justice with inhumanity and impudence.

King Charles.

Each social feeling fell,
And joyless inhumanity pervades,
And petrifies the heart. Thomson, Spring.

INHUMANLY.† adv. [from inhuman.] Savagely; cruelly; barbarously.

No Jew, no Turk would use a Christian
So inhumanly as this Puritan.

Marston, Sat. ii. (1598).

O what are these

Death's ministers, not men: who thus deal death
Inhumanly to men; and multiply
Ten thousand fold the sin of him who slew
His brother!

Milton, P. L.

We may assure ourselves, that whatsoever pretends to be a divine law, and can be made to appear to be inhumanly rigorous, or intolerably difficult to be observed, is either no law of his, or at the least is not rightly interpreted.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. p. iii. (ed. 1720.) p. 317.

I, who have established the whole system of all true politeness and refinement in conversation, think myself most inhumanly treated by my countrymen.

Swift.

INHUMATION.* n. s. [inhumation, Fr.; inhumatio, Lat. from inhumo.] A burying; sepulture.

The soldiery prize that which is the proper possession of the dead, a good name, and hope to be famous after their inhumation.

Waterhouse, Apology for Learning, (1653.) p. 194.

It [Robright Stones] is probably not funeral; for some years ago its area, which is without tumulus, was examined to a considerable depth by digging, and no marks of inhumation appeared.

Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 61.

TO INHUMATE.†† v. a. [inhumer, Fr.; to inhume, Lat.] To bury; to inter.

We took notice of an old-conceited tomb, which inhumed a harmless shepherd.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 126.

Weeping they bear the mangled heaps of slain,
Inhume the natives in their native plain.

Pope, Odyssey.

TO INJECT.†† v. a. [injectus, Lat.]

1. To throw in; to dart in.

Good thoughts are injected into us by the Holy Spirit.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 147.

Angels inject thoughts into our minds, and know our cogitations.

Glanville.

2. To throw up; to cast up.

Though bold in open field, they yet surround
The town with walls, and mound inject on mound.

Pope, Odyssey.

INJECTION.† n. s. [injection, Fr.; injection, Lat.]

1. The act of casting in.

Those good injections must be received, embraced, delighted in, and followed home in a constant and habitual practice.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 147.

If we be watchful presently to abhor and reject these injections of Satan, and to cast back into his face these his fiery darts, which he shoots into our souls; they are not our sins, though they are our troubles.

Bp. Hopkins, Expos. on the Lord's Prayer, p. 129.
This salt powdered was, by the repeated injection of well kindled charcoal, made to flash like melted nitre.

Boyle.

2. Any medicine made to be injected by a syringe, or any other instrument, into any part of the body.

Quincy.

3. The act of filling the vessels with wax, or any other proper matter, to shew their shapes and ramifications, often done by anatomists.

Quincy.

INIMAGINABLE.* adj. [inimaginable, Fr. Cotgrave.] Inconceivable.

In this sense two prime causes are inimaginable; and for all things to depend of one, and to be more independent beings than one, is a clear contradiction.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

INIMICAL.† adj. [inimicus, Lat.] Unfriendly; unkind; hurtful; hostile; adverse. A modern word; and one of the few inserted into Dr. Johnson's Dictionary after his death. I think he has somewhere used the word himself.

Associations in defence of the existing power of the sovereign, are not in their spirit, inimical to the constitution.

Brand, Ess. on Polit. Associations, (1796).

INIMITABILITY.* n. s. [from inimitable.] Incapacity to be imitated.

Truths must have an eternal existence in some understanding; or rather they are the same with that understanding itself, considered as variously representative, according to the various modes of inimitability or participation.

Norris.

INIMITABLE.† adj. [inimitabilis, Lat.; inimitable, Fr.] Above imitation; not to be copied. Dr. Johnson's earliest example is from Milton. Drayton, long before Milton, has employed it; and the passage evidently attracted the notice, as indeed it well deserves, of Dryden, who has used the remarkable expression of "imitate, inimitable," which it presents.

[He] sitting in the silent shade,

When his fair flock to rest themselves were laid
On his lyre tuned such harmonious lays,
That the birds perch'd upon the tender sprays,
Mad at his music, strain themselves so much
To imitate the inimitable touch,
Breaking their hearts; that they have dropt to ground,

And died for grief, in malicing the sound.

Drayton, David and Goliath.

The portal shone, inimitable on earth

By model, or by shading pencil, drawn.

Milton, P. L.

What is most excellent is most inimitable.

Denham.

And imitate the inimitable force.
Dryden.
Virgil copied the ancient sculptors, in that inimitable description of military fury in the temple of Janus.

Addison, on Anc. Medals.

INIMITABLY. adv. [from inimitable.] In a manner not to be imitated; to a degree of excellence above imitation.

A man could not have been always blind who thus inimitably copies nature.

Pope, Ess. on Homer.

Thus terribly adorn'd the figures shine,
Inimitably wrought with skill divine.

Pope.

Charms such as thine, inimitably great. Broome.

TO INJOIN. v. a. [enjoindre, Fr.; injungo, Lat.]

1. To command; to enforce by authority.

See TO ENJOIN.

Laws do not only teach what is good, but they injoin it; they have in them a certain constraining force.

Hooker.

This garden tend, our pleasant task injoin'd.

Milton, P. L.

2. In Shakspeare, to join. Not used.

The Ottomites

Steering with due course towards the isle of Rhodes,
Have there injoin'd them with a fleet. Shakspeare.

INIQUITOUS. adj. [inique, Fr.; from iniquity.] Unjust; wicked.

INIQUITY.* n. s. [iniquitas, Lat.; iniquité, Fr.]

1. Injustice; unrighteousness.

There is a greater or less probability of an happy issue to a tedious war, according to the rightness or iniquity of the cause for which it was commenced.

Smalridge.

2. Wickedness; crime.

Want of the knowledge of God is the cause of all iniquity amongst men.

Hooker.

Till God at last

Wearied with their iniquities, withdraw
His presence from among them. Milton, P. L.

INIQUOUS.* adj. [iniquus, Lat.] Unjust.

Be not stoically mistaken in the equality of sins, nor commutatively iniquous in the value of transgressions; but weigh them in the scales of heaven, and by the weights of righteous reason.

Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 12.

Whatever is done through unequal affection is iniquous, wicked, and wrong.

Shaftesbury, Enq. concerning Virtue.

TO INISLE.* v. a. [from isle.] To encircle; to surround. An old word, which Dyer revived.

Inisled in his arms, he clips her for his own.

Drayton, of the Isle of Orney and the River Rother,

Pol. S. 18.

Gambia's wave inises

An oozy coast, and pestilential ill

Diffuses wide. Dyer.

INITIAL. adj. [initial, Fr.; initialis, from initium, Lat.]

1. Placed at the beginning.

In the editions, which had no more than the initial letters of names, he was made by Keys to hurt the inoffensive.

Pope.

2. Incipient; not complete.

Moderate labour of the body conduces to the preservation of health, and cures many initial diseases; but the toil of the mind destroys health, and generates maladies.

Harvey.

The schools have used a middle term to express this affection, and have called it the initial fear of God.

Rogers.

INITIALLY.* adv. [from initial.] In an incipient degree.

Our Lord did initially and in part exercise those functions upon earth.

Barrow, vol. ii. S. 31.

1. To enter; to instruct in the rudiments of an art; to place in a new state; to put into a new society.

Providence would only initiate mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry.

More, Antid. against Atheism.
To initiate his pupil in any part of learning, an ordinary skill in the governour is enough.

Locke on Education.
He was initiated into half a dozen clubs before he was one and twenty.

No sooner was a convert initiated, but, by an easy figure, he became a new man.

2. To begin upon.

Many secret designs only initiated them, and not executed till long after.

Ld. Clarendon, Life, iii. 554.
To INI'TIATE. v. n. To do the first part; to perform the first rite.

The king himself initiates to the pow'r,
Scatters with quiv'ring hand the sacred flour,
And the stream sprinkles. Pope, Odyssey.

INI'TIATE.† adj. [initié, Fr.; initiatius, Lat.]

1. Unpractised.

My strange and self-abuse
Is the initiate fear, that wants hard use:—
We are yet but young indeed.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

2. Newly admitted; fresh, like a novice.

To rise in science, as in bliss,
Initiate in the secrets of the skies!

Young, Night Th. 6.
INITIATION.† n. s. [initiatio, Lat. from initiate. Initiation was reckoned a new and uncouth word, in 1656, according to Heylin.] The reception, admission, or entrance of a new comer into any art or state.

The ground of initiating or entering men into Christian life, is more summarily comprised in the form of baptism, the ceremony of this initiation instituted by Christ.

Hammond.
Silence is the first thing that is taught us at our initiation into sacred mysteries.

Broome, Notes to the Odyssey.
INI'TIATORY.* adj. [from initiate.] Introductory.

INJUDICABLE. adj. [in and judicio, Lat.]

Not cognizable by a judge.

INJUDICIAL. adj. [in and judicial.] Not according to form of law.

Dict.

INJUDICIOUS. adj. [in and judicious.]

Void of judgment; without judgement.

Used both of persons and things.

A philosopher would either think me in jest, or very injurious, if I took the earth for a body regular in itself, if compared with the rest of the universe.

Burnet.

A sharp wit may find something in the wisest man, whereby to expose him to the contempt of injurious people.

Tillotson.

INJUDICIOUSLY. adv. [from injurious.]

With ill judgement; not wisely.

Scaliger injudiciously condemns this description.

Broome.

INJUDICIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from injudicious.] Want of judgement.

In the sisterhood of fancy, Music may justly challenge a birthright, she and Painting being but younger sisters to Poetry; a ternary of sisters, whether rich, or poor, that stoop not to inferior souls, whose dulness deafens their delight in this second, and injudiciousness blinds their wonder or liking of the third,

Whitlock, Mamm. of the Engl. p. 480.

INJUNCTION. n. s. [from injoin; injunctus, injunctio, Latin.]

1. Command; order; precept.

The institution of God's law is described as being established by solemn injunction.

Hooker.

My duty cannot suffer
T' obey in all your daughter's hard commands;
Though the injunction be to bar my doors,
And let this tyrannous night take hold upon you.

Shakespeare.

For, still they knew; and ought to have still remembered

The high injunction, not to taste that fruit,

Whoever tempted. Milton, P. L.

The ceremonies of the church are necessary as the injunctions of lawful authority, the practice of the primitive church, and the general rules of decency.

South.

2. [In law.] Injunction is an interlocutory decree out of the chancery, sometimes to give possession unto the plaintiff for want of appearance in the defendants, sometimes to the king's ordinary court, and sometimes to the court-christian, to stay proceeding.

Cowel.

To INJURE. v. a. [injurier, Fr. injuria, Latin.]

1. To hurt unjustly; to mischief undeservedly; to wrong.

They injure by chance in a crowd, and without a design; then hate always whom they have once injured.

Temple.

Forgiveness to the injur'd does belong;
But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong.

Dryden.

2. To annoy; to affect with any inconvenience.

Lest heat should injure us, his timely care
Hath unbesought provided. Milton, P. L.

INJURER. n. s. [from injure.] One that hurts another unjustly; one who wrongs another.

Ill deeds are well turn'd back upon their authors;
And 'gainst an injurer, the revenge is just.

B. Jonson.

The upright judge will countenance right, and discountenance wrong, whoever be the injurer or the sufferer.

Atterbury.

INJURIOUS. adj. [from injury; injurius, Lat. injurius, Fr.]

1. Unjust; invasive of another's rights.

Till the injurious Roman did extort
This tribute from us, we were free. Shaks. Cymb.

Injurious strength would rapine still excuse,
By off'ring terms the weaker must refuse. Dryden.

2. Guilty of wrong or injury.

Yet beauty, though injurious, hath strange power,

After offence returning, to regain

Love once possessed. Milton, S. A.

3. Mischievous; unjustly hurtful.

Our repentance is not real, because we have not done what we can to undo our faults, or at least to hinder the injurious consequences of it from proceeding.

Tillotson.

4. Detractory; contumelious; reproachful; wrongful.

A prison, indeed injurious, because a prison, but else well testifying affection, because in all respects as commodious as a prison can be.

Sidney.

It is natural for a man, by directing his prayers to an image, to suppose the being he prays to represented by that image; which how injurious, how contumelious must it be to the glorious nature of God?

South.

If injurious appellations were of any advantage to a cause, what appellations would those deserve who endeavour to sow the seeds of sedition?

Swift.

INJURIOUSLY. adv. [from injurious.] Wrongfully; hurtfully with injustice, with contumely.

Nor ought he to neglect the vindication of his character, when it is injuriously attacked.

Pope and Gay.

INJURIOUSNESS. n. s. [from injurious.] Quality of being injurious.

Some miscarriages might escape, rather through sudden denials of state, than any propensity either to injuriousness or oppression.

King Charles.

INJURY. n. s. [injuria, Lat. injure, Fr.]

1. Hurt without justice.

The places were acquired by just title of victory, and therefore in keeping of them no injury was offered.

A fine bargain indeed, to part with all our commodious ports, which the greater the inlet is are so much the better, for the imaginary pleasure of a straight shore. Bentley.

Inlets, amongst broken lands and islands. Ellis's Voyage.

TO INLYGHTEN.* [inlhtcan, Sax.] See TO ENLIGHTEN.

TO INLO'CK.* v. a. [from lock.] To close; to lock, set or shut one thing within another. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

TO INLU'MINE.* See TO ENLUMINE.

INLY. adj. [from in.] Interior; internal; secret.

Didst thou but know the inly touch of love,
Thou would'st as soon go kindle fire with snow,
As seek to quench the fire of love with words. Shakespeare.

INLY.† adv. [inlice, Saxon.] Internally; within; secretly; in the heart.

Her heart with joy unwonted inly swell'd,
As feeling wondrous comfort in her weaker old. Spenser, F. Q.

I've inly wept,

Or should have spoke ere this. Shaks. Tempest.

Whereat he inly rag'd, and as they talk'd,
Snute him into the midriff with a stone,
That beat out life. Milton, P. L.
These growing thoughts my mother soon perceiving
By words at times cast forth, inly rejoiced.

The soldiers shout around with generous rage;
He prais'd their ardor: inly pleas'd to see
His host. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

INMATE.† n. s. [in and mate.]

Inmates are those that be admitted to dwell for their money jointly with another man, though in several rooms of his mansion-house, passing in and out by one door. Cowel.

All other thoughts being inmates.

So spake the enemy of mankind, inclos'd
In serpent, inmate bad! and toward Eve

INMATE.* adj. Admitted as an inmate.

There he dies, and leaves his race
Growing into a nation; and now grown,
Suspected to a sequent king, who seeks
To stop their overgrowth, as inmate guests Too numerous. Milton, P. L.

Home is the sacred refuge of our life,
Secur'd from all approaches but a wife:
If thence we fly, the cause admits no doubt,
None but an inmate foe could force us out.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

INMOST.† adj. [from in and most. Sax. innemert.] Deepest within; remotest from the surface.

'Tis you must dig with mattock and with spade,
And pierce the inmost centre of the earth.

Shakespeare.

Rising sighs and falling tears,
That show too well the warm desires,
The silent, slow, consuming fires,
Which on my inmost vitals prey,
And melt my very soul away. Addison on Italy.
Comparing the quantity of light reflected from the several rings, I found that it was most copious from the first or inmost, and in the exterior rings became less and less. Newton.

He sends a dreadful groan: the rocks around
Through all their inmost hollow caves resound.

Pope.

I got into the inmost court. Swift, Gull. Trav.

INN.† n. s. [inn, inne, Saxon, a chamber, and also in the present sense an inn; inni, Goth. an abode, a sojourning place. "Inn enim veteribus hospitium publicum, cauponam, significabat." Keyser, Antiq. Septentrion. p. 350. Yet, originally, inn meant merely a house or habitation; and not a place of public entertainment; to which latter meaning our old lexicography has well affixed the description of "a house of common ingoing."]

1. A chamber; a lodging; a house; a dwelling.

Get us fast into this inn
A kneading trough or elles a kemelyn.

Chaucer, Mill. Tale.

Phæbus with his fiery waine,
Unto his inne began to draw apace.

Spenser, F. Q.

As they [the palm-tree and phenix] sympathize much, the phenix will lightly take up his inne no where els. Parthenia Sacra, (1633), p. 151.

2. A house of entertainment for travellers.
How all this is but a fair inn,
Of fairer guests which dwell within. Sidney.

Palmer, quoth he, death is an equal doom
To good and bad, the common inn of rest;
But, after death, the trial is to come,
When best shall be to them that lived best.

Spenser, F. Q.

Now day is spent,
Therefore with me you may take up your inn.

Spenser, F. Q.

The west, that glimmers with some streaks of day,
Now spurs the lated traveller apace

To gain the timely inn. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Like pilgrims to the appointed place we tend;
The world's an inn, and death the journey's end.

Dryden.

One may learn more here in one day, than in a year's rambling from one inn to another.

Locke.

3. A house where students were boarded and taught: whence we still call the colleges of common law inns of court.

Go some and pull down the Savoy; others to the inns of courts: down with them all.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

4. It was anciently used for the town houses in which great men resided when they attended the court.

To INN.† v. n. [from the noun.] To take up temporary lodging.

Pontus, — travelling toward Lyn,
Grew wondrous weary, and of force would inne,
Where he an hostler calls.

Parrot, Syringes for Woodcocks, (1613.), Epigr. 197.
B. 1.

In thyself dwell;

Inn any where: continuance maketh hell.

Donne.

To INN.† v. a.

1. To house; to put under cover. [Teut. innen.]

He that ears my land, spares my team, and gives me leave to inn the crop. Shaks. All's Well.
Howsoever the laws made in that parliament did bear good fruit, yet the subsidy bare a fruit that proved harsh and bitter: all was inn'd at last into the king's barn. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Mow clover or rye-grass, and make it fit to inn. Mortimer.

2. To lodge. [from the noun.]

This worthy knight,
When he had brought him into his citee,
And inn'd hem, everich at his degree,
He feasteth hem. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

A fire beam
And pleasing heat, such as in first of spring
From Sol, inn'd in the Bull, do kindly stream.

P. Fletcher, Pisc. Ecl. vi. 15.

INNA' TE.† } adj. [inné, Fr. innatus,
INNA' TED. } Lat.]

1. Inborn; ingenerate: natural; not superadded; not adscititious. Innated is not proper, Dr. Johnson observes, citing a passage from Howell; who indeed repeatedly uses it, in his Letters and in his Instructions for Foreign Travel. It is used also by the author of Parthenia Sacra, p. 156. 1633. The word innating also, for ingenerating or producing, was once in use; and in a passage of such forcible description, as induces me to give it; though the word will hardly be adopted.

Studious contemplation sucks the juice
From wisards' cheeks, who making curious search
For nature's secrets, the First Innating Cause
Laughs them to scorn, as man doth busy apes
When they will zany men.

Marston, Antonio's Revenge.

Innate idleness, — and great wealth, and little wit, go commonly together.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.
The Druidian hath been cried up for an innated integrity, and accounted the uprightest dealer on earth.

Howell.

With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
Though harsh the precept, yet the people charm'd.

Dryden.

2. Innate is used in the following passage for inherent. Innate in persons, inherent in things.

Mutual gravitation, or spontaneous attraction, cannot possibly be innate and essential to matter.

Bentley.

INNA'TELY.* adv. [from innate.] Naturally.

INNA'TENESS. n. s. [from innate.] The quality of being innate.

INNA'VIGABLE.† adj. [innavigable, French; Cotgrave: by whom also the English word is used, as it is by Cockeram and Bullokar; innavigabilis, Lat.] Not to be passed by sailing.

If you so hard a toil will undertake,
As twice to pass th' innavigable lake,

Dryden, Æn.

IN'NER.† adj. [from in. Saxon innop. Formerly the superlative innerest, from this word, for inmost, was used. "Thilke circle that is innerest or most within." Chaucer, Boeth. iv. pros. 6.] Interior; not outward.

But th' elfin knight with wonder all the way
Did feed his eyes, and fill'd his inner thought.

Spenser, F. Q.

This attracts the soul,

Governs the inner man, the nobler part;
That other o'er the body only reigns.

Milton, P. R.

Many families are established in the West Indies, and some discovered in the inner parts of America.

Addison, Spect.

The kidney is a conglomerated gland, which is to be understood only of the outer part; for the inner part, whereof the papillæ are composed, is muscular.

Grew.

Thus, seiz'd with sacred fear, the monarch pray'd;

Then to his inner court the guests convey'd.

Pope.

IN'NERLY.* adv. [from inner.] More within. Not in use.

Barret.

IN'NERMOST.† adj. [from inner.] It seems less proper than inmost.

1. Inmost; deepest within.

The words of a talebearer are as wounds, and they go down into the innermost parts of the belly.

Prov. xviii. 8.

2. Remotest from the outward part.

The reflected beam of light would be so broad at the distance of six feet from the speculum, where the rings appeared, as to obscure one or two of the innermost rings.

Newton.

INNHO'LDER.† n. s. [inn and hold.]

1. An inhabitant. See the primary sense of INN.

I doe possesse the world's most regiment,
As, if ye please it into parts divide,

And every part's innholders to convent,
Shall to your eyes appear incontinent.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. A man who keeps an inn; an inn-keeper.

You shall enquire whether bakers and brewers keep their assize, and whether as well they as butchers, inn-holders, and victuallers, do sell that which is wholesome. Bacon, Charge, &c. p. 19.

INNING.† n. s. [innung, Sax.]

1. Ingathering of corn. Sherwood.
A good supper must be provided, and every one that did any thing towards the inning must now have some reward.

Tusser, Redivivus, (1744,) p. 104.

2. In the plural, lands recovered from the sea. Ainsworth.

3. A term in the game of cricket; the turn for using the bat.

For why, my inning's at an end;
The earl has caught my ball. Duncombe.

INNKEEPER. n. s. [inn and keeper.] One who keeps lodgings and provisions for the entertainment of travellers.

Clergymen must not keep a tavern, nor a judge be an innkeeper.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.
A factious innkeeper was hanged, drawn, and quartered.

We were not so inquisitive about the inn as the innkeeper; and provided our landlord's principles were sound, did not take any notice of the stalesness of his provisions. Addison.

INNOCENCE. } n. s. [innocence, Fr. innocence. }
INNOCENCY. } centia, Lat.]

1. Purity from injurious action; untainted integrity.

Simplicity and spotless innocence. Milton, P. L.
What comfort does overflow the devout soul, from a conscience of its own innocence and integrity. Tillotson.

2. Freedom from guilt imputed.

It will help me nothing
To plead mine innocence; for that die is on me
Which makes my whit'st part black.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

I'll to the king my master. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

3. Harmlessness; innocuousness.

The air was calm and serene; none of those tumultuary motions and conflicts of vapours, which the mountains and the winds cause in ours: 'twas suited to a golden age, and to the first innocency of nature. Burnet, Theory.

4. Simplicity of heart, perhaps with some degree of weakness.

I urge this childhood proof,
Because what follows is pure innocence.

Shakespeare.

We laugh at the malice of apes, as well as at the innocence of children. Temple.

INNOCENT.† adj. [innocent, Fr. innocens, Lat.]

1. Pure from mischief.

Something

You may deserve of him through me and wisdom
To offer up a weak, poor, innocent lamb,
'T' appease an angry god. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
I have sinned in that I have betrayed the innocent blood. St. Matt. xxvii. 4.

To wreak on innocent frail man his loss.

Milton, P. L.

2. Free from any particular guilt.

Good madam, keep yourself within yourself;
The man is innocent. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.
I am innocent of the blood of this just person. St. Matt. xxvii. 24.

The peasant, innocent of all these ills,

With crooked ploughs the fertile fallows tills,
And the round year with daily labour fills.

Dryden.

3. Unhurtful; harmless in effects.

The spear

Sung innocent, and spent its force in air. Pope.

4. Ignorant. Obsolete.

Grisilde of this ful innocent,
That for her shapen was all this aray,
To fetchen water at a well is went.

Chaucer, Cl. Tale.

INNOCENT.† n. s.

1. One free from guilt or harm.

This ladie herde all that he saide,
Howe he swore, and how he praide,
Which, was an enchantment
To hit that was an innocent.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

But antique Age, yet in the infancie
Of time, did live then, like an innocent,
In simple, truth and blameless chastitie.

Spenser, F. Q.

Thou hast kill'd the sweetest innocent,
That e'er did lift up eye. Shakspeare, Othello.
If murdering innocents be executing,
Why, then thou art an executioner.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Pilate's heart tells him, he hath done too much already in sentencing an innocent to death.

Bp. Hall, Contempm. B. 4.

2. A natural; an idiot.

Innocents are excluded by natural defects.

Hooker.

I ask'd her questions, and she answer'd me
So far from what she was, so childishly,
So sillily, as if she were a fool,
An innocent. Beaumont & Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.
See one man vilify and insult over his brother,
as if he were an innocent or a block.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 437.

INNOCENTLY. adv. [from innocent.]

1. Without guilt.

The humble and contented man pleases himself innocently and easily, while the ambitious man attempts to please others sinfully and difficultly.

South.

2. With simplicity; with silliness or imprudence.

3. Without hurt.

Balls at his feet lay innocently dead. Cowley.

INNOCUOUS.† adj. [innocuus, Lat.]

1. Harmless in effects.

Pure, puerous, inmixt, innocuus, mild.

More, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 22.

Speculative misapprehension may be innocuus,
but immorality pernicious.

Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 17.

The most dangerous poisons, skillfully managed,
may be made not only innocuus, but of all other medicines the most effectual. Grew.

2. Doing no harm.

A generous lion will not hurt a beast that lies prostrate, nor an elephant an innocuus creature.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 358.

A patient, innocuus, innocent man.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 437.

INNOCUOUSLY. adv. [from innocuus.]

Without mischievous effects.

Whether quails, from any peculiarity of constitution, do innocuusly feed upon hellebore, or rather sometimes but medically use the same.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

INNOCUOUSNESS. n. s. [from innocuus.]

Harmlessness.

The blow which shakes a wall, or beats it down,
and kills men, hath a greater effect on the mind than that which penetrates into a mud wall, and doth little harm; for that innocuusness of the effect makes, that, although in itself it be as great as the other, yet 'tis little observed.

Digby on Bodies.

INNO-MINABLE.* adj. [innoimabilis.]

Lat.] Not to be named.

Foule things innoimabile.

Cockeram.

As concerning the manuscripts, they are ancient,
but not many; innoimabile as yet, but not long to continue so.

Dr. James's Manual. into Div. (1625,) sign. A. 2.

INNOMINATE.* adj. [innoiminé, Fr. in and nominate.] Without a name; not named.

Places formerly innominate.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 379.

To INNOVATE.† v. a. [innover, Fr. innovo, Lat.]

1. To bring in something not known before.

Men pursue some few principles which they have chanced upon, and care not to innovate, which draws unknown inconveniences. Bacon.

Former things

Are set aside like abdicated kings;
And every moment alters what is done,
And innovates some act till then unknown. Dryden.

Every man cannot distinguish betwixt pedantry and poetry; every man therefore is not fit to innovate. Dryden.

2. To change by introducing novelties.

The most frequent maladies are such as proceed from themselves; as first, when religion and God's service is neglected, innovated, or altered.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

To introduce that for reformation which cannot appear to be restored, but may seem to be innovated.

Thorndike, Of Forbearance, &c. p. 16.

From his attempts upon the civil power, he proceeds to innovate God's worship. South.

To INNOVATE. v. n. To introduce novelties.

Time — innovateth greatly, but quietly, and by degrees scarce to be perceived.

Bacon, Ess. of Innovations.

It is a matter of great concernment towards the edification of the church, to obey our superiors, not to innovate in publick forms of worship.

Bp. Taylor, on Extempore Prayer, § 27.

INNOVATION. n. s. [innovation, Fr. from innovate.] Change by the introduction of novelty.

The love of things ancient doth argue stayedness, but levity and want of experience maketh
apt unto innovations. Hooker.

It were good that men in innovations would follow the example of time itself, which indeed innovateth greatly, but quietly and by degrees scarce to be perceived. Bacon, Essays.

Great changes may be made in a government,
yet the form continue; but large intervals of time must pass between every such innovation, enough to make it of a piece with the constitution. Swift.

INNOVATOR. n. s. [innovateur, Fr. from innovate.]

1. An introducer of novelties.

I attach thee as a traitorous innovator,
A foe to th' public weal. Shakspeare, Coriol.

He that will not apply new remedies must expect new evils; for time is the greatest innovator:
and if time of course alter things to the worse,
and wisdom and counsel shall not alter them to the better, what shall be the end?

Bacon, Essays.

2. One that makes changes by introducing novelties.

He counsels them to detest and prosecute all innovators of divine worship. South.

INNOXIOUS.† adj. [innoxius, Lat.]

1. Free from mischievous effects.

Innoxious flames are often seen on the hair of men's heads and horse's manes. Digby.

We may safely use purgatives, they being benign, and of innoxious qualities.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Sent by the better genius of the night,
Innoxious gleaming on the horse's mane,
The meteor sits. Thomson, Autumn.

2. Pure from crimes; harmless; doing no harm.

Another sort of these [spirits] there are, which frequent forlorn houses; which the Italians call foliots, most part innoxious.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 47.

Stranger to civil and religious rage,
The good man walk'd innocuous through his age.
Pope.

INNOXIOUSLY. adv. [from innoxious.]

1. Harmlessly; without harm done.

2. Without harm suffered.

Animals that can innocuously digest these poisons become antidotal to the poison digested.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

INNOXIOUSNESS. n. s. [from innoxious.] Harmlessness.

INNUENDO. n. s. [innuendo, from innuo, Latin.] An oblique hint.

As if the commandments, that require obedience and forbid murder, were to be indicted for a libellous innuendo upon all the great men that come to be concerned.

L'Estrange.

Mercury, though employed on a quite contrary errand, owns it a marriage by an innuendo. Dryden.

Pursue your trade of scandal picking,
Your hints that Stella is no chicken;
Your innuendoes, when you tell us,
That Stella loves to talk with fellows. Swift.

INNUENT. adj. [innuens, Latin, from innuo.] Significant.

He may apply his mind to heraldry, antiquity, innuent impresses, emblems.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 282.

INNUMERABILITY. n. s. [from innumerable; Fr. innumérabilité.] State or quality of being innumerable.

He rejected this innumérabilité of causes.

Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 217.

INNUMERABLE. adj. [innumerable, Fr. innumérable, Lat.] Not to be counted for multitude.

You have sent innumerable substance

To furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways

You have for dignities. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Cover me, ye pines,

Ye cedars! with innumerable boughs,

Hide me, where I may never see them more.

Milton, P. L.

In lines which appear of an equal length, one may be longer than the other by innumerable parts.

Locke.

INNUMERABLENESS. n. s. [from innumerable.] Innumérabilité. Sherwood.

INNUMERABLY. adv. [from innumerable.] Without number.

INNUMEROUS. adj. [innumerus, Latin.] Too many to be counted.

'Twould be some solace yet, some little cheering,
In this close dungeon of innumeros boughs.

Milton, Comus.

Innumeros mischiefs then to mischiefs adds.

More, Song of the Soul, iii. iv. 32.

Keep back those innumeros concupiscences, and corrupt imaginations violently succeeding each other. Spiritual Conflict, P. ii. p. 58. (1651.)

I take the wood,

And, in thick shelter of innumeros boughs,

Enjoy the comfort gentle sleep allows.

Pope, Odys.

INOBE DIENCE. n. s. [inobedience, French; inobedientia, Lat.] Disobedience.

Inobedience to this call of Christ.

Bp. Bedell, Serm. (1634.) p. 81.

INOBE DIENT. adj. [inobedient, Fr. inobediens, Lat.] Disobedient. Formerly used as a substantive. "Examples howe mortall synne maketh the synners inobedyentes to have many paynes and dolours within the fyre of hell." 12mo. bl. l. without date.

INOBSERVABLE. adj. [inobservabilis, Lat.] Unobservable.

Bullockar, and Cockeram.

INOBSERVANCE. † n. s. [inobservantia, Lat.] Want of observance; disobedience; heedlessness; negligence; disregard.

The breach and inobservance of certain wholesome and politic laws. Bacon, Charge, &c. p. 16.

A dull and stupid inobservance of such examples of divine justice — stands often arraigned in Scripture as a very great sin. Spenser on Prod. p. 876.

Sluggishness, and inobservances of God's seasons and opportunities. Hammond, Works, iv. 574.

Infidelity doth commonly proceed from negligence, or drowsy inobservance and carelessness.

Barrow on the Creed.

INOBSERVATION. n. s. [inobservatus, Lat. in and observatio.] Want of observation.

These writers are in all this guilty of the most shameful inobservation.

Shuckford on the Creation, p. 118.

TO INOCULATE. v. n. [inoculo, in and oculus, Lat.] To propagate any plant, by inserting its bud into another stock; to practice inoculation. See INOCULATION.

Nor are the ways alike in all

How to engraff, how to inoculate. May, Virg.

Now is the season for the budding of the orange-tree: inoculate therefore at the commencement of this month. Evelyn.

But various are the ways to change the state, To plant, to bud, to graft, to inoculate. Dryden.

TO INOCULATE. † v. a.

1. To yield a bud to another stock.

Virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock, but we shall relish of it. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Oh, for that Palatine vine, late inoculated with a precious bud of our royal stem!

Bp. Hall, Serm. Works, ii. 268.

The end of love is to have two made one
In will, and in affection, that the minds
Be first inoculated, not the bodies.

B. Jonson, New Inn.

Thy stock is too much out of date.

For tender plants to inoculate. Cleaveland.

2. To infect with the small pox by inoculation. See the second sense of INOCULATION.

The child once burnt dreads the fire; he runs away from the surgeon by whom he was inoculated. Reid.

INOCULATION. † n. s. [inoculatio, Lat. from inoculare.]

1. The act of inserting the eye of a bud into another stock.

Inoculation is practised upon all sorts of stonefruit, and upon oranges and jasmynes. Chuse a smooth part of the stock; then with your knife make a horizontal cut across the rind of the stock, and from the middle of that cut make a slit downwards, about two inches in length in the form of a T; but be careful not to cut too deep, lest you wound the stock; then having cut off the leaf from the bud, leaving the foot-stalk remaining, make a cross cut about half an inch below the eye, and with your knife slit off the bud, with part of the wood to it. This done, with your knife pull off that part of the wood which was taken with the bud, observing whether the eye of the bud be left to it or not; for all these buds which lose their eyes in stripping, are good for nothing: then raising the bark of the stock, thrust the bud therein, placing it smooth between the rind and the wood of the stock; and so having exactly fitted the bud to the stock, tie them closely round, taking care not to bind round the eye of the bud. Miller.

In the stem of Elaiana they all met and came to be ingrafted all upon one stock, most of them by inoculation. Howell.

2. The practice of transplanting the small-pox, by infusion of the matter from ripened pustules into the veins of the uninfected, in hopes of procuring a milder sort than what frequently comes by infection. Quincy.

It is evident, by inoculation, that the smallest quantity of the matter, mixed with the blood, produceth the disease. Arbuthnot.

INOCULATOR. n. s. [from inoculate.]

1. One that practises the inoculation of trees.

2. One who propagates the small-pox by inoculation.

Had John a Gaddesden been now living, he would have been at the head of the inoculators.

Friend, Hist. of Physick.

TO INODIATE.  v. a.* [in and odiosus.] To make hateful. This word I believed to have been peculiar to Dr. South; but a learned friend assures me that bishop Andrews uses it, though his reference to the passage in which it occurs has been mislaid. It is certainly a very expressive word.

He inflicts them [calamities] — partly to give the world fresh demonstrations of his hatred of sin, and partly to inodiate and imbitter sin to the chastised sinner. South, Serm. vi. 224.

The ancient members of her communion, who have all along owned and contended for a strict conformity to her rules and sanctions, as the surest course to establish her, have been of late represented, or rather reprobated, under the inodiating character of high churchmen.

South, Dedication to Archbishop Marsh.

INODORATE. adj. [in and odoratus, Lat.] Having no scent.

Whites are more inodorate than flowers of the same kind coloured. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

INODOROUS. adj. [inodorus, Lat.] Wanting scent; not affecting the nose.

The white of an egg is a viscous, unactive, insipid, inodorous liquor. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

INOFFENSIVE. † adj. [in and offensive.]

1. Giving no scandal; giving no provocation.

A stranger, inoffensive, unprovoking. Fleetwood.

However inoffensive we may be in other parts of our conduct, if we are found wanting in this trial of our love, we shall be disowned by God as traitors. Rogers.

2. Giving no uneasiness; causing no terror.

Should infants have taken offence at any thing, mixing pleasant and agreeable appearances with it, must be used, till it be grown inoffensive to them. Locke.

3. Harmless; hurtless; innocent.

The dervish, and other santouns or enthusiasts, being in the croud, express their zeal by turning round so long together, and with such swiftness, as will hardly be credited, which by custom is made inoffensive. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 326.

For drink the grape

She crushes, inoffensive must. Milton, P. L.

With whate'er gall thou sett'st thyself to write,
Thy inoffensive satires never bite.

Dryden.

Hark, how the cannon, inoffensive now,
Gives signs of gratulation.

Philips.

4. Unembarrassed; without stop or obstruction. A Latin mode of speech.

From hence a passage broad,
Smooth, easy, inoffensive, down to hell.

Milton, P. L.

So have I seen a river gently glide,
In a smooth course, and inoffensive tide;
But if with dams its current we restrain,
It bears down all, and foams along the plain.

Addison, Ovid.

INOFFENSIVELY.† adv. [from inoffensive.]

Without appearance of harm; without harm.

Though were she [Poetry] a more unworthy mistress, I think she might be inoffensively served with the broken messes of our twelve o'clock hours, which homely service she only claimed and found of me, for that short while of my attendance.

Bp. Hall, Postscript to his Satires.

He had many that lived inoffensively under his empire and government.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 263.

To live lovingly, quietly, inoffensively.

Milton, Tetrachordon.

He would not spare to give seasonable reproof, and wholesome advice when he saw occasion. I never knew any that would do it so freely, and that knew how to manage that freedom of speech so inoffensively.

Bp. Lloyd, Sermon, p. 30.

The Israelites had hitherto lived inoffensively among them.

Patrick on Gen. xxiv. 21.

This vulgar tar—appears to be an excellent balsam, containing the virtues of most other balsams, which it easily imparts to water, and by that means readily and inoffensively insinuates them into the habit of the body.

Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 10.

INOFFENSIVENESS.† n. s. [from inoffensive.]

Harmlessness; freedom from appearance of harm.

What is the ground of this their pretended inoffensiveness?

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 139.

INOFFICIOUS.† adj. [inofficiosus, Lat.]

1. Not civil; not attentive to the accommodation of others. This is Dr. Johnson's definition of the word, without an example; against which Mr. Mason has protested, insisting that the word will not bear such an interpretation, but that it is a Latinism, as in the following passage from Ben Jonson, having the sense of "unfit for any office." But he has heedlessly blamed the great lexicographer; and the Latin inofficiosus is unkind, undutiful; and such is the meaning in the verses that follow. The river is upbraided for being wanting in dutiful or civil attention.

Up, thou tame river, wake:

And from thy liquid limbs this slumber shake:

Thou drown'st thyself in inofficious sleep.

B. Jonson, Part of the King's Entertainment.

2. Applied by civilians to that will, in which they are omitted, or but slightly provided for, who ought chiefly to be considered.

Bullockar.

INOPERATION.* n. s. [from operation.]

Production of effects; agency; influence.

Here is not a cold and feeble prevention, but an effectual inoperation, yea, a powerful creation.

Bp. Hall, Hom. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 74.

A true temper of a quiet and peaceable estate of the soul upon good grounds can never be attained without the inoperation of that Holy Spirit, from whom every good gift, and every perfect giving, proceedeth. Bp. Hall, of Contentation, § 25.

INO'PINATE.† adj. [inopinatus, Lat.; inopiné, Fr.] Not expected.

INOPPORTUNE.† adj. [inopportunos, Lat.] Unseasonable; inconvenient.

INOPPORTUNELY.* adv. [from inopportune.] Unseasonably; inconveniently.

That holy exercise may not be done inopportunately. Donne, Lett. to Sir H. G. Poems, p. 269.

You have taken me, said he, rather inopportunately to-day.

Dialogues on the Amusements of Clergymen, p. 208.

INO'RDINACY.† n. s. [from inordinatè.] Irregularity; disorder. It is safer to use inordination.

Inordinacy and immorality of mind.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 145.

O powerful God, on those of us who are yet unregenerate, bestow thy restraining grace, which may curb and stop our natural inordinacy!

Hammond, Works, iv. 683.

They become very sinful by the excess, which were not so in their nature: that inordinacy sets them in opposition to God's designation.

Gov. of the Tongue.

INO'RDINATE.† adj. [in ordinatus, Lat.] Irregular; disorderly; deviating from right.

These people were wisely brought to allegiance; but being straight left unto their own inordinate life, they forgot what before they were taught.

Spenser on Ireland.

Thence raise

At least distempered, discontented thoughts;

Vain hopes, vain aims, inordinate desires,

Blown up with high conceits, ingendering pride.

Milton, P. L.

From inordinate love and vain fear comes all unquietness of spirit.

Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

INO'RDINATELY.† adv. [from inordinate.] Irregularly; not rightly.

Which constrained him forcibly

For to love a certain body,

Above all other inordinately.

Skelton, Poems, p. 161.

Neither the study of philosophy, neither remembrance of his dear friend,—could withdraw him from that unkind appetite, but that of force he must love inordinately that lady whom his said friend had determined to marry.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 123. b.

As soon as a man desires any thing inordinately, he is presently disquieted in himself. Bp. Taylor.

INO'RDINATENESS.† n. s. [from inordinate.] Want of regularity; intemperance of any kind.

Out of pusillanimity or inordinateness a man prostitute himself to those unworthy conditions and actions of sinful pleasure, that misbecome a man, a Christian.

Bp. Hall, Fall of Pride.

They are pursued with inordinateness.

Feltham, Res. i. o.

Those good things which we abuse to sin by the inordinateness of our minds.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 36.

INORDINATION.† n. s. [from inordinate.] Irregularity; deviation from right.

This is inordination of zeal.

Bp. Taylor, Sermon, p. 185.

Schoolmen and casuists, having too much philosophy to clear a lie from that intrinsic inordination and deviation from right reason, inherent in the nature of it, held that a lie was absolutely and universally sinful.

South.

INO'RGANICAL.† adj. [in and organical.] Void of organs or instrumental parts.

Whether it be organical or inorganical.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 26.

Many of these mushroom sets are like those inorganical creatures bred upon the banks of Nilus, which perished quickly, after they were bred, for want of fit organs.

Bp. Bramhall, Schism Guarded, p. 354.

We come to the lowest and the most inorganical parts of matter.

Locke.

TO INO'SCULATE.† v. n. [in and osculum, Latin.] To unite by opposition or contact.

This fifth conjugation of nerves is branched by inosculating with nerves. Derham, Physico-Theol.

TO INO'SCULATE.* v. a. To insert; to join in or among.

It is an opinion, received by many, that the sap circulates in plants as the blood in animals; that it ascends through capillary arteries in the trunk, into which are inosculated other vessels of the bark answering to veins.

Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 34.

INOSCU'LATI'ON.† n. s. [from inosculate.] Union by conjunction of the extremities.

The almost infinite ramifications and inosculations of all the several sorts of vessels may easily be detected by glasses.

Ray.

The grand junction is an inosculation of the grand trunk.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

INQUEST.† n. s. [enqueste, Fr.; inquisitio, Lat.]

1. Judicial enquiry or examination.

What confusion of face shall we be under, when that grand inquest begins; when an account of our opportunities of doing good, and a particular of our use or misuse of them, is given in?

Atterbury.

2. [In law.] The inquest of jurors, or by jury, is the most usual trial of all causes, both civil and criminal; for in civil causes, after proof is made on either side, so much as each part thinks good for himself, if the doubt be in the fact, it is referred to the discretion of twelve indifferent men, impanelled by the sheriff; and as they bring in their verdict so judgement passes: for the judge saith, the jury finds the fact thus; then is the law thus, and so we judge.

Cowel.

3. Enquiry; search; study.

This is the laborious and vexatious inquest that the soul must make after science.

South.

TO INQUIET.* v. a. [old Fr. inquieter.] To disquiet; to trouble; to disturb.

Conscience confounded the reason, it croketh the will, and enquyeteth the soule.

Bp. Fisher, Ps. 11, 12.

INQUIETA'TION.* n. s. [from inquiet.] Disturbance; annoyance. Obsolete.

How many selye personages, by outrage in riot, gaminge, and excesse of apparayle, be enduced to theft and robbery, and sometime to murder; to the inquietation of good men, and finally to their owne destruction.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 106. b.

INQUI'ETUDE.† n. s. [inquietude, Fr.; inquietudo, inquietas, Lat.] Disturbed state; want of quiet; attack on the quiet.

Having had such experience of his fidelity and observance abroad, he found himself engaged in honour to support him at home from any farther inquietude.

Wolton.

Iron, that has stood long in a window, being thence taken, and by a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of inquietude and discontentment till it attain the former position. Wotton.

The youthful hero, with returning light,
Rose anxious from the inquietudes of night.

Pope, Odyssey.
TO INQUINATE. v. a. [inquino, Lat.]

To pollute; to corrupt.

An old opinion it was, that the ibis feeding upon serpents, that venomous food so inquinates their oval conceptions, that they sometimes came forth in serpentine shapes. Brown.

INQUINATION.† n. s. [inquinatio, Lat.; from inquinate.] Corruption; pollution.

Their causes and axioms are so full of imagination, and so infected with the old received theories, as they are mere inquinations of experience, and concoct it not. Bacon.

The middle action, which produceth such imperfect bodies, is fitly called by some of the ancients inquinatio, or inconcoction, which is a kind of putrefaction. Bacon.

An exemption from the stains and inquinations of youth. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. Pref.

INQUIRABLE.† adj. [from inquire.] Of which inquisition or inquest may be made.

There be many more things inquirable by you. Bacon, Charge, &c. p. 19.

The second thing inquirable, is, who it was that brought him forth; and that was Jehoiada, the priest. Turner, Serm. (1661.) p. 3.

TO INQUIRE. v. n. [enquirer, Fr.; inquirō, Lat.]

1. To ask questions; to make search; to exert curiosity on any occasion; with of before the person asked.

We will call the damsel, and inquire at her mouth. Shakespeare. Gen. xxiv. 87.

Herod — inquired of them diligently.

They began to inquire among themselves, which of them it was that should do this thing. St. Matt. ii. 7.

He sent Hadoram to king David, to inquire of his welfare. St. Luke, xxii. 23.

It is a subject of a very noble inquiry, to inquire of the more subtle perceptions; for it is another key to open nature, as well as the house. 1 Chron. xviii. 10.

2. It is used with into when something is already imperfectly known. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

It may deserve our best skill to inquire into those rules, by which we may guide our judgement. South.

The step-dame poison for the son prepares;
The son inquires into his father's years. Dryden.

3. Sometimes with of.
Under their grateful shade Æneas sat;
His left young Pallas kept, fix'd to his side,
And oft of winds inquir'd, and of the tide. Dryden, Æn.

4. With after when something is lost or missing; in which case for is likewise used.

Inquire for one Saul of Tarsus. Acts, ix. 11.
They are more in danger to go out of the way, who are marching under a guide that will mislead them, than he that is likelier to be prevailed on to inquire after the right way. Locke.

5. With about, when fuller intelligence is desired.

To those who inquired about me, my lover would answer, that I was an old dependent upon his family. Swift.

6. To make examination.

Awful Rhadamanthus rules the state:
He hears and judges each committed crime,
Enquires into the manner, place, and time.

Dryden, Æn.

TO INQUIRE. v. a.

1. To ask about; to seek out: as, he inquired the way.

To call; to name. Obsolete.

Canute had his portion from the rest,
The which he call'd Canutium, for his hire,
Now Cantium, which Kent we commonly inquire.
Spenser, F. Q.

3. It is now more commonly written enquire.

INQUIRENT.* adj. [inquirens, Lat.] Inquiring into; wishing to know.

Delia's eye,

As in a garden, roves, of hues alone

INQUIRER. n. s. [from inquire.]

1. Searcher; examiner; one curious and inquisitive.

What satisfaction may be obtained from those violent disputers, and eager inquirers into what day of the month the world began?

Brown, Vulg. Err.

What's good doth open to the inquirers stand,
And itself offers to the accepting hand. Denham.

Superficial inquirers may satisfy themselves that the parts of matter are united by ligaments. Glanville, Sceptis.

This is a question only of inquirers, not disputers, who neither affirm nor deny, but examine. Locke.

Late inquirers by their glasses find,
That every insect of each different kind,
In its own egg, cheer'd by the solar rays,
Organs involv'd and latent life displays. Blackmore.

2. One who interrogates; one who questions.

INQUIRY. n. s. [from inquire.]

2. Examination; search.

This exactness is absolutely necessary in inquiries after philosophical knowledge, and in controversies about truth. Locke.

As to the inquiry about liberty, I think the question is not proper, whether the will be free, but whether a man be free? Locke.

I have been engaged in physical inquiries. Locke.

It is a real inquiry, concerning the nature of a bird, or a bat, to make their yet imperfect ideas of it more complete. Locke.

Judgement or opinion, in a remoter sense, may be called invention: as when a judge or a physician makes an exact inquiry into any cause. Grew, Cosm. Sacra.

INQUISITION.† n. s. [inquisition, Fr. inquisitio, Lat.]

1. Judicial inquiry.

When he maketh inquisition for blood, he remembereth them: he forgetteth not the cry of the humble. Ps. ix. 12.

When inquisition was made of the matter, it was found out. Esth. ii. 23.

With much severity, and strict inquisition, were punished the adherents and aids of the late rebels. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Though it may be impossible to recollect every failing, yet you are so far to exercise an inquisition upon yourself, as, by observing lesser particulars, you may the better discover what the corruption of your nature sways you to. Bp. Taylor.

By your good leave,
These men will be your judges: we must stand

The inquisition of their rallery
On our condition.

Southerne.

2. Examination; discussion.

We were willing to make a pattern or precedent of an exact inquisition. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To INSCRIBE. v. a. [inscribo, Latin; inscrive, French.]

1. To write on any thing. It is generally applied to something written on a monument, or on the outside of something. It is therefore more frequently used with on than in.

In all you write to Rome, or else

To foreign princes, ego & rex meus
Was still inscrib'd. Shakspere, Hen. VIII.

Connatural principles are in themselves highly reasonable, and deducible by a strong process of ratiocination to be most true; and consequently the high exercise of ratiocination might evince their truth, though there were no such originally inscribed in the mind. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Ye weeping loves! the stream with myrles hide,
And with your golden darts, now useless grown,
Inscribe a verse on this relenting stone. Pope.

2. To mark any thing with writing; as, I inscribed the stone with my name.

3. To assign to a patron without a formal dedication.

One ode, which pleased me in the reading, I have attempted to translate in Pindarick verse: 'tis that which is inscribed to the present earl of Rochester. Dryden.

4. To draw a figure within another.

In the circle inscribe a square.

Notes to Creech's Manilius.

INSCRIBER.* n. s. [from To inscribe.] One who inscribes.

I should then hope to be taught from such learning and knowledge what all those elementary characters, and lineal diagrams, mean to express, which Kircher has passed by unnoticed, as though making no part of the inscriber's intention. Fournall on Antiq. p. 48.

INSCRIPTION. n. s. [inscription, Fr. inscriptio, Lat.]

1. Something written or engraved.

This avarice of praise in time to come,
Those long inscriptions crowded on the tomb. Dryden.

Wotton on Architecture.

INSISTENCY. n. s. [in and sistio, Latin.] Exemption from thirst.

What is more admirable than the fitness of every creature, for the use we make of him? The docility of an elephant, and the insistency of a camel for travelling in deserts.

Grew.

INSITION. n. s. [insitio, Latin.] The insertion or ingraftment of one branch into another.

Without the use of these we could have nothing of culture or civility: no tillage, grafting, or insition.

Ray.

INSISTURE. n. s. [from insist.] 'This word seems in Shakspeare to signify constancy or regularity, but is now not used.

The heavens themselves, the planets, and the centre,

Observe degree, priority, and place, Insisture, course, proportion, season, form, Office and custom, in all line of order.

Shakspeare.

TO INSNA'RE. v. a. [in and sna're.]

1. To entrap; to catch in a trap, gin, or snare; to inveigle.

Why strew'st thou sugar on that bottled spider, Whose deadly web insna'reth thee about? Shaks.

By long experience Durefy may no doubt Insna're a gudgeon, or perhaps a trout;

Though Dryden once exclaim'd in partial spite; He fish! — because the man attempts to write.

Fenton.

2. To entangle in difficulties or perplexities.

That which in a great part, in the weightiest causes belonging to this present controversy, hath insna'red the judgements both of sundry good and of some well-learned men, is the manifest truth of certain general principles, whereupon the ordinances that serve for usual practice in the church of God are grounded.

Hooker.

That the hypocrite reign not, lest the people be insna'red.

Job, xxxiv. 30.

3. To ensnare is more frequent.

INSNA'RER. n. s. [from insna're.] One that ensnares.

TO INSNA'RL.* v. a. [from sna'rl. See TO SNA'RL.] To entangle.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

INSOBRI'ETY. n. s. [in and sobriety.] Drunkenness; want of sobriety.

He whose conscience upbraids him with all profaneness towards God, and insobriety towards himself, yet if he can but answer, that he is just to his neighbour, he thinks he has quit scores.

Decay of Chr. Piety, p. 121.

INSOCIABLE. adj. [insociable, French; insociabilis, Latin.]

1. Averse from conversation.

If this austere insociable life, Change not your offer made in heat of blood.

Shakspeare.

2. Incapable of connexion or union.

The lowest ledge or row [must] be merely of stone, — closely laid, without mortar, which is a general caution for all parts in building that are contiguous to board or timber, because lime and wood are insociable.

Wotton on Architecture.

TO INSOLATE. v. a. [insolo, Lat.] To dry in the sun; to expose to the action of the sun.

INSOLATION.† n. s. [insolation, Fr. from insolate.]

1. Exposition to the sun.

We use these towers for insolation, refrigeration, conservation, and for the view of divers meteors.

Bacon.

If it have not a sufficient insolation it looketh pale, and attains not its laudable colour: if it be sunned too long, it suffereth a torrefaction.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. [In medicine.] The influence of a scorching sun on the brain.

One case of consequential madness is an effect of insolation, or what the French call coup de soleil. An instance of which I lately met with in a sailor, who became raving mad in a moment, while the sun-beams darted perpendicularly on his head.

Battie on Madness.

INSOLENCE.† n. s. [insolence, French; INSOLENCY. † n. s. [insolentia, Lat.]

Pride exerted in contemptuous and overbearing treatment of others; petulant contempt.

They could not restrain the insolency of O'Neal, who, finding none now to withstand him, made himself lord of those few people that remained.

Spenser on Ireland.

Such a nature, Ticked with good success, disdains the shadow Which he treats on at noon; but I do wonder His insolence can brook to be commanded Under Cominius.

Shakspeare.

The troubles of ambition, and the insolencies of traitors, and the violences of rebels.

Bp. Taylor, Sermon. (1653), p. 19.

Flown with insolence and wine. Milton, P. L. Publick judgements are the banks and shores upon which God breaks the insolency of sinners, and stays their proud waves.

Tillotson.

The steady tyrant man, Who with the thoughtless insolence of power, For sport alone, pursues the cruel chace.

Thomson.

The fear of any violence, either against her own person or against her son, might deter Penelope from using any endeavours to remove men of such insolence and power.

Broome.

TO INSOLENCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To insult; to treat with contempt. A very bad word.

The bishops, who were first faulty, insolenced and assaulted.

King Charles.

INSOLENT.† adj. [insolent, Fr. insolens, Latin.]

1. Unaccustomed. This is the primary sense of the word, unnoticed by Dr. Johnson and our other lexicographers.

If one chance to derive anie word from the Latine, which is insolent to their ears, — they forthwith make a jest at it.

Pettie, Introd. to Guazzo's Civil Conversation, (1586.)

2. Contemptuous of others; haughty; overbearing.

We have not pillaged those rich provinces which we rescued: victory itself hath not made us insolent masters.

Atterbury.

INSOLENTLY.† adv. [insolenter, Latin.] With contempt of others; haughtily; rudely.

She, — by a king and conqueror made so great, Into her own self-praise most insolently brake.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 2.

Not unlearnedly mad, or insolently wedded unto their own wills. Montagu, App. to Cæs. p. 8.

What I must disprove, He insolently talk'd to me of love. Dryden.

Not faction, when it shook thy regal seat, Not senates, insolently loud, Those echoes of a thoughtless crowd, Could warp thy soul to their unjust decree.

Dryden.

Briant, naturally of an haughty temper, treated him very insolently, more like a criminal than a prisoner of war.

Addison.

INSOLIDITY.* n. s. [in and solidity.] Want of solidity; weakness.

A demonstration of the insolidity of this exception against Mr. Mede.

More, Myst. of Godl. (1660.) p. 201.

INSOLVABLE.† adj. [insolvable, Fr. in and solve.]

1. Not to be solved; not to be cleared; inextricable; such as admits of no solution, or explication.

Spend a few thoughts on the puzzling inquiries concerning vacuums, the doctrine of infinities, indivisibles, and incommensurables, wherein there appear some insolvable difficulties.

Watts on the Mind.

2. That cannot be paid.

3. Not to be loosed.

To guard with hands

Insolvable these gifts.

Pope, Odys.

INSOLUBLE. adj. [insoluble, Fr. insolubilis, Latin.]

1. Not to be cleared; not to be resolved.

Admit this, and what shall the Scripture be but a snare and a torment to weak consciences, filling them with infinite scrupulosities, doubts insoluble, and extreme despair.

Hooker.

2. Not to be dissolved or separated.

Stony matter may grow in any part of a human body; for when any thing insoluble sticks in any part of the body, it gathers a crust about it.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

INSOLVENCY.† n. s. [from insolvent.] Inability to pay debts. An act of insolvency is a law by which imprisoned debtors are released without payment.

Even the dear delight

Of sculpture, paint, intaglios, books, and coins, Thy breast, sagacious prudence! shall connect With filth and beggary, nor disdain to link With black insolvency.

Shenstone, Economy, P. ii.

INSOLVENT. adj. [in and solvo, Latin.] Unable to pay.

By publick declaration he proclaimed himself insolvent of those vast sums he had taken upon credit.

Howell.

A farmer accused his guards for robbing him of oxen, and the emperor shot the offenders; but demanding reparation of the accuser for so many brave fellows, and finding him insolvent, compounded the matter by taking his life.

Addison.

An insolvent is a man that cannot pay his debts.

Watts.

Insolvent tenant of incumber'd space. Smart.

INSOMUCH. conj. [in so much.]

1. So that; to such a degree that.

It hath ever been the use of the conquerour to despise the language of the conquered, and to force him to learn his: so did the Romans always use, insomuch that there is no nation but is sprinkled with their language.

Spenser.

To make ground fertile, ashes excel; insomuch as the countries about Ætna have amended made them, for the mischiefs the eruptions do.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Simonides was an excellent poet, insomuch that he made his fortune by it.

L'Estrange.

They made the ground uneven about their nest, insomuch that the slate did not lie flat upon it, but left a free passage underneath. Addison, Guardian.

2. This word is growing obsolete.

To INSPECT.† v. a. [inspicio, inspectum, Latin.] To look into by way of examination.

Return, ye days, when endless pleasure
 I found in reading, or in leisure!
 When calm around the common room
 I puff'd my daily pipe's perfume;
 Rode for a stomach, and inspected
 At annual bottlings, corked selected!

Warton, Progr. of Discontent.

INSPECT.* n. s. [from the verb.] Nice or close examination. Not in use.

Not so the man of philosophick eye
 And inspect gave; the waving brightness he Curious surveys. Thomson, Autumn.

INSPECTION. n. s. [inspection, Fr. inspectio,
 Latin.]

1. Prying examination; narrow and close survey.

With narrow search, and with inspection deep,
 Consider every creature. Milton, P. L.
 Our religion is a religion that dares to be understood; that offers itself to the search of the inquisitive, to the inspection of the severest and the most awakened reason; for, being secure of her substantial truth and purity, she knows that for her to be seen and looked into, is to be embraced and admired, as there needs no greater argument for men to love the light than to see it. South.

2. Superintendence; presiding care.

In the first sense it should have into before the object, and in the second sense may admit over; but authors confound them.

We may safely conceal our good deeds, when they run no hazard of being diverted to improper ends, for want of our own inspection. Atterbury.

We should apply ourselves to study the per-fections of God, and to procure lively and vigorous impressions of his perpetual presence with us, and inspection over us. Atterbury.

The divine inspection into the affairs of the world,
 doth necessarily follow from the nature and being of God; and he that denies this, doth implicitly deny his existence. Bentley.

INSPECTOR. n. s. [Latin.]

1. A prying examiner.

With their new light his bold inspectors press,
 Like Cham, to shew their father's nakedness.
Denham.

2. A superintendent.

Young men may travel under a wise inspector or tutor to different parts, that they may bring home useful knowledge. Watts.

INSPERSED.* part. adj. [inspersus, Fr.
inspersus, Lat.] Sprinkled or cast upon.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

INSPESSION.† n. s. [inspersio, Latin.] A sprinkling upon.

We stain the heart with so many blots and vicious inspersions. Bp. Taylor, Sermon. (1651.) p. 93.

Some light inspersions of truth to make them
 appetitious, passable, and toothsome.

Brief Descript. of Fanatics, (1650.) p. 17.

INSPEXIMUS.* n. s. [Latin.] The first word of ancient charters confirming a grant already made by a former king or benefactor, and of letters patent; an exemplification: It implies, We have inspected it.

This road is specified, by the names of "strata"
 and "magna via," in an inspeeximus charter of Henry the Third to Tarent-abbey in Dorsetshire.
Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 66.

To INSPIRE.† v. a. [in and sphere.] To place in an orb or sphere.

I will insphere her
 In regions high and starry.

Drayton on his Mistress.

Not rubies of the rock such red inspher'd.
Sandys, Lament. ch. 4.

Where those immortal shapes
 Of bright aerial spirits live inspher'd,
 In regions mild of calm and serene air.

Milton, Comus.

INSPIRABLE. adj. [from inspire.] That may be drawn in with the breath; which may be infused.

To these inspirable hurts, we may enumerate those they sustain from their expiration of ful-giginous steams. Harvey.

INSPIRATION. n. s. [from inspire.]

1. The act of drawing in the breath.

In any inflammation of the diaphragm, the symptoms are a violent fever, and a most exquisite pain increased upon inspiration, by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Arbuthnot.

2. The act of breathing into any thing.

3. Infusion of ideas into the mind by a su- perior power.

I never spoke with her in all my life.
 — How can she then call us by our names,
 Unless it be by inspiration? Shakspeare, Com. of Err.
 Your father was ever virtuous, and holy men at their death have good inspirations.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

We to his high inspiration owe,
 That what was done before the flood we know.

Denham.

What the tragedian wrote, the late success
 Declares was inspiration, and not guess. Denham.
Inspiration is when an overpowering impression of any proposition is made upon the mind by God himself, that gives a convincing and indubitable evidence of the truth and divinity of it: so were the prophets and the apostles inspired. Watts.

To INSPIRE.† v. n. [inspiro, Latin; inspirer, French.]

1. To draw in the breath; opposed to expire.

If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stopt, it suddenly yields to nature, and dies.
Walton.

2. To blow, as a gentle wind does.

Her yellow locks, crisped like golden wyre,
 About her shoulders were loosely shed,
 And, when the wind amongst them did inspire,
 They waved like a penon wyde dispreid.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. iii. 30.

To INSPIRE. v. a.

1. To breathe into.

Ye nine, descend and sing,
 The breathing instruments inspire. Pope.

2. To infuse by breathing.

He knew not his Maker, and he that inspired into him an active soul, and breathed in a living spirit. Wisd. xv. 11.

3. To infuse into the mind; to impress upon the fancy.

I have been troubled in my sleep this night;
 But dawning day new comfort hath inspired.
Shakspeare.

To the heart inspir'd
 Vernal delight. Milton, P. L.

4. To animate by supernatural infusion.

Nor the inspir'd
 Castalian spring. Milton, P. L.
 Erato, thy poet's mind inspire,
 And fill his soul with thy celestial fire.

Dryden, Æn.

The letters are often read to the young religious,
 to inspire them with sentiments of virtue. Addis.

5. To draw in with the breath.

By means of suppurous coal smoaks the lungs are stifled and oppressed, whereby they are forced to inspire and expire the air with difficulty, in comparison of the facility of inspiring and expiring

 the air in the country. Harvey.

His baleful breath inspiring as he glides;
 Now like a chain around her neck he rides.

Dryden.

INSPIRER. n. s. [from inspire.] One that inspires.

To the infinite God, the omnipotent creator and preserver of the world, the most gracious redeemer, sanctifier, and inspurer of mankind, be all honour.
Derham.

To INSPIRIT. v. a. [in and spirit.] To animate; to actuate; to fill with life and vigour; to enliven; to invigorate;
 to encourage.

It has pleased God to inspirit and actuate all his evangelical methods by a concurrence of supernatural strength, which makes it not only eligible but possible; easy and pleasant to do whatever he commands us. Decay of Chr. Piety.

A discreet use of becoming ceremonies renders the service of the church solemn and affecting, in-spirits the sluggish, and inflames even the devout worshipper. Atterbury.

The courage of Agamemnon is inspired by love of empire and ambition.

Pope, Pref. to the Iliads.

Let joy or ease, let affluence or content,
 And the gay conscience of a life well spent,
 Calm every thought, inspirit every grace,
 Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.

To INSPISSATE. v. a. [in and spissus,
 Lat.] To thicken; to make thick.

Sugar doth inspiassate the spirits of the wine, and maketh them not so easy to resolve into vapour.

Bacon.

This oil, farther inspiassated by evaporation, turns into balm. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

INSPISSATE.* adj. [from the verb.]
 Thick.

The gum or inspiassate juice of a plant.
Greenhill, Art of Embalm. p. 253.

INSPISSATION. n. s. [from inspiassate.] The act of making any liquid thick.

The effect is wrought by the inspiassation of the air. Bacon.

Recent urine will crystallize by inspiassation, and afford a salt neither acid nor alkaline.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

INSTABILITY. n. s. [instabilitas, Lat.; instabilitè, Fr. from instabilis, Lat.] Incon-stancy; fickleness; mutability of opinion or conduct.

Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another; such a fickleness cannot but be fatal to our country. Addison, Freehold.

INSTABLE.† adj. [instable, old French;
instabilis, Lat.] Inconstant; changing.
 See UNSTABLE.

In this instable and uncertain age, who have with that steadiness of mind and clearness of judgement stuck to the truth and purity of the protestant religion, as discerning the vast difference betwixt it and popery.

More, Exp. of Sev. Ch. Ded. to Ld. Roberts, (1669.)

INSTABLENESS.* n. s. [from instable.]
 Fickleness; mutability.

There cannot be two more pregnant instances of the lubricity and instableness of mankind, than the decay of these two ancient nations.

Howell, Lett. ii. 57.

The very faculty of reason (as we find it too true by late experience) is subject to the same instableness. Howell, Lett. iv. 19.

To INSTALL. v. a. [installer, Fr.; in and stall.] To advance to any rank or office, by placing in the seat or stall proper to that condition.

She reigns a goddess now among the saints,
That whilom was the saint of shepherds light,
And is installed now in heaven's bight. Spenser.

Cramer is return'd with welcome,
Install'd archbishop of Canterbury. Shakspeare.

The king chose him master of the horse, after this he was installed of the most noble order. Wotton.

INSTALLATION. n. s. [installation, Fr.;
from install.] The act of giving visible possession of a rank or office, by placing in the proper seat.

Upon the election the bishop gives a mandate for his installation. Ayliffe, Parergon.

INSTALLMENT. † n. s. [from install.]

1. The act of installing.

It is not easy

To make lord William Hastings of our mind
For the instalment of this noble duke

In the seat royal? Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Would I could hire

These fine invincible fiddlers to play to me

At my instalment. Bertram, and Fl. Prophets.

The time of his instalment into his priesthood.
Hammond, Works, iv. 526.

2. The seat in which one is installed.

Search Windsor-castle, elves,

The several chairs of order look you scour;

Each fair instalment, coat and several crest

With loyal blazon evermore be blest! Shakspeare.

INSTANCE. † n. s. [instance, Fr.]

1. Importunity; urgency; solicitation.

Christian men should much better frame themselves to those heavenly precepts which our Lord and Saviour with so great instancy gave us concerning peace and unity, if we did concur to have the ancient councils renewed. Hooker.

2. Motive; influence; pressing argument.

Not now in use.

She dwells so securely upon her honour, that folly dares not present itself. Now, could I come to her with any direction in my hand, my desires had instance and argument to commend themselves. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

The instances that second marriage move,
Are base respects of thrift, but none of love.

Shakspeare.

3. Prosecution or process of a suit.

The instance of a cause is said to be that judicial process which is made from the contestation of a suit, even to the time of pronouncing sentence in the cause, or till the end of three years.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

4. Example; document.

Yet doth this accident

So far exceed all instance, all discourse,

That I am ready to distrust mine eyes. Shakspeare.

In furnaces of copper and brass, where vitriol is often cast in, there riseth suddenly a fly, which sometimes moveth on the walls of the furnace;
sometimes in the fire below; and dieth presently as soon as it is out of the furnace: which is a noble instance, and worthy to be weighed. Bacon.

We find in history instances of persons, who, after their prisons had been flung open, have chosen rather to languish in their dungeons, than stake their miserable lives and fortunes upon the success of a revolution. Addison.

The greatest saints are sometimes made the most remarkable instances of suffering. Atterbury.

Suppose the earth should be removed nearer to the sun, and revolve for instance in the orbit of Mercury, the whole ocean would boil with heat.

Bentley.

The use of instances is to illustrate and explain a difficulty; and this end is best answered by such instances as are familiar and common.

Baker on Learning.

5. State of any thing.

These seem as if, in the time of Edward the
First, they were drawn up into the form of a law in the first instance. Hal.

6. Occasion; act.

The performances required on our part, are no other than what natural reason has endeavoured to recommend, even in the most severe and difficult instances of duty. Rogers.

A soul supreme in each hard instance try'd
Above all pain, all anger, and all pride. Pope.

If Eusebia had lived as free from sin as it is possible for human nature, it is because she is always watching and guarding against all instances of pride. Law, Serious Call.

TO INSTANCE. v. n. [from the noun.] To give or offer an example.

As to false citations, that the world may see how little he is to be trusted, I shall instance in two or three about which he makes the loudest clamour.
Tillotson.

In tragedy and satire, this age and the last have excelled the ancients; and I would instance in Shakspeare of the former, in Dorset of the latter sort. Dryden, Jew.

INSTANCED.* part. adj. [from instance.]
Given in proof, or as an example.

That worthy divine did not heedfully observe the great difference betwixt these instanced degrees.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 4. C. 5.

INSTANT. adj. [instant, Fr.; instans,
Lat.]

tinuing instant in prayer. Rom. xii. 12.

2. Immediate; without any time intervening; present.

Our good old friend bestow

Your needful counsel to our businesses,

Which crave the instant use. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

'The instant stroke of death denounc'd to-day,

Nor native country thou, nor friend shalt see;

Nor war hast thou to wage, nor year to come;

Impending death is thine, and instant doom. Prior.

3. Quick; making no delay.

Instant without disturb they took alarm.

Milton, P. L.

Griev'd that a visitant so long should wait

Unmark'd, unhonour'd, at a monarch's gate;

Instant he flew with hospitable haste,

And the new friend with courteous air embrac'd. Pope.

INSTANT. n. s. [instant, Fr.]

1. Instant is such a part of duration wherein we perceive no succession.

Locke.

There is scarce an instant between their flourishing and their not being. Hooker.

Her nimble body yet in time must move,

And not in instants through all places stride;

But she is nigh and far, beneath, above,

In point of time, which thought cannot divide. Davies.

At any instant of time the moving atom is but in one single point of the line; therefore all but that one point is either future or past, and no other parts are co-existent or contemporary with it.

Bentley, Serm.

2. A particular time.

I can at any unseasonable instant of the night, appoint her to look out at her lady's chamber window. Shakspeare.

3. It is used in low and commercial language for a day of the present or current month.

erect a lion's head. Addison, Guardian.

INSTANTANEITY.* n. s. [from instanta- neous.] Unpremeditated production.

[They] have no sort of claim to be called verses, beside their instantaneity. Shenstone.

INSTANTANEOUS. adj. [instantaneus, Lat.]

Done in an instant; acting at once without any perceptible succession;
acting with the utmost speed; done
with the utmost speed.

This manner of the beginning or ceasing of the deluge doth not at all agree with the instantaneous actions of creation and annihilation.

Burnet, Theory.

The rapid radiance instantaneous strikes

Th' illumin'd mountain. Thomson.

INSTANTANEOUSLY. adv. [from instanta- neous.] In an indivisible point of time.

What I had heard of the raining of frogs came to my thoughts, there being reason to conclude that those came from the clouds, or were instanta- neously generated. Derham.

INSTANTLY.* adj. [instantaneus, Lat.]

Our elder word for instantaneous.

Reaching forth itself largely in very quick and instantaneous motions to all those things which are capable of it [light]. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 43.

INSTANTLY.† adv. [instanter, Lat.]

As several winds arise,

Just so their natures alter instantly. May, Virg.

TO INSTAUTE. v. a. [in and statue.]

1. To place in a certain rank or condition.

This kind of conquest does only instate the victor in these rights, which the conquered prince had.

Hal.

Had this glistening monster been born to poverty, he could not have been so bad: nor, perhaps, had thy birth instated thee in the same greatness, would'st thou have been better. South.

The first of them being eminently holy and dear to God, should derive a blessing to his posterity on that account, and prevail at last to have them also accepted as holy, and instated in the favour of God.

Atterbury.

2. To invest. Obsolete.

For his possessions,

Although by confiscation they are ours,

We do instate and widow you withal. Shakspeare.

TO INSTAURATE.* v. a. [instaurao,
Lat.; instaurer, Fr.] To reform;
to repair; to supply with improvement.

It is far more easy to overthrow the positive assertions of others, than to instaurate better in their room. Smith on old Age, (1666), p. 256.

INSTAURATION.† n. s. [instauration, Fr.;
instauratio, Lat.] Restoration; reparation; renewal.

They, instead of fruit,

Vary the form of speech, and instead of the word church, make it a question in politics, whether the monument be in danger. Swift.

2. Equal to.

This very consideration to a wise man is instead of a thousand arguments, to satisfy him, that, in those times, no such thing was believed. Tillotson.

INSTEAD.† adv. In the place; in the room. Used without of, it ceases to be a preposition, and becomes an adverb.

He in derision sets

Upon their tongues a various spirit, to raise Quite out their native language, and instead
To sow a jangling noise of tongues unknown. Swift.

TO INSTEAD. v. a. [in and steep.] Milton, P. L.

1. To soak; to macerate in moisture.
Suffolk first died, and York, all haggled over,
Comes to him where in gore he lay instead'd. Shakespeare.

2. Lying under water.

The gutter'd rocks, and congregated sands,
Traitors instead'd to clog the guiltless keel. Shakespeare, Othello.

INSTEP. n. s. [in and step.] The upper part of the foot where it joins to the leg.

The caliga was a military shoe with a very thick sole, tied above the instep with leather thongs. Arbutnot on Coins.

TO INSTIGATE.† v. a. [instigo, Lat. instiguer, Fr. from the Greek σίζω, or σίζω, to prick, to goad.] To urge to ill; to provoke or incite to a crime.

If a servant instigates a stranger to kill his master, this being murder in the stranger as principal, of course the servant is accessory only to the crime of murder, though he would have been guilty, as principal, of petty treason. Blackstone.

INSTIGATION. n. s. [instigation, Fr. from instigate.] Incitement to a crime; encouragement; impulse to ill.

Why, what need we

Commune with you of this? But rather follow
Our forceful instigation. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

It was partly by the instigation of some factious malecontents that bare principal stroke amongst them. Bacon.

Shall any man that wilfully procures the cutting of whole armies to pieces, set up for an innocent? As if the lives that were taken away by his instigation were not to be charged upon his account. L' Estrange.

We have an abridgement of all the baseness and villainy that both the corruption of nature and the instigation of the devil could bring the sons of men to. South.

INSTIGATOR. n. s. [instigateur, Fr. from instigate.] Inciter to ill.

That sea of blood is enough to drown in eternal misery the malicious author or instigator of its effusion. King Charles.

Either the eagerness of acquiring or the revenge of missing dignities, have been the great instigators of ecclesiastical feuds. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

TO INSTILL. v. a. [instillo, Lat. instiller, Fr.]

1. To infuse by drops.

He from the well of life three drops instill'd. Milton, P. L.

2. Insinuate any thing imperceptibly into the mind; to infuse.

Though assemblies be had indeed for religion's sake, hurtful nevertheless they may easily prove, as well in regard of their fitness to serve the turn of hereticks, and such as privily will soonest adventure to instill their poison into men's minds. Hooker.

He had a farther design to instill and insinuate good instruction, by contributing to men's happiness in this present life. Calamy.

Those heathens did in a particular manner instill the principle into their children of loving their country, which is far otherwise now-a-days. Swift.

INSTILLATION.† n. s. [instillatio, Lat. from instil.]

1. The act of pouring in by drops.

Colgrave.

INSTINCT.† adj. [instinct, Fr. instinctus, Latin.] Moved; animated.

Forth rush'd with whirlwind sound

The chariot of paternal deity,
Flashing thick flames, wheel within wheel un-drawn,

Itself instinct with spirit, but convoy'd,

By four cherubick shapes. Milton, P. L.

Coffee-house wits, instinct by me, can correct an author's style, and display his minutest errors, without understanding a syllable of his matter or his language! Swift, Battle of the Books.

INSTINCT. n. s. [instinct, Fr. instinctus, Lat. This word had its accent formerly on the last syllable.] Desire or aversion acting in the mind without the intervention of reason or deliberation; the power determining the will of brutes.

In him they fear your highness' death,
And mere instinct of love and loyalty,
Makes them thus forward in his banishment. Shakespeare.

Thou knowest I am as valiant as Hercules; but beware instinct; the lion will not touch the true prince: instinct is a great matter. I was a coward on instinct; I shall think the better of myself and thee, during my life; I for a valiant lion, and thee for a true prince. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

But providence or instinct of nature seems, Or reason though disturb'd, and scarce consulted, To have guided me aright. Milton, S. A.

Nature first pointed out my Portius to me, And easily taught me by her secret force To love thy person, ere I knew thy merit; Till what was instinct grew up into friendship. Addison.

The philosopher avers,
That reason guides our deed, and instinct theirs.
Instinct and reason how shall we divide? Prior.

Reason serves when press'd: But honest instinct comes a volunteer. Pope.

TO INSTINCT.† v. a. [instinctus, Lat.] To impress as an animating power. This, neither musical nor proper, was perhaps introduced by Bentley, Dr. Johnson says; but it was in use long before Bentley's time.

God would never have instincted the appetite of pleasure, and the faculties of enjoying it, so strongly in man, if He had not meant that in decency he should make use of them.

Feltham, Res. of the Use of Pleasure.

What native unextinguishable beauty must be impressed and instincted through the whole, which the defecation of so many parts by a bad printer and a worse editor could not hinder from shining forth. Bentley, Pref. to Milton.

INSTINCTION.* n. s. [instinctus, Lat.] Instinct. This word preceded instinct. Obsolete.

This natural instinction of creatures.

Sir T. Elgot, Gov. fol. 149.

INSTINCTIVE. adj. [from instinct.] Acting without the application of choice or reason; rising in the mind without apparent cause.

Rais'd

By quick instinctive motion up I sprung,
As thitherward endeavouring. Milton, P. L.

It will be natural that Ulysses's mind should forebode; and it appears that the instinctive pre-sage was a favourite opinion of Homer's. Broome on the Odyssey.

INSTINCTIVELY. adv. [from instinctive.] By instinct; by the call of nature.

The very rats

Instinctively had quit it. Shakespeare, Tempest.

TO INSTITUTE.† v. n. [instituo, institutum, Lat. instituer, Fr.]

1. To fix; to establish; to appoint; to enact; to settle; to prescribe.

God then instituted a law natural to be observed by creatures; and therefore, according to the manner of laws, the institution thereof is described as being established by solemn injunction. Hooker.

Here let us breathe, and haply institute
A course of learning and ingenious studies. Shakespeare.

To the production of the effect they are determined by the laws of their nature, instituted and imprinted on them by inimitable wisdom. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Fasting kills by the bad state, not by the insufficient quantity of food. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

INSUFFICIENTLY. adv. [from insufficient.] With want of proper ability; not skillfully.

INSUFFLATION.* n. s. [in and sufflo, Lat.] The act of breathing upon.

Insufflations, that is, blowing upon. Fulke, Retentive, &c. (1580.) p. 168.

Imposition of hands is a custom of parents in blessing their children, but taken up by the apostles instead of that divine insufflation which Christ used. Hammond on Fundamentals.

St. Basil, expressly comparing the divine insufflation upon Adam with that of Christ (St. John, xx. 22.) upon the Apostles, tells us that 'twas the same Son of God by whom God gave the insufflation, then indeed together with the soul, but now into the soul. Bp. Bull, Works, iii. 1125.

INSUITABLE.* adj. [in and suitable.] Not suitable.

Many other rites of the Jewish worship seemed to him insuitable to the Divine nature. Burnet, Life of Ld. Rochester, p. 73.

INSULAR.* adj. [insulaire, Fr.; insular, Lat.]

Belonging to an island. Insulary only is exemplified by Dr. Johnson; but insular was in use as soon, or perhaps sooner, than insulary. Cotgrave translates the French word into insular.

Druina, being surrounded with the sea, is hardly to be invaded, having many other insulary advantages. Honell.

Such is the system of insular subordination, which, having little variety, cannot afford much delight in the view. Johnson, Journ. West. Islands.

INSULAR.* n. s. [insularis, n. s. Lat.] An islander.

It is much to be lamented, that our insulars, who act and think so much for themselves, should yet, from grossness of air and diet, grow stupid or doat sooner than other people, who, by virtue of elastic air, water-drinking, and light food, preserved their faculties to extreme old age. Bp. Berkeley, Sirius, § 109.

TO INSULATE.* v. a. [from insula, Lat.] To make an island.

The Eden here forms two branches, and insulates the ground. Pennant, Tour.

Ibid.

INSULSITY.* n. s. [insulsitas, Lat.; from insulse.] Stupidity. Cockram.

INSULT.† n. s. [insultus, Lat.; insult, French.]

1. The act of leaping upon any thing. In this sense it has the accent on the last syllable: the sense is rare, Dr. Johnson says, citing Dryden.

The bull's insult at four she may sustain,
But after ten from nuptial rites refrain.

Dryden, Virg.

Terrible balls of flame bursting forth near the foundations with frequent insults, and burning divers times the workmen, rendered the place inaccessible.

Whitby, Gen. Pref. to his Par. on the N. Test. p. xxviii.

2. Act or speech of insolence or contempt.

The ruthless sneer that insult adds to grief.

Savage.

Take the sentence seriously, because raileries are an insult on the unfortunate.

Broom on the Odyssey.

To INSULT. v. a. [insultier, Fr.; insulto, Latin.]

1. To treat with insolence or contempt. It is used sometimes with over, sometimes without a preposition.

The poet makes his hero, after he was glutted by the death of Hector, and the honour he did his friend by insulting over his murderer, to be moved by the tears of king Priam. Pope.

2. To trample upon; to triumph over.

It pleas'd the king his master very lately
To strike at me upon his misconstruction;
When he conjunct, and flatt'ring his displeasure,
Tript me behind; being down, insulted, rail'd,
And put upon him such a deal of man,
That wortied him. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

So 'scapes the insulting fire his narrow jail,

And makes small outlets into open air. Dryden.

Bentley, Serm.

INTELLECTIVE.† adj. [intellectif, Fr. from intellect.]

1. Having power to understand.

Because the intellective soul is not of necessity serving to any other faculty or power, therefore is she as lady, mistress, and queen, over all the other powers, faculties, or virtues of the soul.

Bryskett, Disc. of Civil Life, (1606), p. 46.

In the section of bodies, we find man, of all sensible creatures, to have the fullest brain to his proportion, and that it was so provided by the Supreme Wisdom for the lodging of the intellective faculties.

Wotton on Education, Rem. p. 81.

If a man as intellective be created, then either he means the whole man, or only that by which he is intellective.

Glanville.

2. To be perceived by the intellect, not the senses.

Instead of beginning with arts most easy, (and those be such as are most obvious to the sense,) they present their young unarticulated novices with the most intellective abstractions of logic and metaphysics.

Milton on Education.

INTELLECTUAL. adj. [intellectuel, French; intellectualis, low Latin.]

1. Relating to the understanding; belonging to the mind; transacted by the understanding.

Religion teaches us to present to God our bodies as well as our souls: if the body serves the soul in actions natural and civil, and intellectual, it must not be eased in the only offices of religion.

Bp. Taylor.

2. Mental; comprising the faculty of understanding; belonging to the mind.

Logic is to teach us the right use of our reason, or intellectual powers.

Watts.

3. Ideal; perceived by the intellect, not the senses.

Pope.

4. Having the power of understanding.

Anaxagoras and Plato term the Maker of the world an intellectual worker.

Hooker.

Who would lose,
Though full of pain, this intellectual being,
Those thoughts that wander through eternity,
To perish rather, swallow'd up and lost,
In the wide womb of uncreated night,
Devoid of sense and motion?

Milton, P. L.

5. Proposed as the object not of the senses but intellect: as, Cudworth names his book the intellectual system of the universe.

INTELLECTUAL. n. s. Intellectual; understanding; mental powers or faculties. This is little in use.

Her husband —

Whose higher intellectual more I shun.

Milton, P. L.

The fancies of most, like the index of a clock, are moved but by the inward springs of the corporeal machine; which, even on the most sublimed intellectual, is dangerously influential.

Glanville, Scopsis.

I have not consulted the repute of my intellectuals in bringing their weaknesses into such discerning presences.

Glanville.

INTELLECTUALIST.* n. s. [from intellectual.] One who over-rates the human understanding.

Upon these intellectualists, which are notwithstanding commonly taken for the most sublime and divine philosophers, Heraclitus gave a just censure.

Bacon, Adv. of Learning, B. 1.

INTELLECTUALITY.* n. s. [from intellectual.] The state of intellectual power.

Seneca signifies little in this place, he being no better than a cosmoplastic atheist, i. e. he made a certain plastic or spermatick nature, devoid of all animality or conscious intellectuality, to be the highest principle in the universe.

Hallywell, Melamp. (1681), p. 84.

INTELLIGENCE.† } n. s. [from intelligence,
INTELLIGENCY. } French; intelligentia, Latin. "Intelligence, which cometh of intelligentia, is the perceiving of that which is first conceived by understanding, called intellectus. Also intelligence is now used for an elegant worde, where there [are] mutual treaties or appointments, eyther by letters or messages, speciall ye concerninge warres, or like other great affaires, between princes or noble men." Sir T. Elyot, Gov. ed. 1580. fol. 201.]

INTE'MPESTIVE. * adj. [intempestif, French; intempestivus, Latin.] Unseasonable; untimely: not suitable to time or occasion. This word was formerly much in use: it is now perhaps obsolete.

Many diseases accompany, as incubus, apoplexy, — frequent wakings, and terrible dreams; intempestive laughing, weeping, sighing.

Barton, Anat. of Mel. p. 180.

Being aged and diseased — he married a widow of London. A chief favourite at that time, — bearing of this intempestive marriage, took advantage thereof, [and] caused it to be told to the queen. Harrington, Br. View of the Ch. p. 114.

Intempestive bashfulness gets nothing.

Hales, Rem. p. 143.

INTE'MPESTIVELY. * adv. [from intempestive.] Unsuitable to time or occasion.

They [indiscreet pastors] still aggravate sin, thunder out God's judgements without respect, intempestively rail at and pronounce them damned, in all auditories, for giving so much to sports and honest recreations, making every small fault, and thing indifferent, an irremissible offence.

Barton, Anat. of Mel. p. 698.

INTE'MPESTIVITY. * n. s. [from intempestive.] Unsuitableness to time or occasion.

Our moral books tell us of a vice, which they call akasia intempestivity; an indiscretion, by which unwise and unexperienced men see not what befits times, persons, occasions.

Hale, Serm. at Eton. p. 4.

Courtesies, not acknowledged, are suspected that they were either guilty of intempestivity and unseasonableness, or else of want of worth and glory.

Gayton on D. Quix. p. 127.

INTE'NABLE. † adj. [in and tenable.] Indefensible; as, an intenable opinion; an intenable fortress. See also INTE'NIBLE.

His lordship's [Bolingbroke's] proposition may be expressed in plainer terms, "That the more the world has advanced in real knowledge, the more it has discovered of the intenable pretensions of the Gospel." To expose the futility of his maxim, I shall first of all shew, that it was not ignorance which gave the Gospel its early credit: which is a presumption, at least, that knowledge hath not since hurt it. — From [the] presumptions I proceed to a direct proof, that as the infant growth of the Gospel was not retarded by that flourishing state of knowledge which saw it in its birth; so the revived knowledge of these latter ages did greatly support the established honours of Revelation, by illustrating its primeval truths. Since the more careful cultivation of natural and moral science; Philosophy, History, and Antiquity, have all contributed to spread a new light over the evidences of it. Warburton, Serm. xiii.

To INTE'ND. v. a. [intendo, Latin.]

1. To stretch out. Obsolete.

The same advancing high above his head,
With sharp intended sting so rude him smote,
That to the earth him drove, as stricken dead.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. To enforce; to make intense; to strain.

What seems to be the ground of the assertion, is the magnified quality of this star, conceived to cause or intend the heat of this season, we find that wiser antiquity was not of this opinion.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

By this the lungs are intended or remitted.

Hale.

This vis inertiae is essential to matter, because it neither can be intended or remitted in the same body; but is always proportional to the quantity of matter. Cheyne.

Magnetism may be intended and remitted, and is found only in the magnet and in iron.

Newton, Opt.

3. To regard; to attend; to take care of.

This they should carefully intend, and not when the sacrament is administered, imagine themselves called only to walk up and down in a white and shining garment. Hooker.

Having no children, she did with singular care and tenderness intend the education of Philip.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

The king prayed them to have patience till a little smoke, that was raised in his country, was over; slighting, as his manner was, that openly, which nevertheless he intended seriously.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

4. To pay regard or attention to. This sense is now little used.

They could not intend to the recovery of that country of the north. Spenser.

Neither was there any who might share in the government, while the king intended his pleasure.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

The earl was a very acute and sound speaker, when he would intend it. Watson.

Go therefore, mighty powers! intend at home, While here shall be our home, what best may ease The present misery. Milton, P. L.

Their beauty they, and we our loves suspend; Nought can our wishes, save thy health, intend.

Waller.

5. To mean; to design.

The opinion she had of his wisdom was such as made her esteem greatly of his words; but that the words themselves sounded so, as she could not imagine what they intended. Sidney.

The gods would not have delivered a soul into the body, which hath arms and legs, only instruments of doing, but that it were intended the mind should employ them. Sidney.

Thou art sworn

As deeply to effect what we intend,
As closely to conceal what we impart.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

According to this model Horace writ his odes and epodes; for his satires and epistles, being intended wholly for instruction, required another style. Dryden.

INTE'NDANT. n. s. [French.] An officer of the highest class, who oversees any particular allotment of the publick business.

Nearchus, who commanded Alexander's fleet, and Onesicrates, his intendant general of marine, have both left relations of the Indies. Arbutnot.

INTE'NDER. * n. s. [from intend.] One who has intention to do a thing.

Sherwood.

They that do me good and know not of it, are causes of our benefit, though I do not owe them my thanks; and I will rather bless them as instruments, than condemn them as not intenders.

Feltham, Res. i. 32.

To INTE'NDER. * See To ENTENDER.

INTE'NDMENT. † n. s. [entendement, Fr.
intendimento, Italian.]

1. Attention; patient hearing; accurate examination. This word is only to be found in Spenser.

Be nought hereat dismay'd,
Till well ye wote, by grave intendment,
What woman, and wherefore, doth me upbraid.

Spenser, F. Q. i. xii. 31.

2. Understanding; skill.

For she of herbs had great intendment.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. v. 32.

3. Consideration; thought.

He that is of reason's skill bereft,
And wants the staff of wisdom him to stay,
Is like a ship in midst of tempest left,
Withouten helm or pilot her to sway:
Full sad and dreadful is that ship's event;
So is the man that wants intendment.

Spenser, Tears of the Muses.

INTENDMENT. n. s. [entendement, Fr.] Intention; design.

Out of my love to you, I came hither to acquaint you withal; that either you might stay him from his intendment, or brook such disgrace well as he shall run into.

All that worship for fear, profit, or some other by-end, fall more or less within the intendment of this emblem.

To INTENERATE.† v. a. [in and tener, Lat.] To make tender; to soften.

Intenerate that heart, that sets so light
The truest love that ever yet was seen.

This acknowledgement of your singular love I was never more fit to pay you than at the present, being intenerated in all my inward feelings and affections by new sickness.

So have I seen the little purls of a stream sweat through the bottom of a bank, and intenerate the stubborn pavement, till it hath made it fit for the impression of a child's foot.

Sp. Taylor, Sermon. (1651.) p. 204.

Autumn vigour gives,

Equal, intenerating, milky grain.

Philips.

INTENERATION.† n. s. [from intenerate.]

The act of softening or making tender.

Sp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

INTENSITY.* n. s. [from intense.] Excess.

The number engaged in crimes, instead of turning them into laudable acts, only augments the quantity and the intensity of the guilt.

Burke.

INTENSIVE. adj. [from intense.]

1. Stretched or encreased with respect to itself; which may admit encrease of degree.

As his perfection is infinitely greater than the perfection of a man, so it is infinitely greater than the perfection of an angel; and were it not infinitely greater than the perfection of an angel, it could not be infinitely greater than the perfection of a man, because the intensive distance between the perfection of an angel and of a man is but finite.

2. Intent; unremitted.

Tired with that assiduous attendance and intensive circumspection, which a long fortune did require, he was not unwilling to bestow upon another some part of the pains.

Wotton.

INTENSIVELY. adv. By encrease of degree.

God and the good angels are more free than we are, that is, intensively in the degree of freedom, but not extensively in the latitude of the object; according to a liberty of exercise, but not of specification.

Bp. Bramhall against Hobbes.

INTENT. adj. [intensus, Lat.]

1. Anxiously diligent; fixed with close application; formerly with to.

So many testimonies, interchangeable warrants, and counterfoments, running through the hands and resting in the power of so many several persons, is sufficient to argue and convince all manner of falsehood. Bacon, Off. of Alienation.

2. Following each other in alternate succession.

Just under the line they may seem to have two winters and two summers; but there also they have four interchangeable seasons, which is enough whereby to measure. Holder.

All along the history of the Old Testament we find the interchangeable providences of God, towards the people of Israel, always suited to their manners. Tillotson.

INTERCHANGEABLENESS.* n. s. [from interchangeable.]

1. Exchange.

Nothing but its interchangeableness with cash can restore the credit of paper. Huskisson on Currency, p. 144.

2. Alternate succession.

Continued with as much courage as interchangeableness of success. Fuller, Holy War, p. 128.

INTERCHANGEABLY. adv. [from interchangeable.] Alternately; in a manner whereby each gives and receives.

In these two things the east and west churches did interchangeably both confront the Jews and concur with them. Hooker.

This in myself I boldly will defend, And interchangeably hurl down my gage Upon this overweening traitor's foot. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

These articles were signed by our plenipotentiaries, and those of Holland; but not by the French, although it ought to have been done interchangeably; and the ministers here prevailed on the queen to execute a ratification of articles, which only one part had signed. Swift.

INTERCHANGEMENT. n. s. [inter and change.] Exchange; mutual transference.

A contract of eternal bond of love, Confirm'd by mutual joinder of your hands, Attested by the holy close of lips, Strengthen'd by interchangement of your rings. Shakspeare.

INTERCIPIENT. adj. [intercipiens, Lat.] Obstructing; catching by the way.

INTERCIPIENT. n. s. [intercipiens, Latin.] An intercepting power: something that causes a stoppage.

They commend repellents, but not with much astringency, unless as intercipiens upon the parts above, lest the matter should thereby be impacted in the part. Wiseman.

INTERCISSION.† n. s. [intercisio, Latin.] Interruption.

By cessation of oracles we may understand their intercision, not abscission, or consummate desolation. Brown.

Some sudden intercisions of the light of the sun. Spenser on Prod. p. 233.

In a larger and better sense, after these intercisions, the throne of David was continued. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 6.

To INTERCLUDE.† v. n. [intercludo, Lat.] To shut from a place or course by something intervening; to intercept.

The voice is sometimes intercluded by a hoarseness, or viscous phlegm cleaving to the aspera arteria. Holder.

Laying siege against their cities, intercluding their ways and passages, and cutting off from them all commerce with other places or nations. Pococke on Hosca, p. 53.

INTERCLUSION.† n. s. [interclusus, Lat.] Obstruction; interception. Cockeram.

INTERCOLUMNIATION.† n. s. [inter and columna, Lat.] The space between the pillars.

The distance or intercolumniation may be near four of his own diameter, because the materials commonly laid over this pillar were rather of wood than stone. Wotton.

The new pillars are nearly equal in bulk to the old ones; and the intercolumniation remains much the same. Louth, Life of Wykeham, § 6.

To INTERCO'ME.* v. n. [inter and come.] To interpose; to interfere.

They must give me leave to note with what affection and resolution, notwithstanding the pope's intercoming to make himself a party in the quarrel, the bishops did adhere to their own sovereign. Proceedings against Garnet, (1606,) Rr. b.

To INTERCOMMUN.† v. n. [inter and commun.]

1. To feed at the same table.

Wine is to be forborne in consumptions, for that the spirits of the wine do prey upon the roscid juice of the body, and intercommun with the spirits of the body, and so rob them of their nourishment. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. To use commons promiscuously.

Beasts of several adjoining parishes do promiscuously intercommun together, "per cause de vicinage." Blount, Anc. Ten. p. 145.

Common because of vicinage, or neighbourhood, is where the inhabitants of two townships, which lie contiguous to each other, have usually intercommoned with one another. Blackstone.

INTERCOMMUNITY.† n. s. [inter and community.]

1. A mutual communication or community.

Probably it is from this era, that we are to date that remarkable intercommunity and exchange of each other's compositions, which we discover to have taken place at some early period between the French and English minstrels. Bp. Percy, Ess. on the Anc. Eng. Minstrels. § 4.

It admits of no tolerance, no intercommunity of various sentiments, not the least difference of opinion. Louth to Warburton, p. 13.

2. A mutual freedom or exercise of religion.

Admitting each other's pretensions, there must needs be amongst them perfect harmony and intercommunity; there being no room for any other disputes but whose god was most powerful. Such was the root and foundation of this sociability of religion in the ancient world, so much envied by our modern infidels; the effect of their absurdities, as they were religions; and of their imperfections, as they were societies.

Warburton, All. of Ch. and State, (1st edit.) p. 139.

INTERCOSTAL. adj. [intercostal, Fr. inter and costa, Lat.] Placed between the ribs.

The diaphragm seems the principal instrument of ordinary respiration, although to restrained respiration the intercostal muscles may concur.

Boyle.

By the assistance of the inward intercostal muscles, in deep aspirations, we take large gulps of air.

More.

INTERCOURSE. n. s. [entrecours, Fr.]

1. Commerce; exchange.

This sweet intercourse

Of looks, and smiles; for smiles from reason flow,
To brute deny'd, and are of love the food.

Milton, P. L.

2. Communication; followed by with.

The choice of the place requireth many circumstances, as the situation near the sea, for the commodiousness of an intercourse with England.

Bacon.

What an honour is it that God should admit us into such a participation of himself? That he should give us minds capable of such an intercourse with the Supreme Mind?

Atterbury.

TO INTERCUR* v. n. [intercurro, Lat.]

To intervene; to come in the mean time; to happen.

So that there intercur no sin in the acting thereof.

Shelton, D. Quixote, iv. 9.

When the notice of parties intercurs, I do believe, although I am a simple man and a sinner, that there is no kind of enchantment.

Ibid. iv. 10.

INTERCURRENCE* n. s. [from intercurro, Lat.]

1. Passage between.

Consider what fluidity saltpetre is capable of, without the intercurrence of a liquor.

Boyle.

2. Intervention; occurrence.

To be sagacious in such intercurrences is not superstition, but wary and pious discretion; and to condemn such hints were to be deaf unto the speaking hand of God.

Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 29.

INTERCURRENT* adj. [intercurrens, Lat.]

1. Running between.

If into a phial, filled with good spirit of nitre, you cast a piece of iron, the liquor, whose parts moved placidly before, meeting with particles in the iron, altering the motion of its parts, and perhaps that of some very subtle intercurrent matter, those active parts presently begin to penetrate, and scatter abroad particles of the iron.

Boyle.

2. Occurring; intervening.

Making fair representations of intercurrent passages between them.

Barrow, Works, i. 285.

Those household cares, and other intercurrent troubles which his condition then brought with it.

Evelyn, ii. 3. § 15.

INTERDEAL. n. s. [inter and deal.] Traffick; intercourse. Obsolete.

The Gaulish speech is the very British, which is yet retained of the Welshmen and Brions of France; though the alteration of the trading and interdeal with other nations has greatly altered the dialect.

Spenser on Ireland.

TO INTERDICT* vt. a. [interdire, interdict, Fr. interdico, Lat.]

1. To forbid; to prohibit.

He — hongred not after the interdicted fruit, as Adam did.

Stapleton, Fort. of the Faith, (1565,) fol. 160.

Alone I pass'd, through ways
That brought me on a sudden to the tree
Of interdicted knowledge.

By magic fenc'd, by spells encompass'd round,
No mortal touch'd this interdicted ground.

Tickell.

2. To prohibit from the enjoyment of communion with the church.

An archbishop may not only excommunicate and interdict his suffragans, but his vicar-general may do the same.

Ayliffe.

INTERDICT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Prohibition; prohibiting decree.

Amongst his other fundamental laws, he did ordain the interdicts and prohibitions touching entrance of strangers.

Bacon.

Those are not fruits forbidden, no interdict defends the touching of these viands pure;
Their taste no knowledge works at least of evil.

Milton, P. L.

Had he liv'd to see her happy change,
He would have cancell'd that harsh interdict,
And join'd our hands himself.

Dryden, Don Sebast.

2. A papal prohibition to the clergy to celebrate the holy offices.

Nani carried himself meritoriously against the pope, in the time of the interdict, which held up his credit among the patriots.

Wolton.

INTERDICTION. n. s. [interdiction, French, interdictio, Lat. from interdict.]

1. Prohibition; forbidding decree.

Sternly he pronounc'd
The rigid interdiction, which resounds
Yet dreadful in mine ear.

Milton, P. L.

2. Curse; from the papal interdict. An improper use of the word.

The truest issue of thy throne,
By his own interdiction stands accurst.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

INTERDICTIVE* adj. [from interdict.]

Having power to prohibit.

A timely separation from the flock by that interdictive sentence; lest his conversation unprohibited, or unbranded, might breathe a pestilential murrain into the other sheep.

Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

INTERDICTIONARY. adj. [from interdict.] Belonging to an interdiction.

Ainsworth.

INTERESS* n. s. [Italian, interesse.] Interest; concern; right or title to. Not now in use.

But wote thou this, thou hardy Titanesque,
That not the worth of any living wight
May challenge aught in heaven's interesse.

Spenser, F. Q. vii. iv. 33.

I thought, says his majesty, [K. Charles I.] I might happily have satisfied all interesses.

Id. Halifax's Miscel. p. 144.

TO INTERESS* vt. a. [interessere, French.] To concern; to affect; to give share in; to connect with.

The mystical communion of all faithful men is such as maketh every one to be interessed in those precious blessings, which any one of them receiveth at God's hands.

Hooker.

Now, our joy,
Although the last, not least; to whose young love
The vines of France, and milk of Burgundy,
Strive to be interess'd.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

To love our native country, and to study its benefit and its glory, to be interessed in its concerns, is natural to all men.

Dryden, Æn. Dedic.

TO INTEREST* vt. a. [interest, Latin, it concerns.] To concern; to affect; to exert; to give share in.

Scipio, restoring the Spanish bride, gained a great nation to interest themselves for Rome against Carthage.

Dryden.

This was a goddess who used to interest herself in marriages.

Addison on Medals.

TO INTEREST. v. n. To affect; to move; to touch with passion; to gain the affections; as, this is an interesting story.

INTEREST. n. s. [interest, Lat.; intérêt, Fr.]

1. Concern; advantage; good.

O give us a serious consideration of that one great interest of others, as well as ourselves.

Hammond.

Divisions hinder the common interest and public good.

Temple.

There is no man but God hath put many things into his possession, to be used for the common good and interest.

Calamy.

2. Influence over others.

They who had hitherto preserved them, had now lost their interest.

Clarendon.

Exert, great God, thy interest in the sky;
Gain each kind power, each guardian deity,
That, conquer'd by the publick vow,
They bear the dismal mischief far away.

Prior.

3. Share; part in any thing; participation; as, this is a matter in which we have interest.

Endeavour to adjust the degrees of influence, that each cause might have in producing the effect, and the proper agency and interest of each therein.

Watts.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

TO INTERFERE* vt. n. [inter and ferio, Lat. to strike. Our old lexicography defines it simply, "to knock the legs together." Cockram. Hence the phrase "an interfering horse." Sherwood. Dr. Johnson notices this sense of the word in a citation from the Farrier's dictionary.

Of its application to general use his examples are from Swift and Smalridge. It had been employed at least half a century before they wrote, but with an interpretation accompanying it, as if the use of it was then new: "It is a wonder to see how they interferere, [interfere] and strike one on another, in the point of worshipping of images." Dr. Westfield's Sermons, 4to. 1646. p. 62.]

1. To interpose; to intermeddle.

So cautious were our ancestors in conversation, as never to interfere with party disputes in the state.

Swift.

2. To clash; to oppose each other.

If each acts by an independent power, their commands may interfere. Smalbridge, Serm.

3. A horse is said to interfere, when the side of one of his shoes strikes against and hurts one of his fetlocks, or the hitting one leg against another, and striking off the skin. Farrier's Dict.

INTERFERENCE.* n. s. [from To interfere.] Interposition.

And silent as the moon,
When she deserts the night,
Hid in her vacant interlunar cave.

Milton, S. A.

INTERMAR'RIAGE. n. s. [inter and marriage.] Marriage between two families, where each takes one and gives another.

Because the alliances and intermarriages, among so small a people, might obstruct justice, they have a foreigner for judge of St. Marino.

Addison on Italy.

TO INTERMA'RRY. v. n. [inter and marry.] To marry some of each family with the other.

About the middle of the fourth century, from the building of Rome, it was declared lawful for nobles and plebeians to intermarry.

Swift.

INTERMEAN. n. s. [inter and mean.] Something done in the mean time; interact. See INTERACT. At the close of each of the acts of Ben Jonson's Staple of News is an intermean, not indeed of musick, but of interlocutory discourse. Obsolete.

TO INTERMEDDLE. v. n. [inter and meddle.] To interpose officiously.

The practice of Spain hath been by war, and by conditions of treaty, to intermeddle with foreign states, and declare themselves protectors general of Catholics.

Bacon.

Seeing the king was a sovereign prince, the emperor should not intermeddle with ordering his subjects, or directing the affairs of his realm.

Hayward.

There were no ladies, who disposed themselves to intermeddle in business.

Clarendon.

TO INTERMEDDLE. † v. a. [entremesler, Fr.] To intermix; to mingle. This is perhaps misprinted for intermeddled, Dr. Johnson says; which is not the case; for other good writers, as well as Spenser, (from whom Dr. Johnson cites a solitary example of intermeddle), employ the word.

Many other adventures are intermeddled;—as the love of Britomart, the overthrow of Marinell, the misery of Florimel, &c.

Spenser, Lett. Pref. to his Fairy Queen.

To intermeddle retirement with society, so as one may give sweetness to the other, and both to us!

Bp. Hall, Heaven upon Earth.

Some keep precisely the order of the book, others intermeddle psalms in metre.

Maddox, Vind. of the Ch. of Eng. against Neal, (1733), p. 155.

INTERMEDDLER. n. s. [from intermeddled.] One that interposes officiously; one that thrusts himself into business to which he has no right.

There's hardly a greater pest to government and families, than officious tale-bearers, and busy intermeddlers.

L'Estrange.

Our allies, and our stock-jobbers, direct her majesty not to change her secretary or treasurer, who, for the reasons that these officious intermeddlers demanded their continuance, ought never to have been admitted into the least trust.

Swift.

Shall strangers, saucy intermeddlers, say, Thus far, and thus, are you allow'd to punish?

A. Philips.

INTERME'DIACY. n. s. [from intermediate.] Interposition; intervention. An unauthorised word.

In birds the auditory nerve is affected by only the intermediacy of the columella.

Derham.

INTERME'DIAL. adj. [inter and medius, Lat.] Intervening; lying between; intervention.

The love of God makes a man temperate in the midst of feasts, and is active enough without any intermedial appetites.

Bp. Taylor.

A gardener prepares the ground, and in all the intermedial spaces he is careful to dress it.

Evelyn's Kalendar.

INTERME'DIATE. adj. [intermediat, Fr. inter and medius, Lat.] Intervening; interposed; holding the middle place or degree between two extremes.

Do not the most refrangible rays excite the shortest vibrations for making a sensation of a deep violet, the least refrangible the largest for making a sensation of deep red, and the several intermediate sorts of rays, vibrations of several intermediate bignesses, to make sensations of the several intermediate colours. Newton, Opt.

An animal consists of solid and fluid parts, unless one should reckon some of an intermediate nature as fat and phlegm. Arbuthnot.

Those general natures, which stand between the nearest and most remote, are called intermediate. Watts.

TO INTERMEDATE.* v. n. [from the adjective.] To intervene; to interpose.

The tyranny of his [the sun's] fierce beams reigning here uncontrolled by those intermediating accidents, which conspire to the felicity of other regions. Sir H. Sheere, in Ld. Halifax's Misc. p. 11.

INTERMEDATELY. adv. [from intermediate.] By way of intervention.

TO INTERMELL.* v. n. [entremesler, Fr.] To intermeddle. Obsolete.

To — boldly intermell

With holy things. Marston, Scourge of Vill. (1598.)

TO INTERMELL.† v. a. [entremesler, Fr.] To mix; to mingle. Not in use. Dr. Johnson has corrupted the passage of Spenser, in which intermeddle occurs, to suit his purpose here. Spenser's word is not intermell. See the verb active INTERMEDDLE.

The life of this wretched world is always intermelled with moche bitterness. Bp. Fisher, Ps.

INTERMENT.† n. s. [interment, Fr. from inter.] Burial; sepulture.

Here in England the interments of the dead were anciently farre out of all townes or cities.

Weever, Funer. Mon.

In the noble church of the Grey Friars in London, — four queens, besides upwards of six hundred persons of quality, were buried. These interments imported considerable sums of money into the mendicant societies.

Watson, Hist. E. p. i. 294.

TO INTERMENTION.* v. a. [inter and mention.] To mention among other things; to include; to comprehend.

There is scarce any grievance or complaint come before us in this place, wherein we do not find him intermentioned.

Harbottle Grimstone, Speech in the H. of Com. against Abp. Laud.

INTERMIGRATION. n. s. [intermigration, Fr. inter and migro, Lat.] Act of removing from one place to another, so as that of two parties removing, each takes the place of the other.

Men have a strange variety in colour, stature, and humour; and all arising from the climate, though the continent be but one, as to point of access, mutual intercourse, and possibility of intermigrations.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

INTERMINABLE.† adj. [interminable, Fr. in and termino, Lat.] Immense; admitting no boundary.

Eternitie then is perfitte possession and altogether of life interminable. Chaucer, Boeth. v. pros. 6.

O radiant luminary of light interminable!

Skelton, Poems, p. 121.

An interminable seizure by Satan both in soul and body.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 3.

As from the face of heaven the shatter'd clouds Tumultuous rove, the interminable sky Sublimar swells, and o'er the world expands A purer azure. Thomson, Summer.

INTERMINABLE.* n. s. He, whom no bound or limit can confine; an appellation of the Godhead, like that of Eternal, and finely employed by Milton to denote the divine immensity. Dr. Johnson has cited the following passage as a solitary illustration of the adjective, which the examples prove to be no uncommon word; and here it is, emphatically, a substantive.

As if they would confine the Interminable, And tie him to his own prescript, Who made our laws to bind us, not himself.

Milton, S. A.

INTERMINABLENESS.* n. s. [from interminable.] State of being interminable; endlessness.

The interminableness of those torments, which after this life shall incessantly vex the impious.

Annot. on Glanville, &c. (1682,) p. 59.

INTERMINATE.† adj. [interminate, French; interminatus, Latin.] Unbounded; unlimited.

Within a thicket I repos'd; when round I ruffled up fall'n leaves in heaps, and found, Let fall from heaven, a sleep interminate.

Chapman, Odys.

It is enough for us to confine our sight with this dark veil and interminate horizon.

Bp. Gauden, Serm. and Life of Bp. Brownrigg, (1660,) p. 115.

TO INTERMINATE.* v. a. [intermino, Lat.] To threaten; to menace.

Bullockar.

Enough, enough of these interminated judgements, wherewith, if I would follow the steps of the prophets, I might strike your hearts with just horror.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 163.

INTERMINATION.† n. s. [intermination, Fr. intermino, Lat.] Menace; threat.

The terrors of the law were the intermination of curses upon all those, that ever broke any of the least commandments.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, ch. 5. § 3.

The threats and interminations of the Gospel, those terrors of the Lord, as goads, may drive those brutish creatures who will not be attracted.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

TO INTERMINGLE. v. a. [inter and mingle.] To mingle; to mix; to put some things amongst others.

The church in her liturgies hath intermingled, with readings out of the New Testament, lessons taken out of the law and prophets.

Hooker.

His church he compareth unto a field, where tares, manifestly known and seen by all men, do grow intermingled with good corn.

Hooker.

My lord shall never rest: I'll intermingle every thing he does With Cassio's suit.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Here sailing ships delight the wandering eyes: There trees and intermingled temples rise.

Pope.

INTERMISSION. n. s. [intermission, Fr. intermissio, Latin.]

1. Cessation for a time; pause; intermediate stop.

Came a reeking post, Deliver'd letters, spite of intermission, Which presently they read.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

I count intermission almost the same thing as change; for that, that hath been intermitted, is after a sort new.

Bacon.

The water ascends gently, and by intermissions; but it falls continually, and with force.

Wilkins, Dædalus.

The peasants work on, in the hottest part of the day, without intermission.

Locke.

2. Intervention time.

But, gentle heaven, Cut short all intermission: front to front, Bring thou this fiend of Scotland and myself.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

3. State of being intermitted.

Words borrowed of antiquity, have the authority of years, and out of their intermission do win to themselves a kind of grace-like newness.

B. Jonson.

4. The space between the paroxysms of a fever, or any fits of pain; rest; pause of sorrow.

Rest or intermission none I find.

Milton, S. A.

INTERMISSIVE. adj. [from intermit.] Coming by fits; not continual.

I reduced Ireland, after so many intermissive wars, to a perfect passive obedience.

Howell, Engl. Tears.

As though there were any feriation in nature, or justitiums imaginable in professions, whose subject is under no intermissive but constant way of mutation, this season is commonly termed the physicians' vacation.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO INTERMIT. v. a. [intermitto, Lat.] To forbear any thing for a time; to interrupt.

If nature should intermit her course, and leave altogether, though it were but for a-while, the observation of her own laws.

Hooker.

Run to your houses, fall upon your knees; Pray to the gods, to intermit the plague That needs must light on this ingratitude.

Shakespeare.

His misled, lascivious son, Edward the Second, intermitted so The course of glory.

Daniel, Civil Wars.

The setting on foot some of those arts that were once well known, would be but the reviving of those arts which were long before practised, though intermitted and interrupted by war.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Certain Indians, when a horse is running in his full career, leap down, gather any thing from the ground, and immediately leap up again, the horse not intermitting his course.

Wilkins.

Adam —

Speech intermitted thus to Eve renew'd.

Milton, P. L.

We are furnished with an armour from Heaven, but if we are remis, or persuaded to lay by our arms, and intermit our guard, we may be surprised.

Rogers.

TO INTERMIT.† v. n.

1. To grow mild between the fits or paroxysms. Used of fevers.

Our fever for fully never intermits.

Young, Centaur, Lett. 2.

2. To cease for a time; to be interrupted.

This is the original usage of the word, though Dr. Johnson has barely noticed, in his Dictionary, only the preceding. Yet he has elsewhere used the present.

The bell doth toll for him that thinks it doth; and though it intermit again, yet from that minute, which that occasion wrought upon him, he is united to God.

Donne, Devot. p. 415.

Let me know the exact time your courts

intermit. Johnson, Letter to Boswell, Life, &c.

INTERMITTENT. adj. [intermittent, Fr. intermittens, Lat.] Coming by fits.

To INTERPOINT.* v. a. [inter and point.] To distinguish by stops between words and sentences.

Her heart commands, her words should pass out first,

And then her sighs should interpoint her words.

Daniel, Civ. Wars, ii. 82.

To INTERPOLATE.† v. a. [interpoler, Fr. interpolo, Lat.]

1. To foist any thing into a place to which it does not belong.

How strangely Ignatius is mangled and interpolated, you may see by the vast difference of all copies and editions, Greek and Lat.

Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 115.

They were interpolated and corrupted.

Hammer, View of Antiq. (1677.) p. 419.

The Athenians were put in possession of Salamis by another law, which was cited by Solon, or, as some think, interpolated by him for that purpose.

Pope.

2. To renew; to begin again; to carry on with intermissions. In this sense it is not in use.

This motion of the heavenly bodies themselves seems to be partly continued, and uninterrupted, as that motion of the first moveable, partly interpolated and interrupted.

Hale.

That individual hath necessarily a concomitant succession of interpolated motions; namely, the pulses of the heart, and the successive motions of respiration.

Hale.

INTERPOLATION.† n. s. [interpolation, Fr. from interpolate.] Something added or put into the original matter.

Though they [the epistles of Ignatius] have been basely abused by unworthy persons with their corrupt interpolations, yet have we to this day found among us some remains of the monuments of that eminent and glorious martyr.

Hammer, View of Antiq. p. 492.

It is besides very much enlarged with divers interpolations.

Pref. to Knatchbull's Annot. on the New Test. Camb. (1693.)

I have changed the situation of some of the Latin verses, and made some interpolations.

Cromwell to Pope.

The learned have shewn, that interpolations have happened to other books; but these insertions by other hands have never been considered as invalidating the authority of those books.

Bp. Watson, Apol. for the Bible, (6th edit.) p. 79.

INTERPOLATOR.† n. s. [Latin; interpola-teur, Fr.] One that foists in counterfeit passages.

You or your interpolator ought to have considered.

Swift.

Shall we suppose, that Chaucer followed a more complete copy of the Filostrato than that we have at present, or one enlarged by some officious interpolator?

Watson, Hist. E. P. vol. ii. Add.

To INTERPOLISH.† v. a. [inter and polish.] To polish between.

All this will not fadge, though it be cunningly interpolished by some second hand with crooks and emendations.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 1.

INTERPOSAL. n. s. [from interpose.] 1. Interposition; agency between two persons.

INTERPRETER. n. s. [interprete, Fr.; interpretor, Lat.]

1. An explainer; an expositor; an expounder.

What we oft do best,
By sick interpreters, or weak ones, is
Not ours, or not allow'd: what worst, as oft,
Hitting a grosser quality, is cry'd up
For our best act. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

In the beginning the earth was without form and void; a fluid, dark, confused mass, and so it is understood by interpreters, both Hebrew and Christian. Burnet.

We think most men's actions to be the interpreters of their thoughts. Locke.

2. A translator.

Nor word for word be careful to transfer,
With the same faith as an interpreter. Sherburne.
How shall any man, who hath a genius for history, undertake such a work with spirit, when he considers that in an age or two he shall hardly be understood without an interpreter. Swift.

INTERPU'NCTION.† n. s. [interpunctio, Fr.; interpungo, Lat.] Pointing between words or sentences.

The whole course of our life is full of interpunctions, or commas; death is but the period or full point. Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 499.

INTERREGNUM. n. s. [Latin.] The time in which a throne is vacant between the death of a prince and accession of another.

To whom ensued a vacancy:

Thousand worse passions than posses'd

The interregnum of my breast:

Bless me from such an anarchy!

Cowley, Ballad of the Chronicle.

INTESTINE. adj. [intestin, Fr. intestinus, Latin.]

1. Internal; inward; not external.

Of these inward and intestinal enemies to prayer, there are our past sins to wound us, our present cares to distract us, our distemper'd passions to disorder us, and a whole swarm of loose and floating imaginations to molest us. Duppa.

Intestine war no more our passions wage, Ev'n giddy factions bear away their rage. Pope.

2. Contained in the body.

Intestine stone, and ulcer, colick pangs, And moon-struck madness. Milton, P. L.

A wooden jack, which had almost Lost, by disuse, the art to roast,
A sudden alteration feels,
Increases'd by new intestinal wheels. Swift.

3. Domestic; not foreign. I know not whether the word be properly used in the following example of Shakspeare: perhaps for mortal and intestinal should be read mortal internecine.

Since the mortal and intestinal jars
'Twixt thy seditious countrymen and us,
It hath in solemn synods been decreed,
T' admit no traffick to our adverse towns.

But God, or nature, while they thus contend,
To these intestinal discords put an end.

She saw her sons with purple deaths expire,
A dreadful series of intestinal wars,
Inglorious triumphs, and dishonest scars. Pope.

INTESTINE.† n. s. [intestinum, Lat. intestine, Fr. The word is of no great age in our language. Bishop Reynolds, in his Treatise on the Passions, 1650, uses the Latin intestina for intestines, chap. 16.] The gut; the bowel: most commonly without a singular.

The intestines or guts may be inflamed by an acrid substance taken inwardly.

TO INTHIRST.* v. a. [in and thirst.] To make thirsty.

Intimidates the brave, degrades the great. Irene.

INTIMIDATION.* n. s. [intimidation, Fr. Cotgrave.] Act of intimidating.

INTI'RE. n. s. [integer, Lat.; entier, Fr. better written entire, which see, and all its derivatives.] Whole; undiminished; broken.

The lawful power of making laws, to command whole politic societies of men, belongeth so properly unto the same intire societies, that for any prince to exercise the same of himself, and not either by express commission immediately and personally received from God, or else by authority derived at the first from their consent upon whose persons he imposes laws, it is no better than mere tyranny. Hooker.

INTI'RENESS. n. s. [from intire; better entireness.] Wholeness; integrity.

So shall all times find me the same:
You this intireness better may fulfill,
Who have the pattern with you still. Donne.

TO INTIT'LE.* v. a. [intituler, old Fr.]

To give a title or discriminative name;
now usually written entitle; formerly not so. "Is intituled.—To intitle one's name on a booke." Barret's Alv. 1580.
See TO ENTITLE.

INTO.† prep. [Sax. into; in and to. This word was formerly often used for unto,
and was not laid aside in Shakspeare's time.]

1. Noting entrance with regard to place:
opposed to out of.

Water introduces into vegetables the matter it bears along with it. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

Acrid substances, which pass into the capillary tubes, must irritate them into greater contraction.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Noting entrance of one thing into another.

If iron will acquire by mere continuance an habitual inclination to the side it held, how much more may education, being a constant plight and inurement, induce by custom good habits into a reasonable creature? Wotton.

To give life to that which has yet no being, is to frame a living creature, fashion the parts, and having fitted them together, to put them into a a living soul. Locke.

3. Noting penetration beyond the outside, or some action which reaches beyond the superficies or open part.

To look into letters already opened or dropt is held an ungenerous act. Pope.

4. Noting inclusion real or figurative.

They have denominated some herbs solar and some lunar, and such like toys put into great words. Bacon.

5. Noting a new state to which any thing is brought by the agency of a cause.

Compound bodies may be resolved into other substances than such as they are divided into by the fire. Boyle.

A man must sin himself into a love of other men's sins; for a bare notion of this black art will not carry him so far. South.

Sure thou art born to some peculiar fate, When the mad people rise against the state, To look them into duty; and command An awful silence with thy lifted hand. Dryden, Persius.

It concerns every man that would not trifle away his soul, and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, with the greatest seriousness to enquire into these matters. Tillotson.

He is not a frail being, that he should be tired into compliance by the force of assiduous application. Smalbridge.

In hollow bottoms, if any fountains chance to rise, they naturally spread themselves into lakes, before they can find any issue. Addison on Italy.

It would have been all irretrievably lost, was it not by this means collected and brought into one mass. Woodward.

Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author; and the reader led into a belief, that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue? Atterbury.

It is no ways congruous, that God should be always frightening men into an acknowledgement of the truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence. Atterbury.

A man may where and drink himself into atheism; but it is impossible he should think himself into it. Bentley.

INTOLERABLE. adj. [intolerabilis, Lat.; intolerable, Fr.]

1. Insufferable; not to be endured; not to be born; having any quality in a degree too powerful to be endured.

If we bring into one day's thoughts the evil of many, certain and uncertain, what will be and what will never be, our load will be as intolerable as it is unreasonable. By. Taylor.

His awful presence did the croud surprise, Nor durst the rash spectator meet his eyes; Eyes that confess'd him born for kingly sway, So fierce, they flash'd intolerable day. Dryden.

Some men are quickly weary of one thing: the same study long continued in is as intolerable to them as the appearing long in the same clothes is to a court lady. Locke.

From Param's top th' Almighty rode, Intolerable day proclaim'd the God. Broomie.

2. Bad beyond sufferance.

INTOLERABLENESS. n. s. [from intolerable.]

Quality of a thing not to be endured.

INTOLERABLY. adv. [from intolerable.]

To a degree beyond endurance.

She is intolerably curst, And shrewd, and forward. Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

This Widdington complains of as intolerably insulting. Jenkins, Hist. Exam. of Councils, p. 38.

He [Rowe] has added some lines, intolerably flowery and unnatural. Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

INTOLERANCE. n. s. [intolerance, Fr.]

Want of toleration; want of patience and candour to bear the opinions of others.

And you, my lord, is it you of all men living, that stand forth to accuse another of intolerance of opinions! Louth, Lett. to Warburton, p. 62.

These few restrictions, I hope, are no great stretches of despotism, no very violent exertions of despotism. Burke on the Fr. Revolution.

INTOLERANT. adj. [intolerant, Fr.]

1. Not enduring; not able to endure.

Too great moisture affects human bodies with one class of diseases, and too great dryness with another; the powers of human bodies being limited and intolerant of excesses. Arbuthnot.

2. Not favourable to toleration.

Why, then, am I branded as an intolerant zealot. Louth, Lett. to Warburton, p. 62.

INTOLERANT.* n. s. One who is not favourable to toleration.

You might as well have concluded, that I was a Jew, or a Mahometan, as an intolerant and a persecutor. Louth, Lett. to Warburton, p. 62.

INTOLERATED.* part. adj. [in and tolerate.] Not endured; denied toleration.

I would have ad*l* intolerated in its turn. Ld. Chesterfield.

INTOLERATION.* n. s. [in and toleration.]

Want of toleration.

This noise against the Jew bill proceeds from that narrow mob-spirit of intoleration in religious, and inhospitality in civil matters, which all wise governments should oppose. Ld. Chesterfield.

TO INTO'NB. v. a. [in and tomb.] To inclose in a funeral monument, to bury.

What commandment had the Jews for the ceremony of odours used about the bodies of the dead, after which custom, notwithstanding our Lord was contented that his own most precious blood should be intomb'd? Hooker.

Is't night's predominance or the day's shame, That darkness does the face of earth intomb? Shakspeare.

Mighty heroes' more majestic shades, And youths intomb'd before their fathers' eyes. Dryden.

TO INTONATE. † v. a. [intono, Lat.]

1. To thunder. Dict.

2. To sing together; to sing loudly.

As after a partial, though great and adorable accomplishment of the divine economy, our Saviour once, upon a famous and well-known hour, pronounced τετέλεσται, "It is finished;" so, then, the great, τετέλεσται shall be intonated by the general voice of the whole host of heaven. Harris on the 53d Chap. of Isaiah, (1739), p. 262.

INTONATION. † n. s. [intonation, Fr.; from intonate.]

1. The act of thundering. Dict.

2. Chant; the act of singing together.

Whether poetry or prose were in question, one slow and uniform intonation, consisting of notes of equal or nearly equal length, was exclusively adopted. Mason on Church Music, p. 28.

These were all sung, not merely in simple intonation or chaunt, but in this mode of figurate descendant. Mason on Church Music, p. 90.

TO INTO'NE. v. n. [from intono, or rather from tone; intonner, Fr.] To make a slow protracted noise.

So swells each wind-pipe, ass intonos to ass Harmonick twang. Pope, Dunciad.

TO INTO'RT. v. a. [intortuo, Lat.] To twist; to wreath; to wring.

The brain is a congeries of glands, that separate the finer parts of the blood, called animal spirits; and a gland is nothing but a canal, variously intorted and wound up together. Arbuthnot.

With reverend hand the king presents the gold, Which round the intorted horns the gilder roll'd. Pope.

TO INTOXICATE. v. a. [in and tor- icum, Lat.] To inebriate; to make drunk.

The more a man drinketh of the world, the more it intoxicateth; and age doth profit rather in the powers of understanding than in the virtues of the will and affections. Bacon.

As with new wine intoxicated both, They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel Divinity within them breeding wings, Wherewith to scorn the earth. Milton, P. L.

My early mistress, now my ancient muse, That strong Circian liquor cease to infuse, Wherewith thou didst intoxicate my youth. Denham.

What part of wild fury was there in the bacchanals which we have not seen equalled, if not exceeded, by some intoxicated zealots? Decay of Chr. Piety.

Others, after having done fine things, yet spoil them by endeavouring to make them better; and are so intoxicated with an earnest desire of being above all others, that they suffer themselves to be deceived. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Vegetables by fermentation are wrought up to spirituous liquors, having different qualities from the plant; for no fruit taken crude has the intoxicating quality of wine. Arbuthnot.

INTOXICATE.* part. adj. [from the verb.]

Inebriated.

Our inward eyes be nothing bright, While in this muddy world incarcerated They lie, and with blind passions be intoxicated. More, Sleep of the Soul, iii. 10.

Deep vers'd in books, and shallow in himself, Crude or intoxicate, collecting toys. Milton, P. R.

INTOXICATION. n. s. [from intoxicate.]

Inebriation; ebriety; the act of making drunk; the state of being drunk.

That king, being in amity with him, did so burn in hatred towards him, as to drink of the lees and dregs of Perkin's intoxication, who was every where else detected. Bacon.

Whence can this proceed, but from that besetting intoxication, which verbal magic brings upon the mind. South.

INTRACTABILITY.* n. s. [from intractable.] Ungovernableness.

The other conceding to the prejudices, the wrongheadedness, the intractability of those, with whom it has to deal. Paley, View of the Ev. of the Chr. Rel. v. ii. P. ii. c. 2.

INTRAC'TABLE. adj. [intractabilis, Lat. intractable, Fr.]

1. Ungovernable; violent; stubborn; obstinate.

To love them who love us is so natural a passion, that even the most intractable tempers obey its force. Rogers.

2. Unmanageable; furious.

By what means serpents, and other noxious and more intractable kinds, as well as the more innocent and useful, got together. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

INTRAC'TABLENESS. † n. s. [from intractable.] Obstinacy; perverseness.

I dare say that, their doctrine of predestination is the root of puritanism, and puritanism the root of all rebellious and disobedient intractableness in parliament. Dr. Brooke, Lett. in 1690, Ward's Gresh. Prof. p. 55.

INTRAC'TABLY. adv. [from intractable.]

Unmanageably; stubbornly.

TO INTRANCE.* See TO ENTRANCE.

INTRANQUILLITY. † n. s. [in and tranquillity.] Unquietness; want of rest.

Jactations were used for amusement, and allay in constant pains, and to relieve that intranquillity which makes men impatient of lying in their beds. Temple.

He lived not far from Westminster-abbey, within hearing of the choir, which perhaps did not a little contribute to his intranquillity!

Political Death of Tom Whig, Esq, P.i. (1710), p. 3.

INTRANSIENT.* adj. [in and transient.]
That passeth not away.

An unchangeable, an intransient, indefeasible priesthood. Killingbeck, Serm. p. 93.

INTRANSITIVE.† adj. [intransitivus,
Lat.] In grammar, a verb intransitive is that which signifies an action, not conceived as having an effect upon any object; as, curro, I run.

Clarke's Latin Grammar.

The occasion of such difference is from a question of grammar, whether the verb be in signification intransitive or transitive.

Pococke on Hosea, p. 47.

INTRANSITIVELY.* adv. [from intransi- tive.] According to the nature of an intransitive verb.

Yet again it [the verb] is manifestly, in the same form, used intransitively.

Pococke on Hosea, p. 48.

The difference between verbs absolutely neuter,
and intransitively active, is not always clear.

Louth, Eng. Gram.

INTRAMUTABLE. adj. [in and trans- mutable.] Unchangeable to any other substance.

Some of the most experienced chemists do affirm quicksilver to be intramutable, and therefore call it liquor æternus. Ray on the Creation.

TO INTRA'P.* See TO ENTRAP.

TO INTRÉASURE.† v. a. [in and treasure.]
To lay up as in a treasury.

There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times decess'd;
The which observ'd, a man may prophesy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things
As yet not come to life, which in their seeds
And weak beginnings he intréasured.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

So he [the jeweller] intréasures princes' cabinets,
As thy wealth will their wished libraries.

Chapman on B. Jonson's Sejanus.

TO INTRÉAT.* See TO ENTREAT, and its derivatives.

INTRÉATFUL.* adj. [from intréat.] Full of entreaty.

Humble prayers and intréatful tears.

Spenser, F. Q. v. x. 6.

TO INTRÉNCH. v. n. [in and trencher,
Fr.] To invade; to encroach; to cut off part of what belongs to another;
with on.

Little I desire my sceptre should intrénoch on God's sovereignty, which is the only king of men's consciences. King Charles.

That crawling insect, who from mud began,
Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man!
Durst he, who does but for my pleasure live,
Intrénch on love, my great prerogative?

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

We are not to intrénch upon truth in any conversation, but least of all with children. Locke.

TO INTRÉNCH.† v. a.

1. To break with hollows.

It was this very sword intrénched it.

Shakespeare, All's Well.

Those who care not whose living faces they intrénch with their petulant styles.

B. Jonson, Dedic. of the Fox.

His face

Deep scars of thunder had intrénch'd, and caré'
Sat on his faded cheek. Milton, P. L.

2. To fortify with a trench: as, the allies were intrénched in their camp.

The English, in the suburbs close intrénch'd.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

INTRÉNCHANT. adj. [This word, which is,
I believe, found only in Shakespeare, is thus explained: The intrénchant air means the air which suddenly encroaches and closes upon the space left by any body which had passed through it. Hammer. I believe Shakespeare intended rather to express the idea of indivisibility or invulnerableness, and derived intrénchant, from in privative, and trencher, to cut; intrénchant is indeed properly not cutting, rather than not to be cut; but this is not the only instance in which Shakespeare confounds words of active and passive signification.] Not to be divided; not to be wounded; indivisible.

As easy may'st thou the intrénchant air

With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

INTRÉNCHMENT. n. s. [from intrénch.]
Fortification with a trench.

INTRÉPID. adj. [intrepide, French, in- trepidus, Lat.] Fearless; daring; bold;
brave.

Argyle

Calm and intrepid in the very throat

Of sulphurous war, on Teniers dreadful field.

Thomson.

INTREPÍDITY. n. s. [intrepidité, French.]
Fearlessness; courage; boldness.

I could not sufficiently wonder at the in- trepidity of these diminutive mortals, who durst venture to walk upon my body, without trembling.

Swift, Gullio Trav.

INTREPÍDLY. adv. [from intrepid.] Fearlessly; boldly; daringly.

He takes the globe for the scene; he launches forward intrepidly, like one to whom no place is new. Pope.

INTRICABLE.* adj. [from intricate.] Entangling; ensnaring.

They shall remain captive, and entangled in the amorous intricable net. Shelton, D. Quixot. iii. 7.

INTRICACY. n. s. [from intricate.] State of being entangled; perplexity; invo-lution; complication of facts or notions.

The part of Ulysses in Homer's Odyssey is much admired by Aristotle, as perplexing that fable with very agreeable plots and intricacies, by the many adventures in his voyage, and the subtlety of his behaviour. Addison.

INTRICATE.† adj. [entricate, old Fr.
interwoven; intricatus, Lat.] Entangled;
perplexed; involved; complicated; obscure.

Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate. Hooker.

His stile was fit to convey the most intricate business to the understanding with the utmost clearness. Addison.

TO INTRICATE.† v. a. [from the adjec- tive.] To perplex; to darken. Not proper, not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Camden. Few words have been more in use, or can boast better authority.

Alterations of surnames have so intricated, or rather obscured, the truth of our pedigrees, that it will be no little hard labour to deduce them.

Camden.

However the matter may be intricated by passing through many, perhaps unknown, hands.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, D. 1. C. 6.

Manifold, intricated and distracted divisions amongst men touching Free Will.

Mountain, App. to Cass. p. 76.

Thou shalt your majesty restore me both to the freedom of my thoughts, and of my life; otherwise so intricated that I know not how to unfold it.

Sir H. Wotton to the King, (1628), Rem. p. 564.

The more I strive to unwind

Myself from this meander, I the more
Therein am intricated.

Heywood & Broome's Com. of Lancashire Witches.

That will be to intricate the business.

L. C. Just. Pemberton, Trial of Ld. Grey, (1682.)

INTRICATELY.† adv. [from intricate.]
With involution of one in another; with perplexity.

It is too intricately involved for me so much as to guess at any particulars. Wotton, Rem. p. 457.

The mortal steel past by, leaving his breast
Untouch'd, and in his coat of skins did rest,
Into the which, I know not how, 'twas wove
So intricately, that Mirtillo strove
In vain to pull it out.

Fanshawe, Tr. of Pastor Fido.

That variety of factions, into which we are so intricately engaged, gave occasion to this discourse.

Swift.

INTRICATENESS. n. s. [from intricate.]
Perplexity; involution; obscurity.

He found such intricateness, that he could see no way to lead him out of the maze. Sidney.

INTRICA'TION.* n. s. [intrication, Fr.]
An entanglement; snare; labyrinth;
maze; involution. Not in use. Colgrave.

INTRIGUE.† n. s. [intrigue, Fr. Dr.
Johnson.—Serenius and Lye both deduce it from the Goth. triggwo, an agreement, a compact. Iceland. trigd;
Ital. tregua; low Lat. tregua; Germ.
treuga; old English, treague. Others think that it comes from the Latin in- tricare, to perplex; whence the old French substantive intrigue, which afterwards became intrigue, "On dit in- trigue, et non pas intrigue." Richlet, Dict. Franc. 1655. Serenius, however, says, that the original good meaning of the northern word passed into an evil one. Yet we certainly use intrigue in the sense of to intricate, though it has hitherto been unnoticed. See the verb active TO INTRIGUE. The word is of no great age in our language; and appeared first perhaps in the form of intrigoe. "He knew so well the intrigoes of those times." Bp. Gauden, Anti Baal-

Berith, 1661, p. 278.

1. A plot; a private transaction in which many parties are engaged; usually an affair of love.

These are the grand intrigues of man,
These his huge thoughts, and these his vast desires.

Fauman.

A young fellow long made love, with much artifice and intrigue, to a rich widow.

Addison, Guardian.

The hero of a comedy is represented victorious in all his intrigues. Swift.

Now love is dwindled to intrigue,

And marriage grown a money league. Swift.

2. Intricacy; complication. Little in use.
Though this vicinity of ourselves to ourselves cannot give us the full prospect of all the intrigues

of our nature, yet we have much more advantage to know ourselves, than to know other things without us.
Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

3. The complication or perplexity of a fable or poem; artful involution of feigned transaction.

As causes are the beginning of the action, the opposite designs against that of the hero are the middle of it, and form that difficulty or intrigue which makes up the greatest part of the poem.

Pope.

To INTRIGUE.† v. n. [intriguer, Fr. from the noun.] To form plots: to carry on private designs, commonly of love.

The intriguing and determined genius of Cromwell was forced to bow down to it.

Brady, Ess. on Political Associations, p. 127.

To INTRIGUE.* v. a. [intrico, Lat. from the noun.] To perplex; to render intricate.

Great discursists were apt to intrigue affairs, dispute the prince's resolutions, and stir up the people. L. Addison, W. Barbary, Pref. (1671.)
How doth it [sin] perplex and intrigue the whole course of your lives, and entangle ye in a labyrinth of knavish tricks and collusions.

Scott, Christian Life, i. 4.

INTRIGUER.† n. s. [intriguer, Fr. from intrigue.] One who busies himself in private transactions; one who forms plots; one who pursues women.

I desire that intriguers will not make a pimp of my lion, and convey their thoughts to one another.

Addison.

That club of intriguers who assemble at the Feuillans, and whose cabinet meets at Madame Stahl's, and makes and directs all the ministers, is the real executive government of France.

Burke, Thoughts on French Affairs, (1791.)

INTRIGUINGLY. adv. [from intrigue.] With intrigue; with secret plotting.

INTRINSECAL.† adj. [intrinsecus, Lat. intrinseque, Fr. This word is now generally written intrinsecal, contrary to etymology.]

1. Internal; solid; natural; not accidental; not merely apparent.

There are sins of a contagious nature, apt to diffuse their venom to others; as there are other some, whose evil is intrinsecal to the owner.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

These measures the laws of God not by the intrinsecal goodness and equity of them, but by reluctance and opposition which they find in their own hearts against them.

Tillotson.

The near and intrinsecal and convincing argument of the being of God, is from human nature itself.

Bentley.

2. Intimate; closely familiar. Out of use. He falls into intrinsecal society with Sir John Graham, — who dissuaded him from marriage.

Wotton.

Sir Fulk Greville was a man in appearance intrinsecal with him, or at least admitted to his melancholy hours.

Wotton.

Far off to us, to thee near; yea, intrinsecal.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

INTRINSECALLY. adv. [from intrinsecal.]

1. Internally; naturally; really.

A lie is a thing absolutely and intrinsecally evil.

South.

Every one of his pieces is an ingot of gold, intrinsecally and solidly valuable.

Prior.

2. Within; at the inside.

In his countenance no open alteration; but the less he shewed without, the more it wrought intrinsecally.

Wotton.

If once bereaved of motion, matter cannot of itself acquire it again; nor till it be thrust by some other body from without, or intrinsecally moved by an immaterial self-active substance that can pervade it.

Bentley.

INTRINSECATE.† adj. [This word seems to have been ignorantly formed between intricate and intrinsecal.] Perplexed; entangled. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing Shakespeare. Ben Jonson uses it, evidently, in ridicule, or contempt.

Such smiling rogues as these,
Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain,
Too intrinsecate t'unloose. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Come, mortal wretch,

With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsecate
Of life at once untie. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

There are certainly punctilios, or (as I may more nakedly insinuate them) certain intrinsecate strokes and wards, to which your activity is not yet amounted.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

INTRINSECK. adj. [intrinsecus, Lat.]

1. Inward; internal; real; true.

Intrinsic goodness consists in accordance, and sin in contrariety to the secret will of God, as well as to his revealed. Hammond on Fundamentals.

2. Not depending on accident; fixed in the nature of the thing.

The difference between worth and merit, strictly taken; that is, a man's intrinsec; this, his current value.

Grew.

His fame, like gold, the more 'tis tried,
The more shall its intrinsec worth proclaim.

Prior.

Beautiful as a jewel set in gold, which, though it adds little to intrinsec value, yet improves the lustre, and attracts the eyes of the beholder.

Rogers.

To INTRODUCE. v. a. [introduco, Lat.; introduire, Fr.]

1. To conduct or usher into a place, or to a person.

Mathematicians of advanced speculations may have other ways to introduce into their minds ideas of infinity.

Locke.

2. To bring something into notice or practice.

This vulgar error whosoever is able to reclaim, he shall introduce a new way of cure, preserving by theory as well as practice. Brown, Vulg. Err.

An author who should introduce a sort of words upon the stage, would meet with small applause.

Broome.

3. To produce; to give occasion to.

Whosoever introduces habits in children, deserves the care and attention of their governors.

Locke on Education.

4. To bring into writing or discourse by proper preparatives.

If he will introduce himself by prefaces, we cannot help it.

Layer's Trial.

INTRODUCER. n. s. [introduceur, French, from introduce.]

1. One who conducts another to a place or person.

2. Any one who brings any thing into practice or notice.

The beginning of the earl of Essex I must attribute to my lord of Leicester; but yet as an introducer or supporter, not as a teacher. Wotton.

It is commonly charged upon the army, that the beastly vice of drinking to excess hath been lately, from their example, restored among us; but whoever the introducers were, they have succeeded to a miracle.

Swift.

INTRODUCTION.† n. s. [introduction, Fr.; introductio, Lat.]

1. The act of conducting or ushering any place or person; the state of being ushered or conducted.

2. The act of bringing any new thing into notice or practice.
I will bring thee where thou soon shalt quit
Those rudiments, and see before thine eyes
The monarchies of the earth, their pomp and state,
Sufficient introduction to inform
Thee, of thyself so apt, in regal arts.

Milton, P. R.

The archbishop of Canterbury had pursued the introduction of the liturgy and the canons into Scotland with great vehemence.

Clarendon.

3. The preface or part of a book containing previous matter.

INTRODUCTIVE. adj. [introductif, French, from introduce.] Serving as the means to something else.

The truths of Christ crucified, is the Christian's philosophy, and a good life is the Christian's logic; that great instrumental introductive art, that must guide the mind into the former. South.

INTRODUCTOR.* n. s. [introduceur, Fr.]

One who introduces another to a person or place.

No formality was necessary in addressing Madam Prune, and therefore Leviculus went next morning without an introducer.

Johnson, Rambler, No. 182.

INTRODUCTORY. adj. [from introducitur, Lat.] Previous; serving as a means to something further.

This introductory discourse itself is to be but an essay, not a book.

Boyle.

INTROGRESSION. n. s. [introgressio, Lat.]

Entrance; the act of entering.

INTROIT.† n. s. [introite, old Fr.] The beginning of the mass; the beginning of public devotions, Dr. Johnson says, which is not accurate. "In the first Common Prayer Book of K. Edward VI. before every collect, epistle, and gospel, there is a psalm printed, which contains something prophetic of the evangelical history used upon each Sunday and holyday, or in some way or other proper to the day: which, from its being sung or said, whilst the priest made his entrance within the rails of the altar, was called introitus, or introit." Wheately on the Com. Pr. Ch. v. § viii.

When the exhortation is ended, then shall be song for the introite to the communion this psalm.

Form of Orderynge for Priestes, (1549.) D. iii.

INTROMISSION.† n. s. [intromissio, Lat.]

1. The act of sending in.

If sight be caused by intromission, or receiving in the form of that which is seen, contrary species of forms should be received confusedly together, which Aristotle shews to be absurd.

Peachment on Drawing.

All the reason that I could ever hear alleged by the chief factors for a general intromission of all sects and persuasions into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obstinate, and will not submit to the rules of our church, and that therefore they should be taken away.

South.

2. Admission.

The soft fine yielding Æther gives admission: So gentle Venus to Mercurius dares Descend, and finds an easy intromission.

More, Song of the Soul, iii. iii. 48.

It is worthy inquiry, whether the intromission of venial sins, without which no man lives, does hinder the fruit of the indulgence; for if it does, all the cost is lost!

- Bp. Taylor, Dissuas. from Popery, ii. § 4.*
 3. [In the Scottish law.] The act of intermeddling with another's effects; as, he shall be brought to an account for his intrusions with such an estate.

TO INTROMIT.† v. a. [intromittō, Lat.]
 1. To send in; to let in; to admit.

This bird [the ibis] has been often observed, by means of his crooked bill intromitted into the anus, to inject salt water, as with a syringe, into his own bowels.

Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 232.

2. To allow to enter; to be the medium by which any thing enters.

It intronits more cases and scruples than it can resolve. Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ii. § 2.
 Glass in the window intromits light without cold to those in the room.

Holder, Elem. of Speech.

Tinged bodies and liquors reflect some sorts of rays, and intromit or transmit other sorts.

Newton, Opticks.

TO INTROMIT.* v. n. To intermeddle with the effects of another. See INTROMISSION.

They took her a prisoner,—possessed themselves of her mint, intromitted with her gold and silver, and put the crown upon the head of her son.

Stuart, Hist. of Scotland, i. 318.

INTRORECEPTION.* n. s. [intro and receptio, Lat.] The act of admitting into or within.

Were but the love of Christ to us ever suffered to come into our hearts, as species to the eye by introreception; had we but come to the least taste and relish of it; what would we not do to recommend, and answer, and entertain that love!

Hammond, Works, iv. 564.

TO INTROSPECT. v. a. [introspectus, Lat.] To take a view of the inside.

INTROSPECTION. n. s. [from introspect.] A view of the inside.

The actings of the mind or imagination itself, by way of reflection or introspection of themselves, are discernible by man.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

I was forced to make an introspection into my own mind, and into that idea of beauty which I have formed in my own imagination.

Dryden.

TO INTROSUME.* v. a. [intro and sumo, Lat.] To suck in.

How they elect, then introsume their proper food.

Evelyn, iv. § 21.

INTROSUSCEPTION.* n. s. [intro, Lat. and susception.] The act of taking in.

The parts of the body are either animate or inanimate; either such as participate of the life of the whole, and are nourished by the introsusception of enlivened aliment, &c.

Smith on Old Age, p. 160.

INTROVE'NIENT. adj. [intro and venio, Lat.] Entering; coming in.

Scarce any condition which is not exhausted and obscured, from the commixture of introvenient nations, either by commerce or conquest.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

INTROVERSION.* n. s. [intro, Lat. and versio.] The act of introverting.

A man of science who discovered it not by a tiresome introversion of his faculties.

Bp. Berkeley, Minute Philosopher, ii. 34. ed. 1732.

TO INTROVERT.* v. a. [intro and verto, Lat.] To turn inwards.

His awkward gait, his introverted toes, Bent knees, round shoulders.

Couper, Task, B. 4.

TO INTROUDE. v. n. [introduo, Lat.]

1. To come in unwelcome by a kind of violence; to enter without invitation or permission.

Thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge
 And manners, to intrude where I am grac'd.

Shakespeare.

The Jewish religion was yet in possession; and therefore that this might so enter, as not to intrude, it was to bring its warrant from the same hand of omnipotence.

South.

2. It is followed by on before persons, or personal possessions.

Forgive me, fair one, if officious friendship intrudes on your repose, and comes thus late
 To greet you with the tidings of success.

Rowe.

Some thoughts rise and intrude upon us, while we shun them; others fly from us, when we would hold them.

Watts.

3. To encroach; to force in uncalled or unpermitted: sometimes with into.

Let no man beguile you of your reward, in a voluntary humility, and worshipping of angels, intruding into those things which he hath not seen by his fleshly mind.

Col. ii. 18.

TO INTROUDE.† v. a.

1. To force without right or welcome; commonly with the reciprocal pronoun.

Not to intrude one's self into the mysteries of government, which the prince keeps secret, is represented by the winds shut up in a bull hide, which the companions of Ulysses would needs be so foolish as to pry into.

Pope.

2. To force in; to cast in.

If it [a clyster] should be intruded up by force, it cannot so quickly penetrate to the superior parts.

Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 273.

INTROUDER. n. s. [from intrude.] One who forces himself into company or affairs without right or welcome.

Unmannerly intruder as thou art!
 Go, base intruder! overweening slave!
 Bestow thy fawning smiles on equal mates.

Shakespeare.

They were but intruders upon the possession, during the minority of the heir: they knew those lands were the rightful inheritance of that young lady.

Davies on Ireland.

Will you, a bold intruder, never learn

To know your basket, and your bread discern?

Dryden.

She had seen a great variety of faces: they were all strangers and intruders, such as she had no acquaintance with.

Locke.

The whole fraternity of writers rise up in arms against every new intruder into the world of fame.

Addison, Freeholder.

INTROUSION. n. s. [intrusion, Fr.; intrusio, Lat.]

1. The act of thrusting or forcing any thing or person into any place or state.

Many excellent strains have been justified off by the intrusions of poetical fictions.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The separation of the parts of one body, upon the intrusion of another, and the change from rest to motion upon impulse, and the like, seem to have some connection.

Locke.

2. Encroachment upon any person or place; unwelcome entrance; entrance without invitation or permission.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something emboldened me to this unseasonable intrusion; for they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open.

Shakespeare.

Frogs, lice, and flies, must all his palace fill
 With loath'd intrusion.

Milton, P. L.

How's this, my son? Why this intrusion?
 Were not my orders that I should be private?

Addison, Cato.

I may close, after so long an intrusion upon your meditations.

Wake, Prep. for Death.

3. Voluntary and uncalled undertaking of any thing.

It will be said, I handle an art no way suitable either to my employment or fortune, and so stand charged with intrusion and impertinency.

Wotton.

INTRUSIVE.* adj. [from intrusion.] Intruding upon; entering without welcome.

Let me shake off the intrusive cares of day,
 And lay the meddling senses all aside.

Thomson, Winter.

TO INTRUST. v. a. [in and trust.] To treat with confidence; to charge with any secret commission, or thing of value: as, we intrust another with something; or we intrust something to another.

His majesty had a solicitous care for the payment of his debts; though in such a manner, that none of the duke's officers were intrusted with the knowledge of it.

Clarendon.

Receive my counsel, and securely move;
Intrust thy fortune to the pow'r's above.

Dryden, Juv.

Are not the lives of those, who draw the sword
 In Rome's defence, intrusted to our care?

Addison, Cato.

He composed his billet-doux, and at the time appointed went to intrust it to the hands of his confidant.

Arbutnot.

INTUITION. n. s. [intuitus, intueor, Lat.]

1. Sight of any thing; used commonly of mental view. Immediate knowledge.

At our rate of judging, St. Paul had passed for a most malicious persecutor; whereas God saw he did it ignorantly in unbelief, and upon that intuition had mercy on him.

Gov. of the Tongue.

The truth of these propositions we know by a bare simple intuition of the ideas, and such propositions are called self-evident.

Locke.

2. Knowledge not obtained by deduction of reason, but instantaneously accompanying the ideas which are its object.

All knowledge of causes is deductive; for we know none by simple intuition, but through the mediation of their effects; for the causality itself is insensible.

Glauville.

Discourse was then almost as quick as intuition.

South.

He their single virtues did survey,

By intuition in his own large breast.

Dryden.

INTUITIVE. adj. [intuitivus, low Latin; intuitiv, Fr.]

1. Seen by the mind immediately without the intervention of argument or testimony.

Immediate perception of the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, is when, by comparing them together in our minds, we see their agreement or disagreement; this therefore is called intuitive knowledge.

Locke.

Lofty flights of thought, and almost intuitive perception of abstruse notions, or exalted discoveries of mathematical theorems, we sometimes see existent in one person.

Bentley.

2. Seeing, not barely believing.

Faith, beginning here with a weak apprehension of things not seen, endeth with the intuitive vision of God in the world to come.

Hooker.

3. Having the power of discovering truth immediately without ratiocination.

The rule of ghostly or immaterial natures, as spirits and angels, is their intuitive intellectual judgement, concerning the amiable beauty and high goodness of that object, which, with unspeakable joy and delight, doth set them on work.

Hooker.

The soul receives

Discursive or intuitive.

Milton, P. L.

INTUITIVELY. adv. [intuitivement, French.] Without deduction of reason; by immediate perception.

That our love is sound and sincere, that it cometh from a pure heart, and a good conscience, and a faith unfeigned, who can pronounce, saving only the searcher of all men's hearts, who alone intuitively doth know in this kind who are his?

Hooker.

God Almighty, who sees all things intuitively, does not want logical helps. Baker on Learning.

INTUMESCENCE. n. s. intumescence, Fr. INTUMESCE. v. a. [intumesco, Lat.] Swell; tumour; the act or state of swelling.

According to the temper of the terrene parts at the bottom, as they are more hardly or easily moved, they variously begin, continue, or end their intumescences. Brown.

This subterranean heat causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotions, and occasions an earthquake. Woodward.

INTUMULATED.* adj. [intumulus, Lat.] Unburied. Cockeram.

His joy intumulated in the grave.

Rous, Thule or Virtue's Hist. (1598.)

INTURGESCENCE. n. s. [in and turgesco, Latin.] Swelling; the act or state of swelling.

Not by attenuation of the upper part of the sea, but inturgescencies caused first at the bottom, and carrying the upper part of it before them.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

INTUSE. n. s. [intusus, Lat.] Bruise.

The flesh therewith she supplied and did steepe, To abate all spasm and soke the swelling bruze; And, after having searcht the intuse deepe, She with her scarf did bind the wound.

Spenser, F. Q.

TO INTWINE. v. a. [in and twine.]

1. To twist, or wreath together.

This opinion, though false, yet intwined with a true, that the souls of men do never perish, abated the fear of death in them. Hooker.

2. To be inserted by being wreathed or twisted.

The vest and veil divine, Which wand'ring foliage and rich flow'rs intwine. Dryden.

TO INVADÉ. † v. a. [invado, Latin.]

1. To attack a country; to make an hostile entrance.

He will invade them with his troops.

Habak. iii. 16.

Should he invade any part of their country, he would soon see that nation up in arms. Knolles.

With dangerous expedition they invade Heaven, whose high walls fear no assault.

Milton, P. L.

Thy race in times to come Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome; Rome, whose ascending tow'rs shall heav'n invade, Involving earth and ocean in her shade.

Dryden, Æn.

Encouraged with success, he invades the province of philosophy. Dryden.

In vain did nature's wise command

Divide the waters from the land,

If daring ships, and men profane,

Invade th' inviolable main. Dryden.

2. To attack; to assail; to assault.

There shall be sedition among men, and invading one another; they shall not regard their kings. 2 Esdras.

Thou think'st 'tis much, that this contentious storm

Invades us to the skin; so 'tis to thee;

But where the greater malady is fix'd,

The lesser is scarce felt. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

3. To violate by the first act of hostility; to attack, not defend.

Your foes are such, as they, not you, have made;

And virtue may repel, though not invade. Dryden.

4. [A Latinism.] To go into. Obsolete.

That same his sea-marke made

And nam'd it Albion: but later day

Finding in it fit ports for fisher's trade,

Gan more the same frequent and farther to invade.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. x. 6.

All things from thence doe their first being fetch,

And borrow matter, whereof they are made;

Which, when as forme and feature it does ketch,

Becomes a body, and doth then invade

The state of life out of the griesly shade.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. vi. 37.

INVADER. n. s. [from invado, Lat.]

1. One who enters with hostility into the possessions of another.

The breath of Scotland the Spaniards could not endure; neither durst they, as invaders, land in Ireland. Bacon.

Their piety

In sharp contest of battle found no aid

Against invaders. Milton, P. L.

That knowledge, like the coal from the altar, serves only to embroil and consume the sacrilegious invaders. Decay of Chr. Piety.

Were he lost, the naked empire

Would be a prey expos'd to all invaders.

Denham, Sophy.

The country about Attica was the most barren of any in Greece, through which means it happened that the natives were never expelled by the fury of invaders. Swift.

Secure by William's care, let Britain stand;

Nor dread the bold invader's hand. Prior.

Esteem and judgement with strong fancy join,

To call the fair invader in;

My darling favourite inclination, too,

All, all conspiring with the foe. Granville.

2. An assailant.

3. Encroacher; intruder.

The substance was formerly comprised in that uncompound'd style, but afterwards prudently enlarged for the repelling and preventing heretical invaders. Hammond.

INVALESCENCE. n. s. [invalresco, Latin.] Strength; health; force. Dict.

INVALETU'DINARY.* adj. [in and valetudinary.] Wanting health; infirm.

Whether usually the most studious, laborious ministers be not the most invaletudinary and infirm?

Papers between the Comm. for Review of the Liturgy, (1661,) p. 127.

INVALID. adj. [invalidé, French; invalidus, Latin.] Weak; of no weight or cogency.

But this I urge,

Admitting motion in the heavens, to shew

Invalids, that which thee to doubt it mov'd.

Milton, P. L.

INVALID.* n. s. See INVALIDE. It is now usually written, invalid.

TO INVÁLIDATE. v. a. [from invalid.] To weaken; to deprive of force or efficacy.

To invalidate such a consequence, some things might be speciously enough alleged. Boyle.

Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted, bring a score of witnesses of the falsehood of his mistress, and it is ten to one but three kind words of her's shall invalidate all their testimonies. Locke.

INVALIDATION.* n. s. [from To invalidate.] Act of weakening.

Magna Charta—the inestimable monument of English freedom, so long the boast and glory of this nation, would have been at once an instrument of our servitude and a monument of our folly, if this principle were true: the thirty-four confirmations would have been only so many repetitions of their absurdity, so many new links in the chain, and so many invalidations of their right.

Burke, Speech on Libels, (1771.)

INVALIDÉ. n. s. [Fr.] One disabled by sickness or hurts.

What beggar in the invalides,

With lameness broke, with blindness smitten,

Wish'd ever decently to die? Prior.

INVALIDITY. n. s. [in and validity; invalidité, Fr.]

1. Weakness; want of cogency.

2. Want of bodily strength. This is no English meaning.

He ordered, that none who could work should be idle; and that none who could not work, by age, sickness, or invalidity, should want. Temple.

INVALUABLE. adj. [in and valuable.] Precious above estimation; inestimable.

The faith produced by terror would not be so free an act as it ought, to which are annexed all the glorious and invaluable privileges of believing. Atterbury.

INVALUABLY.* adv. [from invaluable.] Inestimably.

That invaluably precious blood of the Son of God.

Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 257.

INVARIABLE. adj. [in and variatus, Latin. invariable, Fr.] Unchangeable: constant.

Being not able to design times by days, months, or years, they thought best to determine these alterations by some known and invariable signs, and such did they conceive the rising and setting of the fixed stars. Brown.

The rule of good and evil would not appear uniform and invariable, but different, according to men's different complexions and inclinations.

Atterbury.

INVARIABleness.† n. s. [from invariable.] Immutability; constancy.

From the dignity of their intellect arises the invariableness of their wills.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. ii. (1654,) p. 32.

These nominatives—emphatically represent and express the everlasting veracity and invariableness of God. Blackwall, Sac. Class. i. 102.

INVARIABLY. adv. [from invariable.] Unchangeably; constantly.

He, who steers his course invariably by this rule, takes the surest way to make all men praise him.

Atterbury.

INVARIÉD. adv. [in and variatus, Latin.] Not varying.

Change of the particles, or the lesser invariant words, that add to the signification of nouns and verbs. Blackwall, Sac. Class. i. 136.

INVASION. n. s. [invasion, French; invasio, Latin.]

1. Hostile entrance upon the rights or possessions of another; hostile encroachment.

We made an invasion upon the Cherethites.

1 Sam. xxx.

Reason finds a secret grief and remorse from every invasion that sin makes upon innocence, and that must render the first entrance and admission of sin uneasy. South.

The nations of the Ausonian shore

Shall hear the dreadful rumour, from afar,

Of arm'd invasion, and embrace the war.

Dryden, Æn.

William the Conqueror invaded England about the year 1060, which means this; that taking the duration from our Saviour's time till now, for one entire length of time, it shews at what distance this invasion was from the two extremes. Locke.

2. Attack of a disease.

What demonstrates the plague to be endemic to Egypt, is its invasion and going off at certain seasons. Arbutnot.

INVA'STIVE. adj. [from invade.] Entering hostilely upon other men's possessions; not defensive.

I must come closer to my purpose, and not make more invasive wars abroad, when, like Hannibal, I am called back to the defence of my country. Dryden.

Let other monarchs, with invasive bands, Lessen their people, and extend their lands; By gassing nations hated and obey'd, Lords of the deserts that their swords had made.

INVE'CTION.* n. s. [invectio, Latin.] Reproachful accusation; railing; invective. Many men wish Luther to have used a more temperate style sometimes, especially against princes and temporal estates; and he himself did openly acknowledge his fault therein, especially his immoderate invection against King Henry the 8th. Fulke, Ans. to P. Frarine, (1586,) p. 28.

INVE'CTIVE. n. s. [invective, Fr. invectiva, low Latin.]

1. A censure in speech or writing; a reproachful accusation.

Plain men desiring to serve God as they ought, but being not so skilful as to unwind themselves, where the snares of glosing speech do lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear so bitter invectives against that which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy, to approve as lawful, and to observe as behoful for the exercise of Christian duty. Hooker.

If we take satire, in the general signification of the world, for an invective, 'tis almost as old as verse. Dryden, Juv.

2. It is used with against.

So desp'rate thieves, all hopeless of their lives, Breathe out invectives 'gainst the officers.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
Casting off respect, he fell to bitter invectives against the French king. Bacon, Hen. VII.

3. Less properly with at.

Whilst we condemn others, we may indeed be in the wrong; and then all the invectives we make at their supposed errors, fall back with a rebounded force upon our own real ones.

INVE'CTIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Satirical; abusive. Let him rail on; let his invective muse Have four and twenty letters to abuse. Dryden.

INVE'CTIVELY. adv. Satirically; abusively. Thus most invectively he pierceth through The body of the country, city, court, Yea, and of this our life; swearing that we Are mere usurpers, tyrants. Shakespeare.

TO INVEIGH. v. a. [inveho, Lat.] To utter censure or reproach: with against. I cannot blame him for inveighing so sharply against the vices of the clergy in his age. Dryden.

He inveighs severely against the folly of parties, in retaining scoundrels to retail their lies.

INVEIGH'ER.* n. s. [from inveigh.] Vehement railer.

Ill-temper'd and extravagant invectives against Papists, made by men whose persons wanting authority as much as their speeches do reason, do nothing else but set an edge upon our adversaries' sword; whilst the light behaviour, and bad example of the inveigher's life infuseth courage to their hearts, and addeeth strength unto their arms.

Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 780.
One of these inveighers against mercury, in seven weeks, could not cure one small herpes in the face. Wiseman.

TO INVEIGLE.* v. a. [invogliare, Ital. Minsheu; aveugler, or enaveugler, Fr. Skinner and Junius; wiegeln, Germ. from the Goth, wagian, to excite, to move. Serenius.] To persuade to something bad or hurtful; to wheedle; to allure; to seduce.

Most false Duessa, royal richly dight, That easy was to inveigle weaker sight, Was, by her wicked arts and wily skill, Too false and strong for earthly skill or might.

Achilles hath inveigled his fool from him.

Yet have they many baits and guileful spells, To inveigle and invite the unwary sense Of them that pass unweeding by the way.

Both right able To inveigle and draw in the rabble.

Those drops of prettiness, scattering sprinkled amongst the creatures, were designed to exalt our conceptions, not inveigle or detain our passions.

I leave the use of garlick to such as are inveigled into the gout by the use of too much drinking.

The inveigling a woman, before she is come to years of discretion, should be as criminal as the seducing of her before she is ten years old.

INVEIGLEMENT.* n. s. [from To inveigle.] Allurement; seduction.

The inveiglements of the world and the frailty of his own nature.

INVEIGLER.* n. s. [from inveigle.] Seducer; deceiver; allurer to ill.

Persons lewd there were, Which counsel'd off my son's embracing vice; As still is scene, in Court inveiglers are.

Being presented to the emperour for his admirable beauty, the prince clapt him up as his inveigler.

INVEILED.* part. adj. [from in and veil.] Covered, as with a veil.

Her eyes inveild with sorrowe's clouds Scarce see the light; D disdain hath wrapt her in the shrowds Of loathed night.

INVE'NDO.* See INUENDO. It is sometimes corruptly written inuendo.

TO INVE'NOM.* See TO ENVENOM.

TO INVE'NT. v. a. [inventer, Fr.; invenio, Lat.]

1. To discover; to find out; to excogitate; to produce something not made before.

The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, but must be received from God himself.

By their count, which lovers' books invent, The sphere of Cupid forty years contains.

Matter of mirth enough, though there were none She could devise, and thousand ways invent To feed her foolish humour and vain jolliment.

Woe to them that invent to themselves instruments of musick.

We may invent With what more forcible we may offend Our enemies.

In the motion of the bones in their articulations, a twofold liquor is prepared for the inunction of their heads; both which make up the most apt mixture, for this use, that can be invented or thought upon.

Ye skilful masters of Machaon's race, Who Nature's mazy intricacies trace, By manag'd fire and late invented eyes.

But when long time the wretches thoughts refin'd,

When want had set an edge upon their mind, Then various cares their working thoughts employ'd, And that which each invented, all enjoy'd.

The ship, by help of a screw, invented by Archimedes, was launched into the water.

2. To forge; to contrive falsely; to fabricate.

I never did such things as those men have maliciously invented against me.

3. To feign; to make by the imagination.

I would invent as bitter searching terms, With full as many signs of deadly hate, As lean fac'd Envy in her loathsome cave.

Hercules's meeting with Pleasure and Virtue was invented by Prodicus, who lived before Socrates, and in the first dawning of philosophy.

4. To light on; to meet with. Not used.

Far off he wonders what them makes so glad: Or Bacchus' merry fruit they did invent, Or Cybel's frantic rites have made them mad.

INVE'NTER. n. s. [from inventeur, French.]

1. One who produces something new; a deviser of something not known before.

As a translator, he was just; as an inventer, he was rich.

2. A forger.

INVE'NTFUL.* adj. [invent and full.] Full of invention.

The genius of the French government appears powerful only in destruction, and inventful only in oppression.

Gifford, Rem. prefix. to a Residence in France, (1797).

INVE'NTIBLE.* adj. [from invent.] Discoverable; capable of being found out.

When first I gave my thoughts to make guns shoot often, I thought there had been but one only exquisite way inventible.

Marquis of Worcester, Cent. of Invent. 67.

INVE'NTION. n. s. [invention, Fr.; inventio, Lat.]

1. Excogitation; the act or power of producing something new.

O for a muse of fire, that would ascend The brightest heaven of invention!

By improving what was writ before, Invention labours less, but judgement more.

Roscommon.

Invention is a kind of muse, which, being possessed of the other advantages common to her sisters, and being warmed by the fire of Apollo, is raised higher than the rest.

Mine is th' invention of the charming lyre; Sweet notes and heav'nly numbers I inspire.

Dryden.

The chief excellence of Virgil is judgement, of Homer is invention.

2. Discovery.

Nature hath provided several glandules to separate spittle from the blood, and no less than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are of a late invention, and called ductus salivares.

Ray on the Creation.

We hear our bloody cousins, not confessing Their cruel parricide, filling their hearers With strange invention.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

If thou can'st accuse
Do it without invention suddenly.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

4. The thing invented.

The garden, a place not fairer in natural ornaments than artificial inventions. Sidney.

Th' invention all admir'd; and each how he
To be th' inventor miss'd, so easy it seem'd
Once found, which yet unfound most would have thought Impossible. Milton, P. L.

INVENTIVE, adj. [inventif, Fr. from invent.]

1. Quick at contrivance; ready at expedients.

Those have the inventive heads for all purposes and roundest tongues in all matters.

Ascham, Schoolmaster.

That inventive head
Her fatal image from the temple drew,
The sleeping guardians of the castle slew.

Dryden.

The inventive god, who never fails his part,
Inspires the wit, when once he warms the heart.

Dryden.

2. Having the power of excogitation or fiction.

As he had an inventive brain, so there never lived any man that believed better thereof, and of himself.

Ralegh.

Reason, remembrance, wit, inventive art,
No nature, but immortal, can impart.

Denham.

INVENTOR, n. s. [inventor, Lat.]

1. A finder out of something new. It is written likewise inventer.

We have the statue of your Columbus, that discovered the West Indies, also the inventor of ships: your Monk that was the inventor of ordnance, and of gunpowder.

Bacon.

Studious they appear
Of arts that polish life; inventors rare,
Unmindful of their maker.

Milton, P. L.

Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author and inventor, and the reader led into a belief that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue?

Atterbury.

2. A contriver; a framer. In an ill sense.

In this upshot, purposes mistook,
Fall'n on th' inventors heads.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

INVENTORIALY, adv. [from inventory, whence perhaps inventorial.] In manner of an inventory.

To divide inventorially would dizzy the arithmetic of memory.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

INVENTORY, n. s. [inventaire, Fr.; inventarium, Lat.] An account or catalogue of moveables.

I found,

Forsooth, an inventory, thus importing,
The several parcels of his plate.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

The leanness that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is as an inventory to particularize their abundance; our sufferings is a gain to them.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

Whoe'er looks,

For themselves dare not go, o'er Cheapside books,
Shall find their wardrobe's inventory.

Donne.

It were of much consequence to have such an inventory of nature, wherein, as, on the one hand, nothing should be wanting, so nothing repeated on the other.

Crew, Mus.

In Persia the daughters of Eve are reckoned in the inventory of their goods and chattels; and it is usual, when a man sells a bale of silk, to toss half a dozen women into the bargain.

Addison, Spect.

TO INVENTORY, v. a. [inventorier, Fr.]

To register; to place in a catalogue.

I will give out divers schedules of my beauty: it shall be inventoried, and every particle and utensil lab'ell'd.

Shakespeare.

A man looks on the love of his friend as one of the richest possessions: the philosopher thought friends were to be inventoried as well as goods.

Gov. of the Tongue.

INVENTRESS, † n. s. [inventrice, from inventor.] A female that invents.

Poverty hath been the inventress of all good crafts.

Remedy for Sedition, (1536.) F ii. b.

The arts, with all their retinue of lesser trades, history and tradition tell us when they had their beginning; and how many of their inventors and inventresses were deified.

Burnet.

Cecilia came,

Inventress of the vocal frame:

The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,

Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds.

Dryden.

INVERSE, adj. [inverse, Fr.; inversus, Lat.]

Inverted; reciprocal; opposed to direct. It is so called in proportion, when the fourth term is so much greater than the third, as the second is less than the first; or so much less than the third as the second is greater than the first.

Every part of matter tends to every part of matter with a force, which is always in a direct proportion of the quantity of matter, and an inverse duplicate proportion of the distance.

Garth.

INVERSION, n. s. [inversion, Fr.; inversio, Lat.]

1. Change of order or time, so as that the last is first, and first last.

If he speaks truth, it is upon a subtle inversion of the precept of God, to do good that evil may come of it.

Brown.

'Tis just the inversion of an act of parliament; your lordship first signed it, and then it was passed amongst the lords and commons.

Dryden.

2. Change of place, so as that each takes the room of the other.

TO INVERT, v. a. [invert, Lat.]

1. To turn upside down; to place in contrary method or order to that which was before.

With fate inverted, shall I humbly woo?
And some proud prince, in wild Numidia born,
Pray to accept me, and forget my scorn!

Waller.

Ask not the cause why sullen spring,
So long delays her flowers to bear,
And winter storms invert the year.

Dryden.

Poesy and oratory omit things essential, and invert times and actions, to place every thing in the most affecting light.

Watts.

2. To place the last first.

Yes, every poet is a fool;
By demonstration Ned can show it:
Happy, could Ned's inverted rule
Prove every fool to be a poet.

Prior.

3. To divert; to turn into another channel; to bebezzle. Instead of this convert or intervert is now commonly used.

Solyman charged him bitterly with inverting his treasures to his own private use, and having secret intelligence with his enemies.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

INVERTEDLY, † adv. [from inverted.] In contrary or reversed order.

Let the divine part be upward, and the region of beast below; otherwise, 'tis but to live invertedly, and with thy head upon the heels of thy antipodes.

Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 14.

Placing the forefront of the eye to the hole of the window of a darkened room, we have a pretty landskip of the objects abroad, invertedly painted on the paper, on the back of the eye.

Derham, Phys. Theol.

TO INVE-ST, † v. a. [investir, Fr.; investio, Lat.]

1. To dress; to clothe; to array. It has in or with before the thing superinduced or conferred.

How long a day soever Thou make that day in the grave, yet there is no day between that and the resurrection. Then we shall all be invested, re-apparelled, in our own bodies.

Donne, Devot. (1625.) p. 358.

Thus with sackcloth I invest my woe.

Sandys, Job, p. 26.

Thou with a mantle didst invest
The rising world of waters.

Milton, P. L.

Let thy eyes shine forth in their full lustre;
Invest them with thy loveliest smiles, put on Thy choicest looks.

Denham, Sophy.

2. To place in possession of a rank or office.

When we sanctify or hallow churches, that which we do is only to testify that we make places of public resort, that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses.

Hooker.

After the death of the other archbishop he was invested in that high dignity, and settled in his palace at Lambeth.

Clarendon.

The practice of all ages, and all countries, hath been to do honour to those who are invested with public authority.

Atterbury.

3. To adorn; to grace; as clothes or ornaments.

Honour must,

Not accompanied, invest him only;

But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine
On all deservers.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The foolish, over-careful fathers for this engross'd

The canker'd heaps of strong achieved gold;
For this they have been thought to invest
Their sons with arts and martial exercises.

Shakspeare.

Some great potentate,
Or of the thrones above, such majesty
Invests him coming.

Milton, P. L.

4. To confer; to give.

If there can be found such an inequality between man and man, as there is between man and beast, or between soul and body, it investeth a right of government.

Bacon.

5. To enclose; to surround so as to intercept succours or provisions: as, the enemy invested the town.

6. To put on.

Alas for pittance, that so faire a crew,
As like cannot be seen from east to west,
Cannot find one this girdle to invest.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. v. 18.

INVESTIENT, adj. [investiens, Lat.] Covering; clothing.

The shells served as plums or moulds to this sand, which, when consolidated and freed from its investient shell, is of the same shape as the cavity of the shell.

Woodward.

INVESTIGABLE, adj. [from investigate.] To be searched out; discoverable by rational disquisition.

Finally, in such sort they are investigable, that the knowledge of them is general; the world hath always been acquainted with them.

Hooker.

In doing evil, we prefer a less good before a greater, the greatness whereof is by reason investigable, and may be known.

Hooker.

TO INVESTIGATE, v. a. [investigo, Lat.] To search out; to find out by rational disquisition.

Investigate the variety of motions and figures made by the organs for articulation.

Holder on Speech.

From the present appearances investigate the powers and forces of nature, and from these account for future observations.

Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

INVESTIGATION.† n. s. [investigation, Fr. investigatio, Lat.] The word is of no great age either in the French or our own language. Rousseau considers himself as the introducer of it into French use. The original meaning of investigatio is the searching out by the tracks of the feet, in and vestigia; a phrase of hunting.]

1. The act of the mind by which unknown truths are discovered.

Not only the investigation of truth, but the communication of it also, is often practised in such a method as neither agrees precisely to synthetic or analytick. Watts.

Progressive truth, the patient force of thought
Investigation calm, whose silent powers
Command the world. Thomson, Summer.

2. Examination.

Your travels I hear much of: my own shall never more be in a strange land, but a diligent investigation of my own territories. Pope to Swift.

INVESTIGATIVE.* adj. [from investigate.] Curious and deliberate in making inquiry.

When money was in his pocket, he was more deliberate and investigative.

INVESTIGATOR.* n. s. [investigator, Lat.] One who diligently searches out.

This occult piece of history—I leave to the curiosity and conjectures of some more laborious investigator. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 47.

INVESTITURE.† n. s. [French.]

1. The right of giving possession of any manor, office, or benefice.

He had refused to yield up to the pope the investiture of bishops, and collation of ecclesiastical dignities within his dominions. Raleigh, Essays.

2. The act of giving possession.

Thy redemption is sealed in heaven, and shall in due time be manifested to thine investiture with the eternal glory and happiness which God hath prepared for all his. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 139.

INVESTIVE.* adj. [from invest.] Encircling; enclosing.

The horrid fire, all mercies, did choke
The scorched wretches with investive smoke.

INVESTMENT. n. s. [in and vestment.] Dress; clothes; garment; habit.

Ophelia, do not believe his vows; for they are brokers,
Not of that die which their investments shew.

Who see by a civil peace maintain'd,
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd,
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,
Whose white investments figure innocence,
The dove, and every blessed spirit of peace;
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself,
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war?

INVE'ERACY. n. s. [inve'ratio, Lat.]

1. Long continuance of any thing bad; obstinacy confirmed by time.

The inveteracy of the people's prejudices compelled their rulers to make use of all means for reducing them. Addison.

INVE'ERATE. adj. [inve'ratatus, Lat.]

1. Old; long established.

The custom of Christians was then, and had been a long time, not to wear garlands, and therefore that undoubtedly they did offend who presumed to violate such a custom by not observing that thing; the very inveterate observation whereof was a law, sufficient to bind all men to observe it, unless they could shew some higher law, some law of Scripture, to the contrary. Hooker.

It is an inveterate and received opinion, that cantharides, applied to any part of the body, touch the bladder and exulcerate it. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Obstinate by long continuance.

It is not every sinful violation of conscience that can quench the spirit; but it must be a long inveterate course and custom of sinning, that at length produces and ends in such a cursed effect. South.

He who writes satire honestly is no more an enemy to the offender, than the physician to the patient when he prescribes harsh remedies to an inveterate disease. Dryden.

In a well-instituted state the executive power will never let abuses grow inveterate, or multiply so far that it will be hard to find remedies. Swift.

TO INVE'ERATE. v. a. [inve'eter, Fr. inve'tero, Lat.] To fix and settle by long continuance.

The vulgar conceived, that now there was an end given, and a consummation to superstitious prophecies, and to an ancient tacit expectation, which had by tradition been infused and inveterated into men's minds. Bacon.

Let not atheists lay the fault of their sins upon human nature, which have their prevalence from long custom and inveterated habit. Bentley.

INVE'ERATENESS. n. s. [from inve'erate.] Long continuance of any thing bad; obstinacy confirmed by time.

As time hath rendered him more perfect in the art, so hath the inveterateness of his malice made him more ready in the execution. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Neither the inveterateness of the mischief, nor the prevalence of the fashion, shall be any excuse for those who will not take care about the meaning of their words. Locke.

INVE'ERATION. n. s. [inve'ratio, Lat.] The act of hardening or confirming by long continuance.

INVIDIOUS. adj. [invidiosus, Lat.]

1. Envious; malignant.

I shall open to them the interior secrets of this mysterious art, without imposture or invidious reserve. Evelyn.

2. Likely to incur or to bring hatred. This is the more usual sense.

Agamemnon found it an invidious affair to give the preference to any one of the Grecian heroes. Broom.

Not to be further tedious, or rather invidious, these are a few causes which have contributed to the ruin of our morals. Swift.

INVIDIOUSLY. adv. [from invidious.]

1. Malignantly; enviously.
2. In a manner likely to provoke hatred.

The clergy murmur against the privileges of the laity; the laity invidiously aggravate the immunities of the clergy. Sprat.

INVIDIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from invidious.] Quality of provoking envy or hatred.

Pythagoras was the first, who abated of the invidiousness of the name, and from scopos brought it down to philosopos, from a master to a lover of wisdom. South, Sermon ii. 243.

The offence has not the invidiousness of singularity. Johnson, Journ. Western Islands.

INVI'GILANCY.* n. s. [invigilance, old Fr.; in and vigilancy.] Sleepiness; laziness; want of vigilance. Cotgrave.

TO INVI'GORATE. v. a. [in and vigour.] To endue with vigour; to strengthen; to animate; to enforce.

The spleen is introduced to invigorate the sinister side, which, dilated, would rather infirm and debilitate. Brown.

Gentle warmth
Discloses well the earth's all-teeming womb,
Invigorating tender seeds. Philips.

I have lived when the prince, instead of invigorating the laws, assumed a power of dispensing with them. Addison.

No one can enjoy health, without he feel a lightsome and invigorating principle, which spurs him to action. Spectator.

Christian graces and virtues they cannot be, unless fed, invigorated, and animated by universal charity. Aitkenbury.

INVIGORATION. n. s. [from invigorate.]

1. The act of invigorating.
2. The state of being invigorated.

I find in myself an appetitive faculty, which is always in the very height of activity and invigoration. Norris.

TO INVI'GOUR.* v. a. [in and vigour.] To invigorate; to animate; to encourage.

Those favours which invigoured learning, and nourished men of desert and worth.

Waterhouse, Apol. for Learn. (1653.) p. 3.

INV'ILLAGED.* part. adj. [from in and village.] Turned into a village. Not in use.

There on a goodly plaine (by time throwne downe)

Lies buried in his dust some auncient towne;
Who now invillaged, there's only seene
In his vaste ruines what his state has bene.

Browne, Brit. Past. i. 2.

INVINCIB'ILITY.* n. s. [from invincible.]

The quality of being invincible.

Thus a happy victory may be gained over invincibility itself.

Barrow, Sermon on Pray without ceasing.

INVINCIBLE. adj. [invincible, French; invincibilis, Lat.] Insuperable; unconquerable; not to be subdued.

I should have thought her spirits had been invincible against all assaults of affection. Shaksp.

Should he invade their country, he would soon see that invincible nation with their united forces up in arms. Knolles.

The spirit remains invincible. Milton.

That mistake, which is the consequence of invincible error, scarce deserves the name of wrong judgement. Locke.

If an atheist had had the making of himself, he would have framed a constitution that could have kept pace with his insatiable lust, been invincible by intemperance, and have held out a thousand years in a perpetual debauch. Bentley.

INVINCIBLENESS.† n. s. [from invincible.] Unconquerableness; insuperableness.

The invincibleness of their ignorance. Hammond, Works, i. 303.

INVINCIBLY. adv. [from invincible.] Insuperably; unconquerably.

Ye have been fearless in his righteous cause; And as ye have receiv'd, so have ye done invincibly. Milton, P. L.

Neither invitations nor threats avail with those who are invincibly impeded, to apply them to their benefit. Decay of Piety.

INVIOLAB'ILITY.* n. s. [inviolabilité, Fr. from inviolable.] State or quality of being inviolable.

Having excluded all probability of the event of a systematic abuse of royal power, or a dangerous exorbitance of prerogative, our constitution exempts her kings from the degrading necessity of being accountable to the subject: She invests them with the high attribute of political impregnability; she declares, that wrong, in his public capacity, a king of Great Britain cannot do; and thus unites the most perfect security of the subject's liberty with the most absolute inviolability of the sacred person of the sovereign.

Bp. Horsley, Sermon, 30 Jan. 1793.

INVIOABLE. adj. [inviolable, Fr. inviolabilis, Lat.]

1. Not to be profaned; not to be injured. Thou, be sure, shalt give account To him who sent us, whose charge is to keep This place inviolable, and these from harm.

Milton, P. L.

In vain did Nature's wise command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships, and men profane,
Invade the inviolable main;
The eternal fences overlap,
And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden.
Ye lamps of heaven, he said, and lifted high
His hands, now free; thou venerable sky!
Inviolable powers! ador'd with dread,
Be all of you adjur'd. Dryden, Æn.

This birthright, when our author pleases, must and must not be sacred and inviolable. Locke.

2. Not to be broken.

The prophet David thinks, that the very meeting of men together, and their accompanying one another to the house of God, should make the bond of their love insoluble, and tie them in a league of inviolable amity. Hooker.

See, see, they join, embrace, and seem to kiss,
As if they vow'd some league inviolable. Shaksp.

3. Insusceptible of hurt or wound.

The inviolable saints

In cubick phalanx firm advanc'd entire.

Milton, P. L.

INVIOABLENESS.* n. s. [from inviolable.] State or quality of being inviolable.

Sherwood.

INVIOABLY.† adv. [from inviolable.] Without breach; without failure.

Saint Austen saith, that the apostles inviolably kept the said vow.

Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554.) Cc. ii. b.

Mere acquaintance you have none; you have drawn them all into a nearer line; and they who have conversed with you, are for ever after inviolably yours. Dryden.

The true profession of Christianity inviolably engages all its followers to do good to all men.

Syrat.

INVIOULATE. adj. [inviolatus, Fr. inviolatus, Lat.] Unhurt; uninjured; unprofaned; unpolluted; unbroken.

His fortune of arms was still involute.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

But let involute truth be always dear
To thee; even before friendship, truth prefer.

Denham.

If the past

Can hope a pardon, by those mutual bonds
Nature has seal'd between us, which, though I
Have cancell'd, thou hast still preserv'd involute:
I beg thy pardon. Denham, Sophy.

My love your claim involute secures;

'Tis writ in fate, I can be only yours. Dryden.

In all the changes of his doubtful state,
His truth, like Heav'n's was kept involute.

Dryden.

INVIOLATED.* adj. [inviolatus, Lat.] Unprofaned; unpolluted.

A most involute shrine.

Drayton, Barons' Wars, iv. 68.

The safe principles we have hitherto endeavoured to preserve involute.

Sir H. Sheere, in Ld. Halifax's Miscell. p. 41.

INVIOUS. adj. [invius, Lat.] Impassable; untrodden.

If nothing can oppugn love,
And virtue invius ways can prove,
What may not he confide to do,
That brings both love and virtue too? Hudibras.

INVIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from invius.] State of being invius; impassableness.

Which is called — inviousness and emptiness; — where all is dark and unpassable, as perviousness is the contrary.

Dr. Ward, Tr. of More's Pref. to his Philos. Works, (1710.)

INVIRILITY.* n. s. [in and virility.] Absence of manhood; departure from manly character.

It savours of effeminacy and womanish invirility.

TO INVISCATE. v. a. [in and viscus, Lat.] To lime; to entangle in glutinous matter.

The camelion's food being flies, it hath in the tongue a mucous and slimy extremity, whereby, upon a sudden emission, it inviscates and intangleth those insects. Brown.

TO INVISCERATE.* v. a. [inviscerato, Lat.] To breed; to nourish.

Inviscerating this disposition in our hearts — to love one another.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648.) p. 267.

INVISIBILITY. n. s. [invisibilité, Fr. from invisible.] The state of being invisible; imperceptibleness to sight.

They may be demonstrated to be innumerable, substituting their smallness for the reason of their invisibility. Ray.

INVISIBLE. adj. [invisible, Fr. invisibilis, Lat.] Not perceptible by the sight; not to be seen.

He was invisible that hurt me so;
And none invisible, but spirits, can go. Sidney.

The thredden sails,

Borne with the invisible and creeping wind,
Drew the huge bottoms to the furrow'd sea.

Shakespeare.

'Tis wonderful

That an invisible invisible should frame them
To loyalty unlearn'd, honour untaught. Shaksp.

To us invisible, or dimly seen,
In these thy lowest works. Milton, P. L.

He that believes a God, believes such a being as hath all perfections; among which this is one, that he is a spirit, and consequently that he is invisible, and cannot be seen. Villoison.

It seems easier to make one's self invisible to others, than to make another's thoughts visible to me, which are not visible to himself. Locke.

INVISIBLY. adv. [from invisible.] Imperceptibly to the sight.

Age by degrees invisibly doth creep,
Nor do we seem to die, but fall asleep. Denham.

INVITATION.† n. s. [invitation, Fr. invitation, Lat.]

1. The act of inviting, bidding, or calling to any thing with ceremony and civility. That other answer'd with a lowly look,
And soon the gracious invitation took. Dryden.

2. Allurement.

She gives the leer of invitation.

Shakespeare, Mer. Wives of Windsor.

INVITATORY.† adj. [from invito, Lat.] Using invitation; containing invitation.

In the Latin services it [the 95th] is called the invitatory psalm; it being always sung with a strong and loud voice, to hasten those people into the church, who were in the cemetery, or churchyard, or any other adjacent parts, waiting for the beginning of prayers.

Wheatley on the Com. Prayer, iii. § 8.

INVITATORY.* n. s. Formerly an hymn of invitation to prayer.

Responds, invitoriales, and such like things as did break the continual course of the reading of the Scripture.

Concerning the Serv. of the Church, Com. Prayer.

TO INVITE. v. a. invito, Lat. inviter, Fr.]

1. To bid; to ask to any place, particularly to one's own house, with intreaty and complaisance.

If thou be invited of a mighty man, withdraw thyself. Echus.

He comes invited by a younger son. Milt. P. L.
When much company is invited, then be as sparing as possible of your coals. Swift.

2. To allure; to persuade; to induce by hope or pleasure.

A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other Gentiles, though facility and hope of success might invite some other choice. Bacon.

Nor art thou such

Created, or such place hath here to dwell,
As may not oft invite, though spirits of heav'n,
To visit thee. Milton, P. L.

The liberal contributions such teachers met with, served still to invite more labourers into that work. Decay of Chr. Piety.

Shady groves, that easy sleep invite,
And after toilsome days a soft repose at night.

Dryden, Virg.

TO INVITE. v. n. [invito, Lat.] To ask or call to any thing pleasing.

All things invite

To peaceful counsels. Milton, P. L.
INVITEMENT.* n. s. [from invite.] Act of inviting; invitation.

He never makes a general invitement, but against the publishing of a new suit; marry then you shall have more drawn to his lodging than come to the launching of some three ships.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

INVITER. n. s. [from invite.] One who invites.

They forcibly cut out abortive votes, such as their inviters and encouragers most fancied.

King Charles.

Honour was the aim of the guests, and interest was the scope of the inviter. Smallbridge, Sermon.

Wines and cates the tables grace,
But most the kind inviter's cheerful face.

Pope, Odyssey.

INVITING.* n. s. [from invite.] Invitation.

He hath sent me an earnest inviting.

Shakespeare, Tim. of Athens.

INVITINGLY. adv. [from inviting.] In such a manner as invites or allures.

Irrigations, inunctions, odorsments, prescribed for the head. Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 406.

The wise Author of Nature hath placed on the rump two glands, which the bird catches hold upon with her bill, and squeezes out an oily liniment, fit for the inunction of the feathers, and causing their filaments to cohere. Ray.

INUNDANT.* adj. [inundans, Lat.] Overflowing.

A torrent, in the summer temperate and shallow, but in the spring and winter inundant and raging.

Heywood's Hier. of Angels, (1635.) p. 531.

Days, and nights, and hours,
Thy voice, hydropick Fancy, calls aloud
For costly draughts inundant bowls of joy.

Shenstone, Econ. P. i.

TO INUN'DATE.* v. a. [inundo, Lat.] This word has been reprobated as one of the affected introductions of modern writers into our language. This is not the case; for we find inundated used in the sense of overwhelmed, nearly two centuries since, in the vocabulary of Cockeram.] To overflow a place with water; to overwhelm.

INUNDA'TION. n. s. [inondation, Fr. inundatio, Lat.]

1. The overflow of waters; flood; deluge. Inundation, says Cowley, implies less than deluge.

Her father counts it dangerous,
That she should give her sorrow so much sway:
And in his wisdom hates our marriage.
To stop the inundation of her tears. Shakespeare.

The same inundation was not past forty foot in most places; so that some few wild inhabitants of the woods escaped. Bacon.

All fountains of the deep,
Broke up, shall leave the ocean to usurp
Beyond all bounds, till inundation rise Above the highest hills. Milton, P. L.

This inundation unto the Egyptians happeneth when it is winter unto the Ethiopians.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Your care about your banks infers a fear
Of threatening floods, and inundations near.

Dryden.

No swelling inundation hides the grounds,
But crystal currents glide within their bounds.

Gay.

2. A confluence of any kind.

Many good towns, through that inundation of the Irish, were utterly wasted.

Spenser on Ireland.

INUNDERSTANDING.* adj. [in and understanding.] Wanting the faculties of the mind; void of understanding.

Many of the beasts of the field, divers of the plants of the earth, are of a more durable constitution, and outlive the sons of men. And can we think that such material and mortal, that such inunderstanding souls should by God and Nature be furnished with bodies of so long persmanation, and that our spirits should be joined unto flesh so subject to corruption, so suddenly dissolvable, were it not that they lived but once, and so enjoyed that life for a longer season, and then went soul and body to the same destruction, never to be restored to the same subsistence?

Pearson, on the Creed, Art. 11.

TO INVOCATE.† v. a. [invoco, Lat.] To invoke; to implore; to call upon; to pray to.

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Be't lawful, that I invocate thy ghost,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne? Shaksp.
The church of Rome, in her publick and allowed offices, prays to dead men and women, who are, or whom they suppose to be, beatified; and these they invocate as preservers.

Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. ii. § 9.

If Dagon be thy god,
Go to his temple, invocate his aid
With solemnest devotion. Milton, S. A.

Here rather let me drudge, and earn my bread,
Till vermin or the draff of servile food
Consume me, and oft invocated death
Hasten the welcome end of all my pains.

Milton, S. A.

INVOCATION. n. s. [invocation, Fr. invocatio, Lat.]

1. The act of calling upon in prayer.

Is not the name of prayer usual to signify even all the service that ever we do unto God? And that for no other cause, as I suppose, but to shew that there is in religion no acceptable duty, which devout invocation of the name of God doth not either presuppose or infer. Hooker.

2. The form of calling for the assistance or presence of any being.

My invocation is

Honest and fair, and in his mistress' name.

Shakespeare.

The proposition of Gratius is contained in a line, and that of invocation in half a line. Wase.

I will strain myself to breathe out this one invocation. Hovell.

The whole poem is a prayer to fortune, and the invocation is divided between the two deities.

Addison on Italy.

INVOICE. n. s. [This word is perhaps corrupted from the French word envoyez, send.] A catalogue of the freight of a ship, or of the articles and price of goods sent by a factor.

TO INVOK'E. v. a. [invoco, Latin; invoker, French.] To call upon; to implore; to pray to; to invocate.

The power I will invok'e dwells in her eyes.

Sidney.

One peculiar nation to select
From all the rest, of whom to be invok'd.

Milton, P. L.

The skilful bard,
Striking the Thracian harp, invokes Apollo,
To make his hero and himself immortal. Prior.

TO INVOLVE.† v. a. [involvere, Latin.]

1. To inwrap; to cover with any thing circumfluent.

The floods my soul involv'd below,
The swallowing deeps besieg'd me round.

Sandys, Sacred Songs, p. 20.

Leave a singed bottom all involv'd
With stench and smoke. Milton, P. L.
No man could miss his way to heaven for want of light; and yet so vain are they as to think they oblige the world by involving it in darkness.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

In a cloud involv'd, he takes his flight,
Where Greeks and Trojans mix'd in mortal fight. Dryden.

2. To imply; to comprise.

We cannot demonstrate these things so as to shew that the contrary necessarily involves a contradiction. Tillotson.

3. To entwine; to join.

He knows his end with mine involv'd.

Milton, P. L.

4. To take in; to catch; to join.

The gath'ring number, as it moves along
Involves a vast involuntary throng. Pope.
Sin we should hate altogether; but our hatred of it may involve the person which we should not hate at all.

One death involves

Tyrants and slaves. Thomson, Summer.

5. To entangle.

This reference of the name to a thing whereof we have no idea, is so far from helping at all, that it only serves the more to involve us in difficulties. Locke.

As obscure and imperfect ideas often involve our reason, so do dubious words puzzle men's reason. Locke.

6. To complicate; to make intricate.

Some involv'd their snaky folds. Milton, P. L.
Syllogism is of necessary use, even to the lovers of truth, to shew them the fallacies that are often concealed in florid, witty, or involved discourses. Locke.

7. To blend; to mingle together confusedly.

Earth with hell mingle and involve.

Milton, P. L.

8. In mathematicks, to multiply any quantity by itself any given number of times.

INVOLUNTARILY.† adv. [from involuntary.] Not by choice; not spontaneously.

They are not the work of the soul itself, but involutarily obtruded upon it.

A. Baxter on the Soul, ii. 189.

INVOLVEDNESS.* n. s. [from involved.] State of being involved.

The involvedness of all men in the guilt of swearing. Boyle, against Custom. Swear, p. 13.

INVOLUNTARINESS.* n. s. [from involuntary.] Want of choice or will.

There is not an absolute involutariness in this engagement, but a mixed one.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 1. C. 8.

INVOLUNTARY. adj. [in and voluntarius, Latin. involontaire, French.]

1. Not having the power of choice.

The gath'ring number, as it moves along,
Involves a vast involuntary throng,
Who gently drawn, and struggling less and less,
Roll in her vortex, and her pow'r confess. Pope.

2. Not chosen; not done willingly.

The forbearance of that action, consequent to such command of the mind, is called voluntary; and whatsoever action is performed without such a thought of the mind, is called involuntary.

Locke.

But why, ah tell me, ah too dear!
Steels down my cheek th' involuntary tear? Pope.

INVOLUTION.† n. s. [involution, old Fr.; involutio, Latin.]

1. The act of involving or inwrapping.

2. The state of being entangled; complication.

Leave never an angle or involution in it.

Hammond, Works, iv. 502.

All things are mixed, and causes blended by mutual involutions. Glansville, Scipis.

3. That which is wrapped round any thing.

Great conceits are raised of the involution or membranous covering called the silly-how, sometimes found about the heads of children upon their birth; and is therefore preserved with great care, not only as medical in diseases, but effectual in success, concerning the infant and others; which is surely no more than continued superstition.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

INURBANITY.* n. s. [in and urbanity.] Want of courteousness; rudeness; unkindness.

An answer to pope Urban his inurbanity.

Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 503.

Discoursing such idle stuff to the maids and widows, as his own servile inurbanity forbears not to put into the Apostle's mouth.

Milton, Colasterion.

TO INURE.† v. a. [in and ure.]

1. To habituate; to make ready or willing by practice and custom; to accustom. It had anciently with before the thing practised, now to.

That it may no painful work endure,

It to strong labour can itself enure.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

England was a peaceable kingdom, and but lately enured to the mild and goodly government of the Confessor. Spenser on Ireland.

Because they so proudly insult, we must a little inure their ears with hearing, how others, whom they more regard, are accustomed to use the self-same language with us. Hooker.

If there might be added true art and learning, there would be as much difference, in maturity of judgement, between men therewith inured, and that which now men are, as between men that are now, and innocents. Hooker.

The forward hand, inur'd to wounds, makes way
Upon the sharpest fronts of the most fierce. Daniel.

Then cruel, by their sport to blood inur'd
Of fighting beasts, and men to beasts expos'd. Milton, P. R.

To inure
Our prompt obedience. Milton, P. L.

They, who had been most inured to business, had not in their lives ever undergone so great fatigue for twenty days together. Clarendon.

We may inure ourselves by custom to bear the extremities of weather without injury. Addison, Guardian.

2. To commit. Obsolete.

He gan that ladie strongly to appele
Of many baineous crimes by her enured.
Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 39.

To INURE.* v. n. To come into use or power; to have effect.

The decree of deprivation doth not inure, till a judicial sentence passeth further on us.

Ep. of Norwich, Lett. in 1690, Life of Kettlewell,
App. p. iv.

INUREMENT. n. s. [from inure.] Practice;
habit; use; custom; frequency.

If iron will acquire by mere continuance a secret appetite, and (as I may term it) an habitual inclination to the site it held before; then how much more may we hope, through the very same means, education being nothing else but a constant plight and inurement, to induce by custom good habits into a reasonable creature!

Wotton, Surv. of Education.

To INURN. v. a. [in and urn.] To in-tomb; to bury.

The sepulchre

Wherein we saw thee quietly inurn'd,
Hath op'd its ponderous and marble jaws
To cast thee up again. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Amidst the tears of Trojan dames inurn'd,
And by his loyal daughters truly mourn'd. Dryden.

INSITATION.* n. s. [insitatus, Latin.]
State of being unused; want of use.

The mammae of the male have not vanished by insitiation. Paley, Nat. Theol. ch. 23.

INUSTION, n. s. [inustio, Lat.] The act of burning.

INUTILE. adj. [inutile, French, inutilis,
Lat.] Useless; unprofitable.

To refer to heat and cold is a compendious and inutile speculation. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

INUTILITY.† n. s. [inutilité, Fr. inutilitas,
Lat.] Uselessness; unprofitableness.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

You see the inutility of foreign travel. Hurd.

INUTTERABLE.* adj. [in and utterable.]
Not to be uttered; inexpressible.

All prodigious things,

Abominable, inutterable, and worse
Than fables yet have feign'd, or fear conceiv'd. Milton, P. L.

The planets — they invoked with secret or inutterable invocations. Patrick on Gen. xli. 8.

INVULNERABLE. adj. [invulnerable,
Fr. invulnerabilis, Lat.] Not to be wounded; secure from wound.

Our cannon's malice vainly shall be spent
Against th' invulnerable clouds of heav'n. Shakespeare.

Nor vainly hope

To be invulnerable in those bright arms,
That mortal dint none can resist. Milton, P. L.

VOL. II.

Vanessa, though by Pallas taught,
By love invulnerable thought,
Searching in books for wisdom's aid,
Was in the very search betray'd. Swift.

INVULNERABLENESS. n. s. [from invul-nerable.] State of being invulnerable.

We wrestle not only against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places; which needs must be most dangerous unto us. 1. For their wariness that grapple with us. 2. For their invulnerableness, they being spirits; whereas we are flesh and blood. Bp. Prideaux, Euch. (1656.) p. 92.

To INWA'LL, v. a. [in and wall.] To inclose or fortify with a wall.

Three such towns in those places with the garrisons, would be so augmented as they would be able with little to inwall themselves strongly. Spenser on Ireland.

INWARD. } adv. [inpeapb, Saxon.]

1. Towards the internal parts; within.

The parts of living creatures that be more inwards, nourish more than the outward flesh. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The medicines which go to these magical ointments are so strong, that if they were used inwards
they would kill; and therefore they work potently, though outwards. Bacon.

2. With inflexion or incurvity; concavely.

He stretches out his arm in sign of peace, with his breast bending inward. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

3. Into the mind or thoughts.

Looking inward we are stricken dumb; looking upward we speak and prevail. Hooker.

Celestial light

Shine inwards, and the soul through all her pow'rs

INWARD. adj.

1. Internal; placed not on the outside;
but within.

He could not rest, but did his stout heart eat,
And waste his inward gall with deep despoight. Spenser, F. Q.

To each inward part

It shoots invisible. Milton, P. L.

Sickness, contributing no less than old age to the shaking down this scaffolding of the body, may discover the inward structure more plainly. Pope.

2. Reflecting; deeply thinking.

With outward smiles their flattery I receiv'd;
But bent and inward to myself again
Perplex'd, these matters I revolv'd, in vain. Prior.

3. Intimate; domestick; familiar.

Though the lord of the liberty do pain himself all he may to yield equal justice unto all, yet can there not but great abuses lurk in so inward and absolute a privilege. Spenser on Ireland.

All my inward friends abhorred me. Job, xix. 19.

4. Seated in the mind.

Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And for unfelt imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares. Shakspeare.

INWARD.† n. s. [Sax. innepebbe, the bowels.]

1. Any thing within, generally the bowels.
Seldom has this sense a singular.

Then sacrificing, laid

The inwards, and their fat, with incense strew'd
On the cleft wood, and all due rites perform'd. Milton, P. L.

They esteem them most profitable, because of the great quantity of fat upon their inwards. Mortimer.

2. Intimate; near acquaintance. Little used.

Sir, I was an inward of his; a sly fellow was the duke; and I know the cause of his withdrawing. Shakspeare.

INWARDLY.† adj. [Sax. inpeapblice; from inward.]

1. In the heart; privately.

That which inwardly each man should be, the church outwardly ought to testify, Hooker.

I bleed inwardly for my lord. Shakspeare.

Mean time the king, though inwardly he mourn'd,

In pomp triumphant to the town return'd,
Attended by the chiefs. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

2. In the parts within; internally.

Let Benedick, like cover'd fire,
Consume away in sighs, waste inwardly. Shaks.

Cantharides he prescribes both outwardly and inwardly. Arbuthnot on Coins.

3. With inflexion or concavity.

INWARDNESS.† n. s. [from inward.]

1. Intimacy; familiarity.

You know my inwardness and love
Is very much unto the prince and Claudio. Shakspeare.

His nephew is fallen into some trouble, by reason of his familiarity and inwardness with Sir
R. Cotton. Bourghier to Abp. Usher, (1629.) Lett. p. 415.

2. Internal state. Not noticed by Dr.
Johnson.

Sense cannot arrive to the inwardness
Of things, nor penetrate the crusty fence
Of consipated matter. More, Song of the Soul, i. i. 28.

To INWEAVE. v. a. preter. inwove or inweaved, part. pass. inwove, inwoven, or inweaved. [in and weave.]

1. To mix any thing in weaving, so that it forms part of the texture.

A fair border, wrought of sundry flowers,
Inwoven with an ivy winding trail. Spenser.

Down they cast
Their crowns, inwove with amaranth and gold. Milton, P. L.

And o'er soft palls of purple grain unfold
Rich tap'stry, stiffen'd with inwoven gold. Pope, Odys.

2. To intertwine; to complicate.

The roof
Of thickest covert was inwoven shade. Milt. P. L.

To INWHEEL.* v. a. [in and wheel.] To surround; to encircle.

Heaven's grace inwheel ye!
And all good thoughts and prayers dwell about ye!
Abundance be your friend! and holy Charity
Be ever at your hand to crown ye glorious!
Beccum, and Fl. Pilgrim.

INWIT.* n. s. [Saxon. inwic, conscientia.]
Mind; understanding. Obsolete. Wicliffe and Chaucer use it.

To INWOOD. v. a. [in and wood.] To hide
in woods. Not used.

He got out of the river, inwooded himself so as the ladies lost the marking his sportfulness. Sidney.

To INWRA'P. v. a. [in and wrap.]

1. To cover by involution; to involve.

And over them Arachne high did lift
Her cunning web, and spread her subtil net,
Inwrapped in foul smook. Spenser, F. Q.

This, as an amber drop, inwraps a bee,
Covering discovers your quick soul; that we May in your through-shine front our hearts' thoughts see. Donne.

2. To perplex; to puzzle with difficulty or obscurity.

The case is no sooner made than resolved : if it be made not unwrapped, but plainly and perspicuously. Bacon.

3. It is doubtful whether the following examples should not be enrap or unrap, from in and rap, rapio, Lat. to ravish or transport.

This pearl she gave me, I do feel't and see't;
And though 'tis wonder that enwraps me thus,
Yet 'tis not madness. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

For is such holy song
Enwrap our fancy long,
Time will run back, and fetch the age of gold.
Milton, Ode Natio.

To INWRE'ATHE. v. a. [in and wreathe.]
To surround as with a wreath.

Bind their resplendent locks inwreath'd with beams.
Milton, P. L.

Nor less the palm of peace inwreathes thy brow.
Thomson.

INWROUGHT. adj. [in and wrought.]
Adorned with work.

Next Canus, reverend sire, went footing slow,
His mantle hairy, and his bonnet sedge,
Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge
Like to that sanguine flower, inscrib'd with woe.
Milton, Lycidas.

JOB.† n. s. [A low word now much in use, of which I cannot tell the etymology. Dr. Johnson. — “Κόπος (kopos) in Greek signifies labour, and in our ordinary word job, a piece of work, we again trace it under a different form.” Whiter, Etym. Magn. p. 276.]

1. Petty, piddling work; a piece of chance work; in some places a piece of labour undertaken at a stated price.

2. A low, mean, lucrative, busy affair.

He was now with his old friends, like an old favourite of a cunning minister after the job is over.
Arbutnot.

No cheek is known to blush, no heart to throb,
Save when they lose a question or a job. Pope.
Such patents as these never were granted with a view of being a job, for the interest of a particular person to the damage of the publick. Swift.

3. A sudden stab with a sharp instrument. [kieb, Germ. a stroke, from hauwen, to strike. Wachter, and Serenius.]

To JOB. v. a.

1. To strike suddenly with a sharp instrument.

As an ass with a galled back was feeding in a meadow, a raven pitched upon him, and sat jobbing of the sore.
L'Estrange.

2. To drive in a sharp instrument.

Let peacocks and turkey leave jobbing their bex.
Tusser.

The work would, where a small irregularity of stuff should happen, draw or job the edge into the stuff.
Mozon.

To JOB. v. n. To play the stockjobber; to buy and sell as a broker.

The judge shall job, the bishop bite the town,
And mighty dukes pack cards for half a crown.
Pope.

JOB'S Tears. n. s. An herb. Ainsworth.
JO'BBER.† n. s. [from job.]

1. A man who buys and sells stock in the publick funds. See STOCKJOBBER.
So cast it in the southern seas,
And view it through a jobber's bill;
Put on what spectacles you please,
Your guinea's but a guinea still.
Swift.

2. One who engages in a low lucrative affair.

An absolute discouragement to all sorts of jobbers, gamesters, fortune-hunters and jockeys.
Hudrop, Lett. on the Commandments, p. 20.

3. One who does chancework.

JO'BBERNOWL.† n. s. [Most probably from jobbe, Flemish, dull, and nowl, hnl, Saxon, a head.] Loggerhead; block-head.

His guts are in his brains, huge jobbernoule,
Right gurnet's head; the rest without all soule.
Marston, Scourge of Villainy, (1599,) il. 6.

Dull-pated jobbernoule.
Marston, Scourge, &c. il. 7.

And like the world, men's jobbernouls
Turn round upon their ears the poles. Hudibras.

JO'CKEY. n. s. [from Jack, the diminutive of John, comes Jackey, or, as the Scotch, jockey, used for any boy, and particularly for a boy that rides race-horses.]

1. A fellow that rides horses in the race.

These were the wise ancients, who heaped up greater honours on Pindar's jockies than on the poet himself. Addison.

2. A man that deals in horses.

3. A cheat; a trickish fellow.

To JO'CKEY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To juggle by riding against one.

2. To cheat; to trick.

JOCO'SE. adj. [jocosus, Lat.] Merry; waggish; given to jest.

If the subject be sacred, all ludicrous turns, and jocose or comical airs, should be excluded, lest young minds learn to trifle with the awful solemnities of religion. Watts.

JOCO'SELY. adv. [from jocose.] Waggishly; in jest; in game.

Spondanus imagines that Ulysses may possibly speak jocosely, but in truth Ulysses never behaves with levity. Broom.

JOCO'SENESS. } n. s. [from jocose.] Wag-JOCO'SITY. } gery; merriment.

A laugh there is of contempt or indignation, as well as of mirth or jocosity. Brown, Vulg. Err.

JOCOSE'RIous.* adj. [jocus, Latin, and serious.] Partaking of mirth and seriousness.

Laugh aloud with them that laugh;
Or drink a jocoserious cup
With souls who've took their freedom up.
Green's Poem of the Spleen.

JO'CLAR.† adj. [jocularis, Latin.] Used in jest; merry; jocose; waggish;

not serious: used both of men and things.

My name is Jopphiel,
Intelligence to the sphere of Jupiter,
An airy jocular spirit. B. Jonson, Masques.

These jocular slanders are often as mischievous as those of deepest design. Gov. of the Tongue.

The satire is a dramatick poem; the style is partly serious and partly jocular. Dryden.

Good Vellum, don't be jocular. Addison.

JOCULA'RITY. n. s. [from jocular.] Merriment; disposition to jest.

The wits of those ages were short of these of ours; when men could maintain immutable faces, — and persist unalterably at the efforts of *jocular*ity. Brown, Vulg. Err.

JO'CLARLY.* adv. [from jocular.] In a jocose way.

Jocularly abusing the silly women.

Bp. Lavington, Moravians compared, p. 98.

JO'CUNDNESS.* n. s. [from jocund.] State of being jocund. Sherwood.

To JOG.† v. a. [schocken, Dutch, Dr. Johnson. — Su. Goth. skaka, to shake; or Icel. jacka, to move continually.] To push; to shake by a sudden impulse; to give notice by a sudden push.

Now leaps he upright, jogs me, and cries, Do you see Yonder well-favour'd youth? Donne.

The seaman's needle, which is jogged and troubled, never leaves moving till it find the north point again. Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 17.
This said, he jogg'd his good steed nigher,
And steer'd him gently toward the squire. Hudibras.

I was pretty well pleased while I expected, till fruition jogged me out of my pleasing slumber, and I knew it was but a dream. Norris.

Sudden I jogg'd Ulysses, who was laid fast by my side. Pope, Odyssey.

To JOG. v. n.

1. To move by succession; to move with small shocks like those of a low trot.

The door is open, Sir, there lies good way,
You may be jogging while your boots are green. Shakspeare.

Here lieth one, who did most truly prove
That he could never die while he could move;
So hung his destiny, never to rot,
While he might still jog on, and keep his trot. Milton, Ep. on Hobson.

2. To travel idly and heavily.

Jog on, jog on, the foot-path way,
And merrily lent the stile-a day.
A merry heart goes all the day,
Your sad tires in a mile-a. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Away they trotted together: but as they were jogging on, the wolf spied a bare place about the dog's neck. L'Estrange.

Thus they jog on, still tricking, never thriving,
And murdering plays, which they miscall reviving. Dryden.

Joc. n. s. [from the verb,]

1. A push; a slight shake; a sudden interruption by a push or shake; a hint given by a push.

As a leopard was valuing himself upon his party-coloured skin, a fox gave him a jog, and whispered, that the beauty of the mind was above that of a painted outside.

Nick found the means to slip a note into Lewis's hands, which Lewis as slyly put into John's pocket, with a pinch or a jog to warn him what he was about.

A letter when I am inditing,
Comes Cupid and gives me a jog,
And I fill all the paper with writing
Of nothing but sweet Molly Mog. Swift.
2. A rub; a small stop; an irregularity of motion.

How that which penetrates all bodies without the least jog or obstruction, should impress a motion on any, is inconceivable. Glanville, Scepis.

JO'GGER. n. s. [from jog.] One who moves heavily and dully.

They with their fellow joggers of the plough.

JO'GGING.* n. s. [from jog.] The act of shaking. Dryden.

Like the jogging of young trees, they do but more fully confirm and settle the rule they seem to shake.

There is no weariness like that which rises from doubting, from the perpetual jogging of an unfixed reason. South, Sermon. viii. 411.

To JO'GGLE.† v. n. [from jog. See To JOG.] To shake.

In the head of man, the base of the brain is parallel to the horizon; by which there is less danger of the two brains jogging, or slipping out of their place. Derham.

To JO'GGLE.* v. a. To push.

A foolish desire I had to joggle thee into pre-ferment. Beaumont and Fl. The Captain.

JOHN.* A word often used in contempt; as a country John. See the etymology of JACK.

JOHN-A-NOKES.* A fictitious name, made use of in law proceedings; and, as well as that of John-a-stiles, usually attending it, a subject of humorous distinction by several writers.

Pr'ythee, stay a while;
Looke, you comes John-a-noke, and John-a-stile;
They're nought but slow-pac'd, dilatory pleas,
Denure demurrers!

Marston, Scourge of Vill. (1599.) ii. 7.
The humble petition of John-a-nokes and John-a-stiles sheweth, that your petitioners have had causes depending in Westminster Hall above five hundred years!

Spectator, No. 577.

JO'HNAPPLE. n. s.

A johnapple is a good relished sharp apple the Spring following, when most other fruit is spent: they are fit for the cyder plantations. Mortimer.

He grudges not our moderate and seasonable jollities. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 69.

The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar;
All now was turn'd 'd to jollity and game.

To luxury and riot, feast and dance. Milt. P. L.

Good men are never so surprised as in the midst of their jollities, nor so fatally overtaken and caught as when the table is made the snare.

With branches we the fanes adorn, and waste
In jollity the day ordain'd to be the last. Dryden, Æn.

My heart was filled with melancholy to see several dropping in the midst of mirth and jollity. Addison, Spect.

3. Handsomeness; beauty. See the third sense of JOLLY.

When nature is in her chiefest jollity, she tapes the whole universe with a world of delicious flowers. Parthenia Sacra, (1635.) p. 31.

JO'LLY. † adj. [joli, Fr.; jovialis, Lat. Formerly jolly; and sometimes joylife, as by Gower; and afterwards joyly: "Is not your doctrine a joyly and hole-some doctrine?" Stapleton Fort. of the Faith, 1565. fol. 87.]

1. Gay; merry; airy; cheerful; lively; jovial.

Like a jolly troop of huntsmen, come O'er lusty English. Shakespeare, K. John.
O nightingale!

Thou with fresh hope the lover's heart do'st fill,
While the jolly hours lead on propitious May.

Milton, Sonnet.

All my griefs to this are jolly,
Nought so sad as melancholy.

Burton, Anat. of Mel.

Even ghosts had learn'd to groan;
But free from punishment, as free from sin,
The shades liv'd jolly, and without a king.

Dryden, Juv.

This gentle knight, inspir'd by jolly May,
Forsook his easy couch at early day.

Dryden.

A shepherd now along the plain he roves,
And with his jolly pipe delights the groves. Prior.

2. Plump; like one in high health.

He catches at an apple of Sodom, which though it may entertain his eye with a florid, jolly white and red, yet, upon the touch, it shall fill his hand only with stench and foulness. South.

3. Handsome; well-favoured. Cotgrave.

Full jolly knight he seem'd, and faire did sit.

Spenser, F. Q.

JOLLY-Boat.* A term for a ship's small boat; probably a corruption of julle,
Swedish, a yawl.

To JOLT.† v. n. [I know not whence derived. Dr. Johnson.—Perhaps from the Swedish hjul, a wheel; from which Serenius derives jultra, to totter.] To shake as a carriage on rough ground.

Every little unevenness of the ground will cause such a jolting of the chariot as to hinder the motion of its sails. Wilkins.

Violent motion, as jolting in a coach, may be used in this case. Arbutnot on Diet.

A coach and six horses is the utmost exercise you can bear, and how glad would you be, if it could waft you in the air to avoid jolting. Swift.

To JOLT.† v. a. To shake one as a carriage does.

Is it not very unhappy that Lysander must be attacked and applauded in a wood, and Corinna jolted and commended in a stage-coach?

Tatler, No. 215.

JOLT. n. s. [from the verb.] Shock; violent agitation.

The symptoms are, bloody water upon a sudden jolt or violent motion. Arbutnot on Diet.

but afterwards the motion was easy. Swift.

JO'LTER.* n. s. [from jolt.] That which shakes or jolts. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

JO'LTHEAD.† n. s. [I know not whence derived. Dr. Johnson.—Probably from jole, the head; a contemptuous reduplication.] A great head; a dolt; a blockhead.

Fie on thee, jolthead, thou canst not read.

Shakespeare.

Had man been a dwarf, he had scarce been a reasonable creature; for he must then have either had a jolthead, and so there would not have been body and blood enough to supply his brain with spirits; or he must have had a small head, and so there would not have been brain enough for his business. Grew.

JO'NICK.* adj. [Fr. Ionique; from Ion
in Greece.]

1. Belonging to one of the orders of architecture.

There is an Ionick pillar in the Santa Maria Transtevere, where the marks of the compass are still to be seen on the volute. Addison on Italy.

receptaculum. Dr. Johnson from Skinner.
So Serenius; goer, Su. Goth. excrementum, and den, cavea. Both denoting a receptacle of filth. It is sometimes written jordan. Chaucer uses it; "thyne urylns, and thy jordanes," Pardoner's Prologue; where
Mr. Tyrwhitt notices the mention of the word by Walsingham; "duæ ollæ, quas jordanes vocamus."] A pot.

They will allow us ne'er a jorden, and then we leak in your chimney; and your chamberlye breeds fleas like a loach. Shakespeare.

This China jorden let the chief o'ercome
Replenish not ingloriously at home.

Pope, Dunciad.

The copper-pot can boil milk, heat porridge, hold small-beer, or in case of necessity, serve a

JOT.† n. s. [jota, Gothick; iota, Saxon;
iōta, Greek; jod, Heb. See also IOA.]
A point; a tittle; the least quantity assignable.

As superfluous flesh did rot,
Amendment ready still at hand did wait,
To pluck it out with pincers fiery hot,
That soon in him was left no one corrupt jot.

Spenser, F. Q.

Go Eros, send his treasure after, do it;
Dettain no jot, I charge thee.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Let me not stay a jot from dinner; go, get it ready. Shakespeare.

This nor hurts him nor profits you a jot;
Forbear it therefore; give your cause to Heav'n.

Shakespeare.

This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood;
The words expressly are a pound of flesh.

Shakespeare.

I argue not

Against Heaven's hand, or will; nor bate one jot
Of heat or hope; but still bear up, and steer Right onwards. Milton, Sonnet.

You might, with every jot as much justice, hang me up, because I'm old, as beat me because I'm impotent. L'Estrange.

A man may read the discourses of a very rational author, and yet acquire not one jot of knowledge.
Locke.

The final event will not be one jot less the consequence of our own choice and actions, for God's having from all eternity foreseen and determined what that event shall be. Rogers.

To JOT.* v. a. [from the noun.] To set down; to make a memorandum of.
Modern.

IO'TA.* n. s. [iota, Sax.; iota, Fr. See
JOT.] A tittle.

It is no less than a direct affront to our Creator and Governor, in a branch of that law, that he values as a transcript of his own holiness, and enforces by the penalty of eternal death threatened to the transgressors of the least iota of it.

Barrow, vol. i. S. 10.

Nor have all the self-reflections or abstractions of the most exalted minds, from any combinations or alterations of ideas, been able, amidst their other prodigious discoveries, to add a single iota to one of these.

Ellis, Knowl. of Divine Things, p. 115.

JO'TTING.* n. s. [from To jot.] A memorandum;
as, cursory jottings. Of very recent usage. The Scotch also employ this word. See Dr. Jamieson's Dictionary.

JO'VIAL.† adj. [jovialis, Lat.; jovial,
French; which Cotgrave renders "jovial, sanguine, born under the planet
Jupiter," and he describes a jovialist as
"one that is naturally, and by complexion, pleasant or sanguine." A learned etymologist of modern times considers the word, in its secondary sense, as connected with jubilo, meaning to make a noise of loud and unrestrained merriment. "From the accidental similarity of jovial, loudly joyous, to jovial, relating to Jupiter, a confusion has arisen; and our ancient poets, as well as their commentators, appear to have imagined, that jovial, in the sense of merry, was deduced from jovial, as a quality belonging to Jove." Whiter's Etymol. Magn. p. 219. Skinner agrees with Cotgrave.]

Under the influence of Jupiter. The fixed stars are astrologically differentiated by the planets, and are esteemed martial or jovial, according to the colours whereby they answer these planets. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Gay; airy; merry; cheerful. The heavens always jovial, Look'd on them lovely. Spenser, F. Q. ii. xii. 51.
My lord, sleek o'er your rugged looks,
Be bright and jovial 'mong your guests.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Our jovial star reign'd at his birth.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

Some men, of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company, into which they come, to be sad and ill-disposed; and contrariwise, others of a jovial nature dispose the company to be merry and cheerful. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

His odes are some of them panegyrical, others moral, the rest jovial or bacchanalian. Dryden.

Perhaps the jovial that charm'd the sprightly crowd,

And made the jovial table laugh so loud,
To some false notion ow'd its poor pretence. Prior.

JO'VIALIST.* n. s. [from jovial.] One who lives jovially. Cotgrave and Sherwood both give this word. See the etymology of JOVIAL.

What talk we to these jovialists? It is liberty, with them, for a man to speak what he thinks, to take what he likes, to do what he lists.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 21.

The jovialists of the world drink wine in bowls.

Bp. Hall, Works, iii. 678.

JO'VIALITY.† adv. [from jovial.] Merrily; gaily.

Though his table be jovially furnished.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 235.

Fare jovially, and clap your hands.

B. Jonson, For. Epilogue.

JO'VIALNESS.† n. s. [from jovial.] Gaiety; merriment.

They are not become true penitents. — Swearing, with such persons, is but a grace and lustre to their speech; — lying but wit's craft or policy; drunkenness, jovialness or good fellowship; — thus do they baptize vice by the name of virtue.

Hewitt, Serm. (1658), p. 32.

JO'VIALTY.* n. s. [from jovial.] Merriment; festivity.

The first day vapours away in tobacco, feasts, and other jovialty. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 308.

The night, — he had purposed to spend in jovialty, whilst others slept.

Gregory, Posthum. (1650), p. 245.

To think that this perhaps might be the last banquet they should taste of; that they should themselves shortly become the feast of worms and serpents, could not but somewhat spoil the gust of their highest delicacies, and disturb the sport of their loudest jovialties.

Barrow, Works, vol. iii. S. 14.

JO'UISANCE. n. s. [rejouissance, Fr.] Jollity; merriment; festivity. Obsolete.

Collin, my dear, when shall it please thee sing,

As thou wert wont, songs of some jouisance?

Thy muse too long slumbereth in sorrowing,
Lulled asleep through love's misgovernance.

Spenser.

TO JOUNCE.* v. a. To shake; to jolt: as, a jouncing trot, i. e. a hard rough trot. Norfolk Dial. Grose. Hence a jounce, in the same part of England, is a jolt or shake. Probably from the old French jancer, "to stir a horse in the stable till he sweat withal." Cotgrave.

TO JOUR.* To shake up; to dash. See TO JAUP. Grose, and Craven Dialect.

JO'URNAL. adj. [giornale, Fr. giornale, Italian.] Daily; quotidian. Out of use.

Now can the golden Phebus stop to steep

His fiery face in billows of the west,

And his faint steeds water'd in ocean deep,
Whilst from their journal labours they did rest.

Spenser, F. Q.

Ere twice

The sun has made his journal greeting to

The under generation, you shall find

Your safety manifested.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

Stick to your journal course; the breach of custom

Is breach of all. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

JO'URNAL. n. s. [journal, Fr.; giornale, Italian.]

1. A diary; an account kept of daily transactions.

Edward kept a most judicious journal of all the principal passages of the affairs of his estate.

Hayward on Edu. VI.

Time has destroyed two noble journals of the navigation of Hanno and of Hamilcar.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Any paper published daily.

JO'URNALIST.† n. s. [from journal.] A writer of journals.

The reader will be surprized to find the above-mentioned journalist taking so much care of a life, that was filled with such inconsiderable actions.

Addison, Spect. No. 318.

TO JO'URNALIZE.* v. a. [from journal.] To enter in an account of daily transactions.

He kept his journal very diligently, but then what was there to journalize? Johnson.

JO'URNEY. n. s. [journée, Fr.]

1. The travel of a day.

When Duncan is asleep,

Whereto the rather shall this day's hard journey
Soundly invite him. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Scarce the sun

Hath finish'd half his journey. Milton, P. L.

2. Travel by land; distinguished from a voyage or travel by sea.

So are the horses of the enemy,

In general journey bated and brought low.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Before the light of the gospel, mankind travelled like people in the dark, without any certain prospect of the end of their journey, or of the way that led to it. Rogers.

He for the promis'd journey bids prepare
The smooth hair'd horses and the rapid car.

Pope, Odyssey.

3. Passage from place to place.

Some, having a long journey from the upper regions, would float up and down a good while.

Burnet, Theory.

Light of the world, the ruler of the year,
Still as thou dost thy radiant journies run,

Through every distant climate own,
That in fair Albion thou hast seen

The greatest prince the brightest queen. Prior.

TO JO'URNEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To travel; to pass from place to place.

Gentlemen of good esteem

Are journeying to salute the emperor. Shakespeare.

We are journeying unto the place, of which the Lord said, I will give it you. Numbers, x. 29.

Since such love's natural station is, may still

My love descend, and journey down the hill;

Not panting after growing beauties, so

I shall ebb on with them who homeward go.

Donne.

I have journeyed this morning, and it is now the heat of the day; therefore your Lordship's discourses had need content my ears very well, to make them intreat my eyes to keep open. Bacon.

Over the tent a cloud

Shall rest by day, a fiery gleam by night,

Save when they journey. Milton, P. L.

Having heated his body by journeying, he took cold upon the ground. Wisenam, Surgery.

JO'URNEYMAN. n. s. [journée, a day's work, Fr. and man.] A hired workman; a workman hired by the day.

They were called journeyman that wrought with others by the day, though now by statute it be extended to those likewise that covenant to work in their occupation with another by the year. Cowel.

Players have so strutted and bellowed, that I have thought some of nature's journeyman had made men, and not made them well.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

I intend to work for the court myself, and will have journeyman under me to furnish the rest of the nation. Addison.

Says Frog to Bull, this old rogue will take the business into his hands: we must starve or turn journeyman to old Lewis Baboon.

Arbuthnot, John Bull.

JO'URNEYWORK. n. s. [journée, Fr. and work.] Work performed for hire; work done by the day.

Did no committee sit, where he Might cut out journeywork for thee?

And set thee a task with subordination,

To stich up sale and sequestration. Hudibras.

Her family she was forced to hire out at journeywork to her neighbours. Arbuthnot, John Bull.

JOUST.† n. s. [joust, Fr. jost, impetus; ant. Fland. Serenius.] Tilt; tournament; mock fight. It is now written less properly just. Dr. Johnson. —

Spenser writes it giust, following the Italian giostro. Lat. justa.

And sing of bloody Mars, of wars, of giusts.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Oct.

Bases, and tinsel trappings, gorgeous knights

At joust and tournament. Milton, P. L.

TO JOUST.† v. n. [jouster, Fr.] To run in the tilt.

So forth they went and both together giusted.

Spenser, F. Q.

All who since

Jousted in Asprament or Montalban. Milton, P. L.

JOWL.* See Jole.

JO'WLEB.† n. s. [perhaps corrupted from howler, as making a hideous noise after the game, whom the rest of the pack follow as their leader. Dr. Johnson. —

Rather perhaps from jowl, as jole, the head, is sometimes written; hounds

having usually large heads.] The name of a hunting dog or beagle.

See him drag his feeble legs about,

Like hounds ill-coupled: jowler lugs him still

Through hedges, ditches, and through all this ill.

Dryden.

JO'WTER. n. s. [perhaps corrupted from jolter.]

Plenty of fish is vented to the fish-drivers, whom we call jowters. Carew.

JOY.† n. s. [joye, Fr. gioia, Italian. Dr. Johnson. — Menage deduces the word from the Latin gaudium; Morin from the Greek interjection io, Lat. io, a cry of joy. The abbreviation of gau for gaudium, however exists.]

1. The passion produced by any happy accident; gladness; exultation; delight. Dr. Johnson here cites the definition of Locke: "Joy is a delight of the mind, from the consideration of the present, or assured approaching possession of a good." It is thus minutely distinguished by one of our old learned divines. "He doth not say, 'with food and joy,' Acts,

xiv. 17. For joy, properly taken, hath its seat in the mind and spirit of man; nor is it there placed without the spirit of God; whereas the gladness, whereof the apostle there speaks, may harbour in the inferiour or affective part. This difference, which we now observe, between joy and gladness in our English, the Greek writers curiously observe between εὐποροῦν and χαρὰ; so do the Latins between letitia and gaudium." Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 541.

There appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not shew itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness. Shakespeare.

There should not be such heaviness in their destruction, as shall be joy over them that are persuaded to salvation. 2 Esdr.

The lightsome passion of joy was not that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension, and plays upon the surface of the soul.

South.

2. Gaiety; merriment; festivity.

The roofs with joy resound;
And hymen, ô hymen rung around. Dryden.

3. Happiness; felicity.

My lord Bassanio, and my gentle lady,
I wish you all the joy that you can wish. Shaks.
Come, love and health to all:
Then I'll sit down: give me some wine:
I drink to the general joy of the whole table. Shaks.
Almeyda smiling came,
Attended with a train of all her race,
Whom in the rage of empire I had murder'd;
But now, no longer foes, they gave me joy
Of my new conquest. Dryden, Don Sebast.

The bride,

Lovely herself, and lovely by her side,
A bevy of bright nymphs, with sober grace,
Came glittering like a star, and took her place:
Her heavenly form beheld, all wish'd her joy;
And lightly wanted, but in vain, their wishes all employ. Dryden.

The said Mrs. Flambeau had not been to see the lady Townly, and wish her joy, since her marriage with Sir Ralph. Tailler, No. 262.

4. A term of fondness.

Now our joy,

Although the last, not least; —
What can you say? Shakspeare, K. Lear.

To Joy. v. n. [from the noun.] To rejoice; to be glad; to exult.

Sometimes I joy when glad occasion fits,
And mask in mirth like to a comedy;
Soon after, when my joy to sorrow flits,
I will make my woes a tragedy. Spenser.
I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd
Where our right valiant father is become. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

He will joy over thee with singing. Zeph. iii. 17.

I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation. Hab. iii. 18.

Exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus, because his spirit was refreshed by you. 2 Cor. vii. 13.

They laugh, we weep; they joy while we lament. Psalmist.

No man imparteth his joys to his friend, but he joyeth the more; and no man imparteth his griefs, but he grieveth the less. Bacon, Ess.

Well then, my soul, joy in the midst of pain;
Thy Christ that conquer'd hell, shall from above
With greater triumph yet return again,
And conquer his own justice with his love. Wotton.

Joy thou,

In what he gives to thee, this paradise,
And thy fair Eve. Milton, P. L.

Their cheerful age with honour youth attends,
Joy'd that from pleasure's slavery they are free. Denham.

To Joy. v. a.

1. To congratulate; to entertain kindly.
Like us they love or hate, like us they know
To joy the friend, or grapple with the foe. Prior.

2. To gladden; to exhilarate.

She went to Palema, meaning to delight her eyes and joy her thoughts with the conversation of her beloved sister. Sidney.

My soul was joy'd in vain;
For angry Neptune rous'd the raging main. Pope.

3. [Jouir de, French.] To enjoy; to have happy possession of.

Let us hence,

And let her joy her raven-colour'd love. Titus, Andron.

I might have liv'd, and joy'd immortal bliss,
Yet willingly chose rather death with thee. Milton, P. L.

Th' usurper joy'd not long
His ill-got crown. Dryden, Span. Fr.

JO'YANCE. n. s. [joiant, old French.] Gaiety; festivity. Obsolete.

With joyance bring her, and with jollity. Spenser.
His gladfulness and kingly joyance. Spenser.

JO'YFUL. adj. [joy and full.]

1. Full of joy; glad; exulting.

They blessed the king, and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart. 1 Kings, viii. 66.

My soul shall be joyful in my God. Isa. lxi. 10.

2. Sometimes it has of before the cause of joy.

Six brave companions from each ship we lost:
With sails outspread we fly th' unequal strife,
Sad for their loss, but joyful of our life. Pope, Odysse.

JO'YFULLY. adv. [from joyful.] With joy; gladly.

If we no more meet 'till we meet in heav'n,
Then joyfully, my noble lord of Bedford,
And my kind kinsmen, warriors all, adieu. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or sooner did devotion the sign to file:
With such alacrity they bore away,
As if to praise them all the states stood by. Dryden.

The good Christian considers pains only as necessary passages to a glorious immortality; that, through this dark scene of fancied horror, sees a crown and a throne, and everlasting blessings prepared for him, joyfully receives his summons, as he has long impatiently expected it. Wake.

JO'YFULNESS. n. s. [from joyful.] Gladness; joy.

Thou servest not the Lord thy God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things. Deut. xxviii. 47.

JO'YLESS. adj. [from joy.]

1. Void of joy; feeling no pleasure.

A little joy enjoys the queen thereof;
For I am she, and altogether joyless. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

With downcast eyes the joyless victor sat,
Revolving in his alter'd soul
The various turns of chance below:
And now and then a sigh he stole,
And tears began to flow. Dryden, Alex. Feast.

2. It has sometimes of before the object.

With two fair eyes his mistress burns his breast;
He looks and languishes, and leaves his rest;
Forsakes his food, and, pining for the last,
Is joyless of the grove, and spurns the growing grass. Dryden.

3. Giving no pleasure.

A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue:
Here is the babe, as loathsome as a toad. Titus, Andron.

Here love his golden shafts employs; here lights
His constant lamp, and waves his purple wings:
Reigns here, and revels: not in the bought smiles
Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unendear'd. Milton, P. L.

The pure in heart shall see God; and if any others could so invade their inclosure, as to take heaven by violence, it surely would be a very joyless possession. Decay of Chr. Piety.

He forgets his sleep, and loaths his food,
That youth, and health, and war are joyless to him. Advison.

JO'YLESSLY. adv. [from joyless.] Without receiving pleasure; without giving pleasure.

JO'YLESSNESS. n. s. [from joyless.] State of being joyless.

Is the joy of heaven no perfecter in itself, but that it needs the sourness of this life to give it a taste? Is that joy, and that glory, but a companative glory, and a comparative joy? not such in itself, but such in comparison of the joylessness and the ingloriousness of this world? I know, my God, it is far, far otherwise.

Donne, Devot. (1625.) p. 426.

JO'YOUS.† adj. [old French, joious; modern, joyeux.]

1. Glad; gay; merry.

Most joyous man, on whom the shining sun
Did shew his face, myself I did esteem,
And that my falsar friend did no less joyous deem. Spenser, F. Q.

Is this your joyous city, whose antiquity is of ancient days? Isaiah, xxiii. 7.

Joyous the birds; fresh gales and gentle airs

Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beasts, by nature stung, renew their love. Dryden.

Fast by her flowery bank the sons of Arcas,
Favourites of Heaven, with happy care protect Their fleecy charge, and joyous drink her wave. Prior.

2. Giving joy.

They all as glad as birds of joyous prime,
Thence led her forth, about her dancing round. Spenser, F. Q.

3. It has of sometimes before the cause of joy.

Round our death-bed every friend should run,
And joyous of our conquest early won;
While the malicious world with envious tears
Should grudge our happy end, and wish it theirs. Dryden.

JO'YOUSLY.* adv. [from joyous.] With joy; with gladness. Huilet, and Barret.

They were of the senate and people joyously received. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 131.

JO'YOUSNESS.* n. s. [from joyous.] State of being joyous.

IPPECACUA'NHA.† n. s. [An Indian plant.]

Ippecacuanha is a small irregularly contorted root, rough, dense, and firm. One sort is of a dusky greyish colour on the surface, and of a paler grey when broken, brought from Peru: the other sort is a small root, resembling the former; but it is of a deep dusky brown on the outside, and white when broken, brought from the Brazils. The grey ought to be preferred, because the brown is apt to operate more roughly. Hill, Mat. Med.

The violent operation of ippecacuanha lies in its resin, but the saline extract is a gentle purge and diuretic by the stimulus of its salts.

Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 84.

ΙΠΠΟΚΡΑΣ.* n. s. [See HIPPOCRAS. Where Dr. Johnson follows the opinions of many in explaining it a medicated wine, quasi vinum Hippocratis. Morin thinks it more probably derived from the Gr. ἵππο and κράσις, a mixture, and to have no connection with the name of Hippocrates. But Mr. Tyrwhitt says, that "ἵπποκρας, wine mixed with spices and other ingredients, was so named, because strained through a woollen cloth, called the sleeve of Hippocrates."] Spiced wine.

He drinketh ἵπποκρας, &c. Chaucer, Merch. Tale.
Draughts of ἵπποκρας out of a great bowl.
Sir J. Finett, Observ. on Ambass. (1656.) p. 11.

IRASCIB'ILITY.* n. s. [from irascible.] Propensity or disposition to anger.

The irascibility of this class of tyrants is generally exerted upon petty provocations.

Johnson, Rambler, No. 112.

IRA'SCIBLE. adj. [irascibilis, low Latin; irascible, Fr.] Partaking of the nature of anger.

The irascible passions follow the temper of the heart, and the concupiscent distractions the crisis of the liver. Brown.

I know more than one instance of irascible passions subdued by a vegetable diet. Arbutnot on Aliments.

We are here in the country surrounded with blessings and pleasures, without any occasion of exercising our irascible faculties. Digby to Pope.

IRA'SCIBLENESS.* n. s. [from irascible.] State of being angry. Scott.

IRE.† n. s. [ira, Latin; ippe, Saxon; ire, old French:

"My good father, tell me this;
"What thing is ire? Sonne, it is That in our English wrath is home."

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 3.]

Anger; rage; passionate hatred.

She lik'd not his desire;

Fain would be free, but dreaded parents' ire.

Sidney.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers' graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's, that so long
Perplex'd the Greek and Cytherea's son.

Milton, P. L.

The sentence, from thy head remov'd, may light
On me, sole cause to thee of all this woe;
Me! me! only just object of his ire.

Milton, P. L.

For this the avenging Power employs his darts,
And empties all his quiver in our hearts;
Thus will persist, relentless in his ire,
Till the fair slave be render'd to her sire.

Dryden.

IREFUL.* adj. [ire and full.] Angry; raging; furious.

The ireful bastard Orleans, that drew blood
From thee, my boy, I soon encounter'd.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

By many hands your father was subdued;
But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

There learn'd this maid of arms the ireful guise.

Fairfax.

Is he not ireful, and replenish'd with wrath and displeasure?

Homilies, Sermon ii. against Adultery.

In midst of all the dome misfortune sat,
And gloomy discontent and fell debate,
And madness laughing in his ireful mood.

Dryden.

IREFULLY.† adv. [from ire.] With ire;

[He] irefully enrag'd would needs to open arms.

Drayton, Polyol. S. 4.

IRENARCH.* n. s. [irenarque, French; εἰρηναρχία, Greek; from εἰρήνη, peace, and ἀρχή, a ruler.] An officer of the old Greek empire, employed to preserve public tranquillity.

IRENICAL.* adj. [εἰρηναῖος, Gr.] Pacifick; desirous of peace.

How meek his temper was, his many irenical tracts do shew.

Pref. to Bp. Hall's Rem. (1660), sign. b.

IRIS. n. s. [Latin.]

1. The rainbow.

Beside the solar iris, which God shewed unto Noah, there is another lunar, whose efficient is the moon. Brown.

2. Any appearance of light resembling the rainbow.

When both bows appeared more distinct, I measured the breath of the interior iris 2 gr. 10', and the breadth of the red yellow, and green in the exterior iris, was to the breadth of the same colours in the interior 3 to 2. Newton, Opt.

3. The circle round the pupil of the eye.

4. The flower-de-luce.

Iris all hues, roses, and jessamine.

Milton, P. L.

IRISH.* n. s.

1. Natives of Ireland. [Erin.]

All the customs of the Irish, which I have often noted and compared, would minister occasion of a most ample discourse of the original of them, and the antiquity of that people, which in truth I think to be more ancient than most that I know in this end of the world. Spenser on Ireland.

It was from the time when he [Swift] first began to patronize the Irish, that they may date their riches and prosperity. Johnson, Life of Swift.

2. The Irish language.

There are many compositions of letters in Irish, which have not the same force in English.

Richardson on the Irish Language, (1712.)

3. A game of elder times.

The inconstancy of Irish fitsly represents the changeableness of humane occurrences, since it ever stands so fickle that one malignant throw can quite ruin a never so well built game.

Hall, Horæ Vacuæ, (1646.)

4. Linen so called, being made in Ireland.

IRISH.* adj. Denoting what belongs to Ireland, what is produced or made in Ireland.

The Irish will be better drawn to the English, than the English to the Irish government.

Spenser on Ireland.

My couches, beds, and window-curtains are of Irish stuff.

Guardian, No. 49.

IRISHISM.* n. s. [from Irish.] Mode of speaking used by the Irish.

"I will be there as soon as you." I will, instead of I shall, is a Scotticism. Dounce. And an Irishism too. Reed, Note on Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

IRISHRY.* n. s. [from Irish.] The people of Ireland. See ENGLISHRY.

I knew that among the Irishry it was not yet clean taken away.

Dryskett, Disc. of Civ. Life, (1606,) p. 157.

To IRK.† v. a. [yrk, work, Icelandic. Dr. Johnson. — yrkia, to urge on, Goth. Serenius. — But Lye rightly supposes it to be the Saxon peope, or pȳpe, pain, torture, anxiety.] This word is used only impersonally, it irks me; mihi pena est, it gives me pain; or, I am weary of it. Thus the authors of the Accidence say, tædet, it irketh. Dr. Johnson. — Certainly it is commonly used impersonally, but the following example is an exception.

But when these pelting poets in their rimes
Shall taunt, or jest, or paint our wicked works,
And cause the people know and curse our crimes,
This ugly fault no tyrant lines but irks.

Mir. for Mag. p. 456.

It irketh me to hear one kill so often. Hulot.

Come, shall we go and think us venison?

And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools

Should, in their own confines, with forked heads,

Have their round haunches gor'd.

Shakspeare.

It irks his heart he cannot be reveng'd.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

IRKSOME.† adj. [from irk.]

1. Wearisome; tedious; troublesome; toilsome; tiresome; unpleasing.

I know she is an irksome brawling scold.

Shakspeare.

Since that thou can'st talk of love so well,
Thy company, which erst was irksome to me,
I will endure.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

Where he may likeliest find
Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
The irksome hours, till his great chief return.

Milton, P. L.

For not to irksome toil, but to delight
He made us, and delight to reason join'd.

Milton, P. L.

There is nothing so irksome as general discourses, especially when they turn chiefly upon words.

Addison, Spect.

Frequent appeals from hence have been very irksome to that illustrious body.

Swift.

2. Weary; tired. Not now in use.

The people then embracing titles new,
Irksome of present, and longing for change,
Assented soon, because they love to range.

Mir. for Mag. p. 352.

IRKSOMELY.† adv. [from irksome.] Wearisomely; tediously.

Our doctrine forces not error and unwillingness irksomely to keep it.

Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce, i. 13.

Neither irksomely hating, nor fondly loving, himself.

Barrow, Works, i. 4.

IRKSOMENESS.† n. s. [from irksome.] Tediousness; wearisomeness.

As Castilio describes it, the beginning, middle, end of love, is sought else but sorrow, vexation, torment, irksomeness. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 521.

Thus was he driven to shift and change his desire from one thing to another, finding solid content in never a one of them; but, after some small experience, great irksomeness in them all.

Fotherby, Alchem. p. 209.

The irksomeness of that truth, which they brought, was so unpleasant to them, that every where they call it a burden.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

IRON.† n. s. [haiarn, Welsh; iorn, Erse; iarrun, Irish; īrn, īpen, Sax. iern, Dan. iarn, Iceland. iarn, earn, Goth. "ab Iberia sic dictum." Serenius.]

1. A metal found in most parts of the world. Its specific gravity is 778, water being 100; so that it is not a heavy metal, though there are many lighter. It is one of the few metals which are magnetick. It is employed in medicine, though of much less importance than several other metals. Journ. of Arts and Sciences, No. 20, p. 286. But its several uses are far more important than those of any other metal. It is one of the hardest of the metals, yet malleable, and most so as it approaches nearest, when heated, to fusion.

Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit.

Shakspeare.

If he smite him with an instrument of iron, so that he die, he is a murderer. Num. xxxv. 16.

The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a loadstone, and to be so drawn is a part of that of iron.

Locke.

In a piece of iron ore, of a ferruginous colour, are several thin plates, placed parallel to each other.

Woodward.

There are incredible quantities of iron flag in various parts of the forest of Dean.

Woodward on Fossils.

Iron stone lies in strata. Woodward on Fossils.

I treated of making iron work, and steel work.

Mozon.

2. An instrument or utensil made of iron; as, a flat iron, box iron, or smoothing iron. In this sense it has a plural.

Irons of a doit, doublets that hangmen would Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves, Ere yet the fight be done, pack up.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

O Thou! whose captain I account myself, Look on my forces with a gracious eye: Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath, That they may crush down with a heavy fall The usurping helmets of our adversaries.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Can'st thou fill his skin with barbed irons, or his head with fish-spears?

Job, xli. 7.

For this your locks in paper durance bound? For this with tort'ring irons wreath'd around?

Pope.

3. Chain; shackle; manacle: as, he was put in irons.

The iron entered into his soul.

In iron walls they deem'd me not secure.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight Unto my cell.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

Some are of an iron red, shining, and polite; others not polite, but as if powdered with iron dust.

Woodward.

Polecats and weasels do a great deal of injury to warrens: the way of taking them is in hutches, and iron traps.

Mortimer.

2. Resembling iron in colour.

A piece of stone of a dark iron grey colour, but in some parts of a ferruginous colour.

Woodward on Fossils.

Some of them are of an iron red, and very bright.

Woodward.

3. Harsh; stern; severe; rigid; miserable; calamitous: as, the iron age, for an age of hardship and wickedness. These ideas may be found more or less in all the following examples.

Pouring forth their blood in brutish wise,

That any iron eyes, to see it, would agrieve.

Spenser, F. Q.

No man so iron hearted but the loadstone of such love may draw him.

Walsall, Life of Christ, (1615.) C. 8, b.

These iron hearted soldiers are so cold.

Beaumont, and Fl. Laus of Candy.

Three rigorous virgins, waiting still behind,

Assist the throne of the iron scepter'd king.

Crashaw, Sosp. d' Herode.

But O sad virgin, that thy power

Might bid the soul of Orpheus sing

Such notes as, warbled to the string,

Drew iron tears from Pluto's cheek,

And made hell grant what love did seek.

Milton, Il Pens.

In all my iron years of wars and dangers,

From blooming youth down to decaying age,

My fame ne'er knew a stain of dishonour.

Jove crush the nations with an iron rod,

And ev'ry monarch be the scourge of God.

Pope, Odyssey.

4. Indissoluble; unbroken.

Rash Elpenor, in an evil hour,

Dry'd up an immeasurable bowl, and thought

To exhale his surfeit by irrisuous sleep,

Impudent: him death's iron sleep oppress'd.

Philips.

5. Hard; impenetrable.

I will converse with iron-witted fools,

And unrespective boys: none are for me,

That look into me with consid'rate eyes,

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

To IRON. v. a. [from the noun.]

2. To smooth with an iron.

2. To shackle with irons.

VOL. II.

IRONHEARTED. adj.* Hardhearted. See the third sense of the adjective IRON.

IRONICAL.† adj. [ironique, Fr. from irony.] Expressing one thing and meaning another; speaking by contraries.

Heraclitus the philosopher, out of a serious meditation of men's lives, fell a weeping; and with continual tears bewailed their misery, madness, and folly. Democritus on the other side burst out a laughing, their whole life to him seemed so ridiculous: and he was so far carried with this ironical passion, that the citizens of Abdera took him to be mad.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

The whole court shall take itself abus'd

By our ironical confederacy.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

In this fallacy may be comprised all ironical mistakes, or expressions receiving inverted significations.

Brown.

I take all your ironical civilities in a literal sense, and shall expect them to be literally performed.

Swift.

IRONICALLY. adv. [from ironical.] By the use of irony.

Socrates was pronounced by the oracle of Delphos to be the wisest man of Greece, which he would turn from himself ironically, saying, There could be nothing in him to verify the oracle, except this, that he was not wise, and knew it, and others were not wise, and knew it not.

Bacon.

The dean, ironically grave,

Still shunn'd the fool, and lash'd the knave.

Swift.

IRONICK. adj.* [ironique, French.] Speaking by contraries; ironical.

Most Socratic lady!

Or, if you will, ironick!

B. Jonson, New Inn.

I had better leisure to contemplate that ironick satire of Juvenal.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 11.

IRONIST. n. s.* [from irony.] One who speaks by contraries.

A poet, or orator, — would have no more to do but to send to the ironist for his sarcasms.

Arbutnot and Pope, Mart. Scribl.

Socrates took the name of ironist from the continued humour, and ridicule, which runs through his moral discourses.

Hurd.

IRONMONGER. n. s. [iron and monger.] A dealer in iron.

IRONMOULD. n. s.* [iron and mould.] A mark or spot on linen, occasioned by the rust of iron.

Fine linen, being once stained with black ink, though it be washed never so, will retain an iron-mould ever after.

Junius, Sin Stigmat. (1635.) p. 378.

We have seen arms, the ironmould that stained our religion, and eat out order and laws.

Spencer, Righteous Ruler, (1660.) p. 37.

IRONWOOD. n. s. A kind of wood extremely hard, and so ponderous as to sink in water. It grows in America.

Robinson Crusoe.

IRONWORT. n. s. [sideritis, Lat.] A plant.

Miller.

IRONY. adj. [from iron.] Made of iron; partaking of iron.

The force they are under is real, and that of their fate but imaginary: it is not strange if the irony chains have more solidity than the contemplative.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

Some springs of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolical salts, dissolve the body of one metal, suppose iron, put into the spring; and deposit, in lieu of the irony particles carried off, coppery particles.

Woodward on Fossils.

IRONY.† n. s. [ironie, French; αἰρωνία, Gr. from ἔλπω, a dissembler.] A mode of speech in which the meaning is contrary to the words: as, Bolingbroke was a holy man. Irony is a word of great age in our language, though Dr. Johnson has cited it only from Swift.

He spake it by an ironie or skorne.

Bp. Gardiner on the Sacrament, 1551, fol. 22.

So grave a body, upon so solemn an occasion, should not deal in irony, or explain their meaning by contraries.

Swift.

IROUS. adj.* [ireux, French.] Angry; passionate. Obsolete.

It is great harm, and certes great pitee,

To set an irous man in high degree.

Chaucer, Sompn. Tale.

This Naman Sirus,

So fel, and so irous.

Skelton, Poems, p. 174.

IRRA'DIANCE.† n. s. [irradiance, French; IRRA'DIANCY.† irradiio, Latin.]

1. Emission of rays or beams of light upon any object.

The principal affection is its translucency; the irradiance and sparkling, found in many gems, is not discoverable in this.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Beams of light emitted.

Love not the heavenly Spirits? Or do they mix irradiance, virtual, or immediate touch?

Milton, P. L.

To IRRA'DIATE.† v. a. [irradiō, Lat.]

1. To adorn with light emitted upon it; to brighten.

When he thus perceives that these opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal plenary diffusion through the whole place it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, to be every where mingled with light.

Digby on Bodies.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace; such an one as irradiates and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends.

South, Sermon, ii. 374.

2. To enlighten intellectually; to illumine; to illuminate.

Reason — immixed and contempered with the soul, and not only extrinsically irradiating it.

Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 17.

Celestial light

Shine inward, and the mind through all her powers irradiate; there plant eyes: all mists from thence Purge and disperse.

Milton, P. L.

God — is lodged in our very essence, and is as a soul within the soul, to irradiate its understanding, rectify its will, purify its passions, and enliven all the powers of man.

Spectator, No. 571.

3. To animate by heat or light.

Ethereal or solar heat must digest, influence, irradiate, and put those more simple parts of matter into motion.

Hale.

4. To decorate with shining ornaments.

No weeping orphan saw his father's store

Our shrines irradiate, or imblaze the floor.

Pope.

To IRRA'DIATE. v. n. To shine upon.

Day was the state of the hemisphere, on which light irradiated; and night was the state of the opposite hemisphere, on which rested the shadow projected by the body of the earth.

Bp. Horne, Lett. on Infidelity, L. 10.

IRRA'DIATE. part. adj.* Decorated with shining ornaments.

The peacock spreads his rainbow train, with eyes

Of sapphire bright, irradiate each with gold.

Mason, Eng. Gard. B. 4.

IRRADIA'TION. n. s. [irradiation, Fr. from irradiare.]

1. The act of emitting beams of light.

If light were a body, it should drive away the air, which is likewise a body, wherever it is admitted; for within the whole sphere of the irradiation of it, there is no point but light is found.

Digby on Bodies.

The generation of bodies is not effected by irradiation, or answerably unto the propagation of light; but herein a transmission is made materially from some parts, and ideally from every one.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Illumination; intellectual light.

The means of immediate union of these intelligible objects to the understanding, are sometimes divine and supernatural, as by immediate irradiation or revelation.

Hale.

IRRATIONAL. adj. [irrationalis, Lat.]

1. Void of reason; void of understanding; wanting the discursive faculty.

Thus began

Outrage from lifeless things; but discord first,
Daughter of sin, among the irrational
Death introduced. Milton, P. L.

He hath eaten, and lives,
And knows, and speaks, and reasons, and discerns.

Irrational till then. Milton, P. L.

2. Absurd; contrary to reason.

Since the brain is only a part transmittent, and that humours oft are precipitated to the lungs before they arrive to the brain, no kind of benefit can be effected from so irrational an application.

Harvey on Consumptions.

I shall quietly submit, not wishing so irrational a thing as that every body should be deceived.

Pope.

IRRATIONALITY.† n. s. [from irrational.]

Want of reason.

Who is it here that appeals to the frivolousness and irrationality of our dreams?

A. Baxter on the Soul, (1737.) ii. 187.

IRRATIONALLY.† adv. [from irrational.]

Without reason; absurdly.

The obdurate Jew, that he might more easily avoid the truth of the second, hath most irrationally denied the first. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 5.
He had foolishly and irrationally bartered away eternity for a trifle. South, Sermon, viii. 151.

IRRECLAIMABLE.† adj. [in and reclaimable.] Not to be reclaimed; not to be changed to the better.

When length of days made virtuous habits heretical and immovable, vicious, inveterate and irreclaimable. Brown, Chr. Moral. iii. 1.

If we may judge by proportion, the angels in heaven, who rejoice at the conversion of one sinner, do also mourn and lament for the irreclaimable wickedness of so many millions as are in the world. Norris on the Beatitudes, p. 44.

As for obstinate, irreclaimable, professed enemies, we must expect their calamities will continue.

Addison, Freeholder.

IRRECLAIMABLY.† adv. [from irreclaimable.] So as not to be reclaimed.

Thus we see the irreclaimably wicked lodged in a place and condition very wretched and calamitous.

Glanville, Pre-exist, p. 135.

IRRECONCILABLE.† adj. [irreconciliable, Fr. in and reconcilable.] This word was formerly irreconcilable; like the old French also, irreconciliable. "They are irreconcilable to their princes." Sir R. Williams, Actions of the Low Countries, 1618, p. 102. "Irreconcilable contradictions." Bp. Morton, Discharge of Five Imputations, &c. 1633, p. 98.]

Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry furr'd tongues.

A. Phillips.

IRRIGATION.* n. s. [from irrigate.]

1. The act of watering or moistening.
Help of ground is by watering and irrigation.

Bacon.

Fomentations, irrigations, — prescribed for the head.

Bu-ton, Anat. of Mel. p. 406.

I wish it may also flow in spiritual blessings; and doubt not but that, by the irrigation rather than inundation of this flood, they shall increase in them.

Harrington, Br. View of the Ch. p. 209.

2. State of being watered.

In April, and the spring time, his lordship [Lord Bacon] would, when it rained, take his coach (open) to receive the benefit of irrigation, which, he was wont to say, was very wholesome, because of the nitre in the aire.

Aubrey, Anecd. ii. 235.

That every of us fructify in some proportion answerable to our irrigation.

Hammond, Works, iv. 574.

IRRIGUOUS. adj. [from irrigate.]

1. Watery; watered.

The flowery lap

Of some irriguous valley spread her store.

Milton, P. L.

Gregory, Doctr. of the Glor. Trin. p. 6.

Ham, by his indiscreet and unnatural irrisio, and exposing of his father, incurs his curse.

Woodward.

IRRITABILITY.* n. s. [irritabilité, Fr. from irritable.] State or quality of being irritable.

IRRITABLE.* adj. [irritabilis, Lat.]

1. Easily provoked.

The wise will determine from the gravity of the case; the irritable, from their sensibility to oppression.

Burke.

2. That may be agitated.

IRRITANT.* adj. [irritans, Lat. from irritus, void. See TO IRRITATE, to render void.] Rendering void. The same forensic term is used in Scotland.

The states elected Henry duke of Anjou for their king, with this clause irritant; that if he did violate any part of his oath, the people should owe him no allegiance.

Hayward, Answ. to Doelman, (1609), ch. 5.

TO IRRITATE.* v. a. [irrito, Latin; irriter, Fr. Thus we formerly had to irrite, following the French word so closely. See Cotgrave, and also Sherwood. Some consider the root of this word to be the Latin ira, anger. Morin agrees with Vossius, that it comes from the Greek ἐρέω, which has the same meaning as irritate; adding that the Latin irrito was also written in conformity to the Greek word, with only one r.]

1. To provoke; to tease; to exasperate.
The earl, speaking to the freholders in imperious language, did not irritate the people.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Laud's power at court could not qualify him to go through with that difficult reformation, whilst he had a superior in the church, who, having the reins in his hand, could slacken them, and was thought to be the more remiss to irritate his cholerick disposition.

Clarendon.

2. To fret; to put into motion or disorder by any irregular or unaccustomed contact; to stimulate; to vellicate.

Cold maketh the spirits vigorous, and irritate them.

Bacon.

3. To heighten; to agitate; to enforce.
Air, if very cold, irritate the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely, as fire scorseth in frosty weather.

Bacon.

By dash of clouds, or irritating war
Of fighting winds, while all is calm below,
They furious spring.

Thomson, Summer.

IRRITATE.* part. adj. Heightened.

When they are collected, the heat becomes more violent and irritate, and thereby expelleth sweat.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

TO IRRITATE.* v. a. [low Lat. irritare, to make null, from irritus. See IRRITANT.] To render null or void.

If any thing should come to pass otherwise than it doth, yet God's foreknowledge could not be irritated by it, for then he did not know that it should come to pass as it doth.

Ep. Bramhall, Works, p. 727.

IRRITA'TION.† n. s. [irritatio, Latin; irritation, French; from irritate.]

1. Provocation; exasperation. Sherwood.

The other peradventure is sufficiently grounded for principles of faith, yet is weak by reason either of some passion, or of some irritatory and troublesome humour in his behaviour. Hales, Rem. p. 45.

Nothing hinders wounds from cicatrizing more than concourse of humour to the diseased part, and keeping things irritatory about the orifice of the wound. Hales, Rem. p. 285.

IRRUPTION.† n. s. [irruption, Fr. irruptio, Latin.]

1. The act of any thing forcing an entrance.

How doth the water rage with his inundations, irruptions, flinging down towns, cities, villages, bridges, besides shipwrecks!

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 4.

I refrain, too suddenly,
To utter what will come at last too soon;
Lest evil tidings, with too rude irruption,
Hitting thy aged ear, should pierce too deep.

Milton, S. A.

There are frequent inundations made in maritime countries by the irruption of the sea.

Burnet.

A full and sudden irruption of thick melancholic blood into the heart, puts a stop to its pulsation.

Harvey.

2. Inroad; burst of invaders into any place.

Five or six weeks before my lord's fatal irruption into the city. Wotton, Rem. p. 180.

The famous wall of China, built against the irruptions of the Tartars, was begun about a hundred years before the Incarnation.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 189.

Notwithstanding the irruptions of the barbarous nations, one can scarce imagine how so plentiful a soil should become so miserably unpeopled.

Addison on Italy.

IRRUP'TIVE.* adj. [irruptus, Lat.] Bursting forth; rushing down or in.

Conscious fears his soul affright,
And storms of wrath and indignation dread
Seem ready to displode irruptive on his head.

IS.† [ij, Saxon; es, Celt; ys, Teut. ist, Goth. est, Lat. est. Gr. See To Be.]

1. The third person singular of To be: I am, thou art, he is.

He that is of God, heareth God's words.

St. John, vii. 47.

Be not afraid of them, for they cannot do evil; neither is it in them to do good.

Jer. x. 5.

My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes so my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in surmise; and nothing is,
But what is not.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

2. It is sometimes expressed by 's.

There's some among you have beheld me fighting.

Shakespeare.

ISACO'GICAL.* adj. [Gr. ισαγωγικός, eis, into, and αγω, to lead.] Introductory; belonging to an introduction.

I will make further relation

Of this isagogical collation. Skelton, Poems, p. 162.

Scaliger was bold to call him Merodac; but he repented of that in his canons isagogical.

Gregory, Posthum. (1650,) p. 247.

ISCHIA'DICK. adj. [ἰσχίον, ισχυαδίκος; ischiadique, Fr.] In anatomy, an epithet to the crural vein; in pathology, the ischiadick passion is the gout in the hip, or the sciatica.

ISCHURY. n. s. [ἰσχυρία, ἰσχω and ἔρον, urine; ischurie, Fr. ischuria, Latin.] A stoppage of urine, whether by gravel or other cause.

ISCHURETICK. n. s. [ischuretique, French, from ischury.] Such medicines as force urine when suppressed.

ISH. [ic, Saxon.]

1. A termination added to an adjective to express diminution, a small degree, or incipient state of any quality: as, bluish, tending to blue; brightish, somewhat bright.

2. It is likewise sometimes the termination of a gentile or possessive adjective: as, Swedish; Danish; the Danish territories, or territories of the Danes.

3. It likewise notes participation of the qualities of the substantive to which it is added: as, fool, foolish; man, manish; rogue, roguish.

ISICLE. n. s. [more properly icicle, from ice; but ice should rather be written ise; ij, Saxon.] A pendent shoot of ice.

Do you know this lady?

— The moon of Rome; chaste as the isicle
That's curdled by the frost from purest snow
Hanging on Dian's Temple. Shakespeare.

The frosts and snows her tender body spare;
Those are not limbs for isicles to tear. Dryden.

ISINGLASS. n. s. [from ice, or ise, and glass; ichthyocolla, Lat.]

Isinglass is a tough, firm, and light substance, of a whitish colour, and in some degree transparent, much resembling glue. The fish from which isinglass is prepared, is one of the cartilaginous kind: it grows to eighteen and twenty feet in length, and greatly resembles the sturgeon. It is frequent in the Danube, the Boristhenes, the Volga, and the larger rivers of Europe. From the intestines of this fish the isinglass is prepared by boiling. Hill, Mat. Med.

The cure of putrefaction requires an incrustating diet, as all viscid broths, hartshorn, ivory, and isinglass.

Floyer.

Some make it clear by reiterated fermentations, and others by additions, as isinglass.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

ISINGLASS Stone. n. s. A fossil which is one of the purest and simplest of the natural bodies. The masses are of a brownish or reddish colour; but when the plates are separated, they are perfectly colourless, and more bright and pellucid than the finest glass. It is found in Moscow, Persia, the island of Cyprus, in the Alps and Apennines, and the mountains of Germany.

Hill, Mat. Med.

ISLAND. n. s. [insula, Latin; isola, Italian; ealand, Erse. It is pronounced iland.] A tract of land surrounded by water.

He will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple. — And sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands. Shakespeare, Tempest.

Within a long recess there lies a bay,
An island shades it from the rolling sea,
And forms a port. Dryden.

Island of bliss! amid the subject seas.

Thomson.

ISLANDER. n. s. [from island. Pronounced iland.] An inhabitant of a country surrounded by water.

We, as all islanders, are lunares, or the moon's men. Camden.

Your dinner, and the generous islanders
By you invited, do attend your presence.

Shakespeare.

There are many bitter sayings against islanders in general, representing them as fierce, treacherous, and unhospitable: those who live on the continent have such frequent intercourse, with men of different religions and languages, that they become more kind than those who are the inhabitants of an island. Addison, Freeholder.

A race of rugged mariners are these,
Unpolish'd men, and boisterous as their seas;
The native islanders alone their care,
And hateful he that breathes a foreign air.

Pope, Odys.

ISLANDY.* n. s. [from island.] Full of, or belonging to, islands. Not now in use. Coigraue, and Sherwood.

ISLE. n. s. [isle, French; insula, Latin. Pronounced ile.]

1. An island; a country surrounded by water.

The instalment of this noble duke
In the seat royal of this famous isle.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

The dreadful fight

Betwixt a nation and two whales I write:
Seas stain'd with gore I sing, advent'rous toil,
And how these monsters did disarm an isle.

Waller.

2. [Written, I think, corruptly for aile, from aile, French, from ala, Latin, the aile being probably at first only a wing or side walk. It may come likewise from allée, French, a walk.] A long walk in a church, or public building.

O'er the twilight groves and dusky caves,
Long sounding isles and intermingled graves,
Black Melancholy sits. Pope.

ISLET.* n. s. [islette, French, from isle; so the old Fr. insulette, from insule.] A little island.

They — agreed to convey themselves and their substance into the uttermost bosom of the Adriatic gulf, and there possessed certain desolate islets, by tradition, about seventy in number.

Wotton, Rem. p. 251.

ISOLATED.* adj. [isolé, French. At first a term of architecture; for standing by itself. "The affected, frenchified, and unnecessary word isolated is not English, and we trust never will be." British Critic, Oct. 1800. The writer of the preceding remark had forgotten, or knew not, that the word had been then in use nearly half a century. Lord Chesterfield somewhere uses it. It will be sufficient, in proof of my assertion, to cite bishop Warburton; but I fully agree with the writer in considering it as a most affected word.] Detached; separate.

Short, isolated sentences were the mode in which ancient wisdom delighted to convey its precepts for the regulation of human conduct.

Warburton, Doctrine of Grace, Pref.

ISOCHRONAL, adj. [isochrone, Fr. isos, equal, and χρονος, time; Gr.] Having equal times.

The isochronal velocities describing the particles of MN. Bp. Berkeley, Analyst, § 41.

ISOPERIMETRICAL, adj. [ισο, μετρο, and μετρον,] In geometry, isoperimetrical figures are such as have equal perimeters or circumferences, of which the circle is the greatest. Harris.

ISOsceles, n. s. [isosceles, Fr. or equiangular triangle.] That which hath only two sides equal. Harris.

ISSUABLE, adj. [from issue, in law.] So as to bring to issue, or decision.

If a prisoner shall stand as contumacious in contempt, and shall not put in an issuable plea, guilty or not guilty of the charge given against him, whereby he may come to a fair trial; that, as by an implicit confession, may be taken "pro confesso."

Nar. of the Trial of K. Ch. I. Jan. 25. 1648. p. 4.

Hilary and Trinity terms, from the making up of the issues therein, are usually called issuable terms. Blackstone.

ISSUE, n. s. [issue, French.]

1. The act of passing out.
2. Exit; egress; or passage out.

Unto the Lord belong the issues from death, Ps. lxxviii. 20.

Let us examine what bodies touch a movable whilst in motion, as the only means to find an issue out of this difficulty. Digby on Bodies.

We might have easily prevented those great returns of money to France; and if it be true the French are so impoverished, in what condition must they have been if that issue of wealth had been stopped? Swift.

3. Event; consequence.

Spirits are not finely touch'd, But to fine issues. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

If I were ever fearful To do a thing, where I the issue doubted, Whereof the execution did cry out Against the non-performance, 'twas a fear Which oft infects the wisest. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

But let the issue correspondent prove To good beginnings of each enterprize. Fairfax. If things were cast upon this issue, that God should never prevent sin till man deserved it, the best would sin, and sin for ever. South.

The wittiest sayings and sentences will be found the issues of chance, and nothing else but so many lucky hits of a roving fancy. South.

Our present condition is better for us in the issue, than that uninterrupted health and security that the Atheist desires. Bentley.

4. Termination; conclusion.

He hath preserved Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publicly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue. Sidney.

What issue of my love remains for me! How wild a passion works within my breast! With what prodigious flames am I possest! Dryden.

Homage, at a loss to bring difficult matters to an issue, lays his hero asleep, and this solves the difficulty. Broome.

5. Sequel deduced from premises.

I am to pray you not to strain my speech To grosser issues, nor to larger reach, Than to suspicion. Shakespeare, Othello.

6. A fontanel; a vent made in a muscle for the discharge of humours.

This tumour in his left arm was caused by strict binding of his issue. Wiseman.

7. Evacuation.

A woman was diseased with an issue of blood. St. Matt. ix. 20.

8. Progeny; offspring.

O nation miserable! Since that the truest issue of thy throne, By his own interdiction stands accurst.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Nor where Abassin kings their issue guard, Mount Amara, though this by some suppos'd True paradise, under the Æthiop line By Nilus' head. Milton, P. L.

This old peaceful prince, as Heav'n decreed, Was bless'd with no male issue to succeed. Dryden, Æn.

The frequent productions of monsters, in all the species of animals, and strange issues of human birth, carry with them difficulties, not possible to consist with this hypothesis. Locke.

9. [In law.] Issue hath divers applications in the common law; sometimes used for the children begotten between a man and his wife; sometimes for profits growing from an amercement, fine, or expences of suit; sometime for profits of lands or tenements; sometime for that point of matter depending in suit, whereupon the parties join and put their cause to the trial of the jury.

Issue is either general or special: general issue seemeth to be that whereby it is referred to the jury to bring in their verdict, whether the defendant have done any such thing as the plaintiff layeth to his charge. The special issue then must be that, where special matter being alleged by the defendant for his defence, both the parties join thereupon and so grow rather to a demurrer, if it be questio juris, or to trial by the jury, if it be questio facti. Cowel.

To ISSUE, v. n. [from the noun; isser, Fr. uscire, Italian.]

1. To come out; to pass out of any place.

Waters issued out from under the threshold of the house. Ezek. xlvii. 1.

From the uttermost end of the head branches there issueth out a gummy juice. Raleigh, Hist.

Waters issu'd from a cave. Milton, P. L.

Ere Pallus issu'd from the thunderer's head, Dulness o'er all possess'd her ancient right. Pope.

2. To make an eruption; to break out.

Three of master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none should issue out, otherwise you might slip away. Shakespeare.

To see that none thence issue forth a spy. Milton, P. L.

Haste, arm your Ardeans, issue to the plain; With faith to friend, assault the Trojan train. Dryden.

At length there issu'd, from the grove behind, A fair assembly of the female kind. Dryden.

A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms; Straight issue through the sides assembling swarms. Dryden.

Full for the port the Ithacensians stand, And furl their sails, and issue on the land. Pope, Odys.

3. To proceed as an offspring.

Of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away. 2 Kings, xx. 18.

4. To be produced by any fund.

These altargates issued out of the offerings made to the altar, and were payable to the priesthood.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

5. To run out in lines.

Pipes, made with a belly towards the lower end, and then issuing into a straight concave again. Bacon.

To ISSUE, v. a.

1. To send out; to send forth.

A weak degree of force is not able either to digest the parts or to issue the spirits.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The commissioners should issue money out to no other use. Temple.

2. To send out judicially or authoritatively. This is the more frequent sense. It is commonly followed by a particle, out or forth.

If the council issued out any order against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, some nobleman published a protestation. Clarendon.

Deep in a rocky cave he makes abode, A mansion proper for a morning god; Here he gives audience, issuing out decrees To rivers, his dependent deities. Dryden.

In vain the master issues out commands, In vain the trembling sailors ply their hands; The tempest unforeseen prevents their care. Dryden.

They constantly wait in court to make a due return of what they have done, and to receive such other commands as the judge shall issue forth. Ayliffe, Parergon.

ISSUED,  part. adj.* [from issue.] Descended.

His only heir And princess: no worse issued. Shaks. Tempest.

ISSUELESS, adj. [from issue.] Having no offspring; wanting descendants.

Carew, by virtue of this entail, succeeded to Hugh's portion, as dying issueless.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

I have done sin; For which the Heav'n's, taking angry note, Have left me issueless. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

ISSUING,  n. s.* [from issue.] The act of passing or going out.

By some others affected, and interpreted, as issuings forth, or sallies of zeal.

Whitlocke, Mann. of the Engl. p. 360.

ISTHMUS, n. s. [isthmus, Lat.] A neck of land joining the peninsula to the continent.

There is a castle strongly seated on a high rock, which joineth by an isthmus to the land, and is impregably fortified. Sandys, Travels.

The Assyrian empire stretcheth northward to that isthmus between the Euxine and the Caspian seas. Brerewood on Languages.

O life, thou nothing's younger brother! Thou weak built isthmus, that do'st proudly rise

Up betwix two eternities, Yet can'st not wave nor wind sustain; But broken and o'erwhelm'd the ocean meets again. Cowley.

Our church of England stands as Corinth between two seas, and there are some busy in cutting the isthmus, to let in both at once upon it. Stillingfleet.

Cleomenes thinking it more advisable to fortify, not the isthmus, but the mountains, put his design in execution. Creech.

Plac'd on this isthmus of a middle state, A being darkly wise, and rudely great. Pope.

IT, pronoun. [het, hit, Saxon; hit, Danish; het, Dutch; hitt, Iceland; ita, Gothick. It is supposed by Mr. H. Tooke to be the past participle of the Goth. haitan, Sax. hætan, to name, and so equivalent to the said. But this etymon is doubted by Dr. Jamieson, on this solid ground, "that the analogy is lost, as to the supposed participle, when the particles are compared. For what is hit, hȳt, in Sax. is in the M. Goth. ita."] Flatman.

1. The neutral demonstrative. Used in speaking of things. For it, our ancestors used he, as the neutral pronoun; and for its they used his. Thus in the Accidence, a noun adjective is that which cannot stand by himself; but requireth another word to be joined with him to shew his signification.

Nothing can give that to another which it hath not itself. Bp. Bramhall against Hobbes.

Will our great anger learn to stoop so low? I know it cannot. Cowley.

Tell me, O tell, what kind of thing is wit, Thou who master art of it. Cowley.

His son, it may be, dreads no harm; But kindly waits his father's coming home.

The time will come, it will, when you shall know

The rage of love. Dryden.

How can I speak? or how, sir, can you hear? Imagine that which you would most deplore, And that which I would speak, is it or more?

A mind so furnished, what reason has it to acquiesce in its conclusions? Locke.

The glory which encompassed them covered the place, and darted its rays with so much strength, that the whole fabric began to melt.

If we find a greater good in the present constitution, than would have accrued either from the total privation of it, or from other frames and structures, we may then reasonably conclude, that the present constitution proceeded from an intelligent and good being, that formed it that particular way out of choice. Bentley.

2. It is used absolutely for the state of a person or affair.

How is it with our general?

— Even so

As with a man by his own alms impoison'd, And with his charity slain. Shakspeare, Coriol.

3. It is used for the thing; the matter; the affair.

It's come to pass, That tractable obedience is a slave To each incensed will. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII. The design, it seems, is to avoid the dreadful imputation of pedantry. Swift.

4. It is sometimes expressed by 't.

He rallied, and again fell to 't;
For catching foe by nearer foot,
He lifted with such might and strength,
As would have hurl'd him thrice his length.

Hudibras.

5. It is used ludicrously after neutral verbs, to give an emphasis. Mr. Malone notices, with me, a very early example of this usage in the Comedy of Fair Em, written about 1590, which one is led to suppose had caught the eye of Pope. See the last of the examples in the present sense.

Let mistress Nice go saint it, where she list,
And coyly quaint it with dissembling face.

If Abraham brought all with him, it is not probable that he meant to walk it back again for his pleasure. Fair Em. Raleigh.

The Lacedemonians, at the streights of Thermopylae, when their arms failed them, fought it out with their nails and teeth. Dryden.

I have often seen people lavish it profusely in tricking up their children, and yet starve their minds. Locke.

The mole courses it not on the ground, like the rat or mouse, but lives under the earth.

Whether the charmer sinner it, or saint it, If folly grows romantic, I must paint it. Pope.

6. Sometimes applied familiarly, ludicrously, or rudely to persons.

Let us after him,
Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a peerless kinsman. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Do, child, go to it grandam, child:
Give grandam kingdom, and its grandam will Give it up him. Shakspeare, K. John.

7. It is sometimes used of the first or second person, sometimes of more. This mode of speech, though used by good authors, and supported by the il ya of the French, has yet an appearance of barbarism.

Who was't came by?
— 'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word Macduff is fled to England. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

'Tis I, that make thee widows. Shakspeare, Coriol.

'Tis these that early taint the female soul. Pope.

ITALIAN.* n. s.

1. A native of Italy.

As mirth is more apt to make proselytes than melancholy, it is observed that the Italians have many of them for these late years given very far into the modes and freedoms of the French.

Adisson, Remarks on Italy.

2. The Italian language.

Speak Italian, right or wrong, to every body; and if you do but laugh at yourself first for your bad Italian, nobody else will laugh at you for it.

Ld. Chesterfield.

ITA'LIAN.* adj. Relating to the manners, customs, language, or persons of Italy.

The Italian proverb says of the Genoese, that they have a sea without fish, land without trees, and men without faith. Adisson on Italy.

TO ITA'LIANATE.* v. a. [from Italian.]

To make Italian; to render conformable to Italian custom or fashion.

Another chops in with English italianated, and applieth the Italian phrase to our English speaking. Wilson, Arte of Rhetorick, (1553), B. 3.

Our Englishmen italianated have more in reverence the Triumphs of Petrarca than the Genesis of Moyses. Ascham, Schoolmaster, (1589).

Our italianated mountebanks seek to save it.
Dean King, Sermon. 5. Nov. 1608, p. 31.

TO ITA'LIANIZE.* v. n. [italianizer, Fr.]

To speak Italian; to play the Italian.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

TO ITA'LICISE.* v. a. [from Italick.] To distinguish a word by printing it in the Italick character. See ITALICK.

In p. 17. of his pamphlet the doctor has printed, but not italicised, another inaccuracy.

Dr. Parr on Dr. Combe's Statement, p. 78.

ITA'LICK.* adj. Denoting a type first used by Italian printers, and now usually employed to distinguish a particular word or sentence; as each word, illustrated in the examples given in this Dictionary, is printed. It is common also to say, substantively, the passage is printed in Italicks.

ITCH. n. s. [itcha, Saxon.]

1. A cutaneous disease extremely contagious, which overspreads the body with small pustules filled with a thin serum, and raised as microscopes have discovered by a small animal. It is cured by sulphur.

Lust and Liberty
Creep in the minds and marrow of our youths,
That 'gainst the stream of virtue they may strive,
And drown themselves in riot, itches, blains.

The Lord will smite thee with the scab and with the itch, whereof thou can'st not be healed.
Shakspeare, Timon. Deut. xxviii. 27.

As if divinity had catch'd
The itch, on purpose, to be scratch'd. Hudibras.

2. The sensation of uneasiness in the skin, which is eased by rubbing.

3. A constant teasing desire.

A certain itch of meddling with other people's matters, puts us upon shifting. L'Estrange.

He had still pedigree in his head, and an itch of being thought a divine king. Dryden.

From servants' company a child is to be kept, not by prohibitions, for that will but give him an itch after it, but by other ways. Locke.

At half mankind when generous Manly raves,
All know 'tis virtue; for he thinks them knaves:
When universal homage Umbra pays,
All see 'tis vice, and itch of vulgar praise. Pope.

TO ITCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel that uneasiness in the skin which is removed by rubbing.

A troublesome itching of the part was occasioned by want of transpiration. Wiseman, Surgery.

My right eye itches; some good luck is near;
Perhaps my Amaryliss may appear. Dryden.

2. To long; to have continual desire.

This sense appears in the following examples, though some of them are equivocal.

Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace. — Mr. Page, though now I be old, and of peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one.

Shakspeare.

Cassius, you yourself
Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm,
To sell and mart your offices for gold.

The itching ears, being an epidemic disease, give fair opportunity to every mountebank.

Decay of Ch. Piety.

All such have still an itching to deride,
And fain would be upon the laughing side. Pope.

ITCHY.† adj. [from itch.]

1. Infected with the itch.

This man, that is alone a king in his desire,
By no proud ignorant lord is basely overaw'd,
Nor his false praise affects, who, grossly being claw'd,
Stands like an itchy moyle. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

2. Having a constant teasing desire.

The hydropick drunkard, and knight-scouting thief,
The itchy lecher, and self-tickling proud.

Donne, Poems, p. 318.

IT'EM. adv. [Latin.] Also. A word used when any article is added to the former.

IT'EM. n. s.

1. A new article.

I could have looked on him without the help of admiration, though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by items. Shakspeare.

2. A hint; an innuendo.

∞ If this discourse have not concluded our weakness, I have one item more of mine : if knowledge can be found, I must lose that which I thought I had, that there is none.

Glansville.

To ITERM. v. a. [from the noun.] To make a memorandum of.

Abig. I have always taken your part before my lady.

Vel. You have so, and I have item'd it in my memory.

Addison, Drummer.

ITERABLE. adj.* [from To iterate.] Capable of being repeated.

Others may wonder how the curiosity of elder times, having this opportunity of his [Apollo's] answers, omitted natural questions ; or how the old magicians discovered no more philosophy ; and, if they had the assistance of spirits, could rest content with the bare assertions of things, without the knowledge of their causes ; whereby they had made their acts iterable by sober hands, and a standing part of philosophy.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 178.

Which being as often iterable as these be places of Scripture explicable, or mistakable by the enthusiast, these substractions and additions may also be infinite.

Hammond, Postscr. to his N. Test. § 32.

ITERANT. adj. [iterans, Lat.] Repeating.

Waters being near, make a current echo ; but but being farther off, they make an iterant echo.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To ITERATE. v. a. [itero, Lat.]

1. To repeat ; to utter again ; to inculcate by frequent mention.

We covet to make the psalms especially familiar unto all ; this is the very cause why we iterate the psalms oftener than any other part of Scripture besides ; the cause wherefore we inure the people together with their minister, and not the minister alone to read them, as other parts of Scripture be doth.

Hooker.

In the first ages God gave laws unto our fathers, and their memories served instead of books ; whereof the imperfections being known to God, he relieved the same by often putting them in mind ; in which respect we see how many times one thing hath been iterated into the best and wisest.

Hooker.

The king, to keep a decency towards the French king, sent new solemn ambassadors to intimate unto him the decree of his estates, and to iterate his motion that the French would desist from hostility.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

There be two kinds of reflections of sounds ; the one at distance, which is the echo, wherein the original is heard distinctly, and the reflection also distinctly : the other in concurrence, when the sound returneth immediately upon the original, and so iterateth it not, but amplifieth it.

Bacon.

2. To do over again.

Ashes burnt, and well reverberated by fire, after the salt thereof hath been drawn out by iterated decoctions.

Brown.

Adam took no thought, Eating his fill ; nor Eve to iterate Her former trespass fear'd, the more to sooth Him with her lov'd society.

Milton, P. L.

ITERATION. n. s. [iteration, Fr. ; iteratio, Lat.] Repetition ; recital over again.

Truth tir'd with iteration.

My husband !

— Ay, 'twas he that told me first.

— My husband !

— What needs this iteration, woman ?

I say, thy husband.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Iterations are commonly loss of time ; but there is no such gain of time, as to iterate often the state of the question ; for it chaseth away many a frivolous speech.

Bacon, Ess.

In all these respects it hath a peculiar property to engage the receiver to persevere in all piety, and is farther improved by the frequent iteration and repetition.

Hammond.

ITERATIVE. adj.* [iteratif, French ; from iterate.] Repeating ; redoubling.

Cotgrave.

ITINERANT.† adj. [itinerant, Fr.]

1. Travelling.

He [Edgar] usually rode the circuit as a judge itinerant through all his provinces.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 5.

2. Wandering ; not settled.

It should be my care to sweeten and mellow the voices of itinerant tradesmen, as also to accommodate their cries to their respective wares.

Addison, Speech.

ITINERARY.† n. s. [itinaire, French ; itinerarium, Latin.] A book of travels.

Huloet.

Of what importance Julius Cæsar, Antioine, and the other emperors held these descriptions, is manifest by their very own itineraries yet to be seen.

Gregory, Posthum. p. 329.

The clergy are sufficiently reproached, in most itineraries, for the universal poverty one meets with in this plentiful kingdom.

Addison on Italy.

ITINERARY.† adj. [itinaire, French ; itinerarius, Latin.] Travelling ; done on a journey ; done during frequent change of place.

He did make a progress from Lincoln to the northern parts, though it were rather an itinerary circuit of justice than a progress.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Four months I allow for itinerary removals.

Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. p. 174.

This itinerary preaching.

Milton, Means to remove Hirelings out of the Church.

To ITINERATE. v. n.* [itineror, itineratus, Lat.] To journey.

Cockeram.

ITSELF. pronoun. [it and self.] The neutral reciprocal pronoun applied to things.

Who then shall blame

His pester'd senses to recoil and start,

When all that is within him does condemn

Itself for being there ?

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Borrowing of foreigners, in itself, makes not the kingdom rich or poor.

Locke.

JUB. n. s.* [Our old word for jug, apparently.] A bottle ; a vessel. Not now in use.

Cockeram, and Bullockar.

With him he brought a jubbe of Malvesie,

And eke another ful of fine Vernage.

Chaucer, Shipm. Tale.

JUBILANT.† adj. [jubilans, Lat.] Uttering songs of triumph.

The planets list'n'ing stood,

While the bright pomp ascended jubilant.

Milton, P. L.

The tone of sorrow is mournful and plaintive ; the notes of joy, exulting and jubilant.

Bp. Horne, Occas. Sermon. p. 268.

JUBILATION.† n. s. [jubilatio, French ; jubilatio, Lat.] The act of declaring triumph.

Sounding the trumpet of a thankful jubilatio.

Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 257.

Well therefore may we, may the whole world, in consideration of our being under so good a government, be excited to joy and jubilatio with the Psalmist.

Barrow, ii. 11.

Praise and thanksgiving, jubilations, and hallelujahs, — are yet as pleasing a work to God as any other.

South, Sermon. iii. 425.

JUBILEE. n. s. [jubilé, Fr. jubilum, from jubilo, low Lat.] A publick festivity ; a time of rejoicing ; a season of joy.

Angels uttering joy, heaven rung
With jubilés, and loud hosannas fill'd
The eternal regions.

Milton, P. L.

Joy was then a masculine and a severe thing : the recreation of the judgement, or rejoicing, the jubilée of reason.

South.

The town was all a jubilée of feasts.

Dryden.

JUCUNDITY. n. s. [jucunditas, jucundus, Lat.] Pleasantness ; agreeableness.

The new, unusual, or unexpected jucundities, which present themselves — will have activity enough to excite the earthiest soul, and raise a smile from the most composed tempers.

Brown, Fulg. Err.

JUDAICAL. adj.* [from Judah.] Jewish ; belonging to Jews.

Pride of every kind, and in every shape, exalting itself whether in judaical pharisaism, or gentile philosophy, against the knowledge of God, shall be made low, and subdued to the obedience of Christ.

Bp. Horne, Consid. on St. John the Bapt. § 4.

Of the Paraphrase on Isaiah nothing very favourable can be said. Sublime and solemn praise gains little by a change to blank verse ; and the paraphrast has deserted his original, by admitting images not Asiatick, at least not Judaical.

Johnson, Life of Fenton.

JUDAICALLY. adv.* [from judaical.] After the Jewish manner.

Celebrating their Easter judaically.

Milton, Of Prelat. Episcopacy.

JU'DAISM. n. s.* [from Judah.] The religion of the Jews.

Nicholas Lira — was born at Lira in Brabant, from whence he had his name, and where he was converted from Judaism to Christianity.

Bp. Cosin, Canon of Script. p. 176.

For aught I see, though the Mosaicall part of Judaism be abolished amongst Christians, the Pharisaical part of it never will.

South, Serm. ii. 391.

The alcoran is but a system of the old Arianism, ill digested and worse put together, with a mixture of some Heathenism and Judaism.

Leslie, Truth of Christianity Demonstr.

JUDAS Tree. n. s. [siliquestrum, Latin.] A plant.

Judas tree yields a fine purplish, bright, red blossom in the Spring, and is increased by layers.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

To JU'DAIZE. v. n. [judaizer, Fr. ; judaizo, low Lat.] To conform to the manner of the Jews.

Paul judaiz'd with Jews, was all to all.

Sandys.

JU'DAIZER. n. s.* [from To judaize.] One who conforms to the manners or rites of the Jews.

The Judaizers maintained their opinions in a direct opposition to the authority that was lodged with the apostles.

Bp. Burnet, Visit. Sermon. (1704.) p. 84.

JU'DDOCK. n. s.* A small snipe, so called in some places ; what by others is termed the jack snipe.

JUDGE. n. s. [juge, Fr. ; judez, Lat.]

1. One who is invested with authority to determine any cause or question, real or personal.

Shall not the judge of all the earth do right ?

Gen. xviii. 25.

A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows is God in his holy habitation.

Ps. x. 18.

Thou art judge

Of all things made, and judgest only right.

Milton, P. L.

2. One who presides in a court of judicature.

My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
A single voice; and that not past me, but
By learned approbation of the judges.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
How darest thou pride,

As in a listed field to fight your cause,
Unask'd the royal grant; nor marshal by,
As knightly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.

It is not sufficient to imitate nature in every circumstance daily: it becomes a painter to take what is most beautiful, as being the sovereign judge of his own art. Dryden.

3. One who has skill sufficient to decide upon the merit of any thing.
One court there is in which he who knows the secrets of every heart will sit judge himself.

Sherlock.
A perfect judge will read each piece of wit,
With the same spirit that its author writ. Pope.

TO JUDGE. v. n. [judge, Fr.; judico, Lat.]
1. To pass sentence.

My wrong be upon thee; — the lord judge between thee and me. Gen. xvi. 5.

Ye judge not for man, but for the Lord, who is with you in the judgment. 2 Chron. xix. 6.

2. To form or give an opinion.
Beshrew me, but I love her heartily;
For she is wise, if I can judge aright. Shakespeare.
Authors to themselves,
Both what they judge and what they choose.

Milton, P. L.
If I did not know the originals, I should never be able to judge, by the copies, which was Virgil, and which Ovid. Dryden.

Whether it be a divine revelation or no, reason must judge, which can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence, to embrace what is less evident. Locke.

He proceeds in his inquiry into sciences, resolved to judge of them freely. Locke.

3. To discern; to distinguish; to consider accurately.

How doth God know? Can he judge through the dark cloud?

In majesty severe,
And sit in judgement on my soul,
O how shall I appear? Addison, Spect.

4. Determination; decision.

Where distinctions or identities are purely material, the judgement is made by the imagination, otherwise by the understanding. Glanville, Scepis.
We shall make a certain judgement what kind of dissolution that earth was capable of. Burnet, Theory.

Reason ought to accompany the exercise of our senses, whenever we would form a just judgement of things proposed to our inquiry. Watts.

5. The quality of distinguishing propriety and impropriety; criticism.

Judgement, a cool and slow faculty, attends not a man; the rapture of poetical composition. Dennis.

'Tis with our judgements as our watches, none
Go just alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.

6. Opinion; notion.

I see men's judgements are
A parcel of their fortunes, and things outward
Draw the inward quality after them,
To suffer all alike. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.
When she did think my love not'd her well,
She, in my judgement, was as fair as you. Shaks.

7. Sentence against a criminal.

When he was brought again to the bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgement was stirr'd
With agony. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
The chief priests informed me, desiring to have judgement against him. Acts, xxv. 15.
On Adam last this judgement he pronounc'd.
Milton, P. L.

8. Condemnation. This is a theological use.

The judgement was by one to condemnation;
but the free gift is of many offences unto justification. Rom. v. 16.

The precepts, promises, and threatenings of the Gospel will rise up in judgement against us, and the articles of our faith will be so many articles of accusation. Tillotson.

9. Punishment inflicted by Providence, with reference to some particular crime.

This judgement of the heavens that makes us tremble,

Touches us not with pity. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
We cannot be guilty of greater uncharitableness, than to interpret afflictions as punishments and judgements: it aggravates the evil to him who suffers, when he looks upon himself as the mark of divine vengeance. Addison, Spect.

10. Distribution of justice.

The Jews made insurrection against Paul, and brought him to the judgement seat. Acts, xviii. 12.
Your dishonour

Mangles true judgement, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it.

Shakespeare, Coriol.
In judgements between rich and poor, consider not what the poor man needs, but what is his own.

Ep. Taylor.
A bold and wise petitioner goes strait to the throne and judgement seat of the monarch.

Arbutnot and Pope.

11. Judiciary law; statute.

If ye hearken to these judgements, and keep and do them, the Lord thy God shall keep unto thee the covenant. Deut. vii. 12.

12. The last doom.

The dreadful judgement day
So dreadful will not be as was his sight.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

dience. Tillotson.

JU'GGLER. n. s. [from juggle.]

1. One who practises slight of hand; one who deceives the eye by nimble conveyance.

They say this town is full of cozenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Drug-working sorcerers that change the mind,
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin. Shakespeare.

I saw a juggler that had a pair of cards, and would tell a man what card he thought.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Aristæus was a famous poet, that flourished in the days of Cæsus, and a notable juggler.

Sanctys, Travels.

Fortune-tellers, jugglers, and impostors, do daily delude them. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The juggler which another's slight can show,
But teaches how the world his own may know.

Garth.

One who is managed by a juggler fancies he has money in hand; but let him grasp it never so carefully, upon a word or two it increases or dwindles.

Addison, Freeholder.

What magic! makes our money rise,
When dropt into the southern main;
Or do these jugglers cheat our eyes? Swift.

2. A cheat; a trickish fellow.

O me, you juggler, oh, you canker blossom,
You thief of love; what, have you come by night,
And stolen my love's heart from him? Shakespeare.

the Iceland. juck, juice; and the Lat.
succus; and particularly the Celt. juys.
This old English word is sometimes written jus or juse; and is pronounced juice in some parts.]

1. The liquor, sap, or water of plants and fruits.

If I define wine, I must say, wine is a juice not liquid, or wine is a substance; for juice includes both substance and liquid. Watts, Logic.

Of herbes of all the best juice. Gower, Conf. Am.
Thy baths shall be the juice of July-flowers.

B. Jonson, Fox.

Unnumber'd fruits,
A friendly juice to cool thirst's rage contain.

Thomson.

2. The fluid in animal bodies.

Juice in language is less than blood; for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth,
the language is thin, scarce covering the bone.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

An animal whose juices are unsound can never be nourished; unsound juices can never repair the fluids. Arbuthnot.

To JUICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To moisten.

Some gallants perchance count all conquests dry meat which are not juiced with blood.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 164.

JU'ICELESS.† adj. [from juice.] Dry; without moisture; without juice.

My juiceless corps shall yield up banish'd breath.

is like a small plum, but it has little flesh upon the stone. Miller.

Beld, huneb, i. e. civitas vel regio zizyphorum;
a city in Africa, so called, as Leo Africanus doth testify, of the abundance of jujubes which he grow there about.

Bedwell's Arabian Trudgman, (1615), p. 90.

With her the jujube tree, a milder plant,
Which (though offensive thorns she does not want)
In peace and mirth alone does pleasure take;
Her flow'rs at feasts the genial garlands make,
Her wood the harp, that keeps the guests awake.

Tate's Cowley.

To JUKE.† v. n. [jucher, Fr. Dr. Johnson.—huka, Su. Goth. avium more reclineare. Serenius.]

1. To perch upon any thing, as birds.

2. Juking, in Scotland, denotes still any complaisance by bending of the head.

Two asses travelled; the one laden with oats, the other with money: the money-merchant was so proud of his trust, that he went juking and tossing of his head. L'Estrange.

JU'LAP. n. s. [a word of Arabick original;
julapium, low Lat.; julep, Fr.]

Julap is an extemporaneous form of medicine, made of simple and compound water sweetened, and serves for a vehicle to other forms not so convenient to take alone. Quincy.

Behold this cordial julep here,
That flames and dances in his crystal bounds
With spirits of balm and fragrant syrups mixt.

Milton, Comus.

If any part of the after-birth be left, endeavour
the bringing that away; and by good sudoricks and cordials expel the venom, and contemporate
the heat and acrimony by julaps and emulsions.

Wiseman, Surgery.

JU'LIAN.* adj. Denoting the old account of the year, so called from Julius Cæsar, and used among us in England till 1752;

Locke.

To JUMBLE. v. a. [In Chaucer, jembre, from combler, Fr. Skinner.] To mix violently and confusedly together.

Persons and humours may be jumbled and disguised; but nature, like quicksilver, will never be killed. L'Estrange.

A verbal concordance leads not always to texts of the same meaning; and one may observe, how apt that is to jumble together passages of Scripture, and thereby disturb the true meaning of holy Scripture. Locke.

Writing is but like dice, And lucky mains make people wise; And jumbled words, if fortune throw them, Shall, well as Dryden, form a poem. Prior.

Is it not a firmer foundation for tranquillity, to believe that all things were created, and are ordered for the best, than that the universe is mere bungling and blundering; all ill-favourably cobbled and jumbled together by the unguided agitation and rude shuffles of matter? Bentley.

How tragedy and comedy embrace, How farce and epick get a jumbled race.

Pope, Dunciad.

That the universe was formed by a fortuitous concourse of atoms, I will no more believe, than that the accidental jumbling of the alphabet would fall into a most ingenious treatise of philosophy.

Swift.

To JUMBLE. v. n. To be agitated together.

They will all meet and jumble together into a perfect harmony. Swift.

JUMBLE. n. s. [from the verb.] Confused mixture; violent and confused agitation.

By this profession in that juncture of time, they bid farewell to all the pleasures of this life.

Addison.

When any law does not conduce to the public safety, but in some extraordinary junctures, the very observation of it would endanger the community, that law ought to be laid asleep.

Addison, Freeholder.

JUNE. n. s. [juin, Fr. junius, Lat.] The sixth month from January.

June is drawn in a mantle of dark green.

Peacham.

JUNIOR. adj. [junior, Lat.] One younger than another.

The fools, my juniors by a year,
Are tortur'd with suspense and fear,
Who wisely thought my age a screen,
When death approach'd to stand between.

Swift.

According to the nature of men of years, I was repining at the rise of my juniors, and unequal distribution of wealth.

Tatler.

JUNIO'RITY.* n. s. [from junior.] State of being junior.

Bullockar.

JUNIPER. n. s. [juniperus, Lat.] A tree.

A clyster may be made of the common decoctions, or of mallows, bay, and juniper berries, with oil of linseed.

Wiseeman.

JUNK.† n. s. [probably an Indian word.]

1. A small ship of China, Dr. Johnson says; and so the example, which he brings from Bacon, serves to shew: but it is also used for a large ship.

America, which have now but junks and canoes, abound then in tall ships.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

This storm forcing a Malabar junk, a pirate, in view of us; whom our ordinance could not reach.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 41.

The ship, or junk, (for so it is called,) that usually goes from Surat to Moha is of an exceeding great burden; some of them, I believe, fourteen or fifteen hundred tons, or more; but those huge vessels are very ill built.

Terry, Voyage to the E. Ind. (1655), p. 137.

2. Pieces of old cable.

JUNKET. n. s. [properly juncate. See JUNCATE.]

1. A sweetmeat.

You know, there wants no junkets at the feast.

Shakespeare.

2. A stolen entertainment.

To JUNKET. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feast secretly; to make entertainments by stealth.

Whatever good bits you can pilfer in the day, save them to junket with your fellow servants at night.

Swift.

2. To feast.

Job's children junketed and feasted together often, but the reckoning cost them dear at last.

South.

The apostle would have no revelling or junketing.

South.

JUNTA.† n. s. [junta, Spanish. Our JUNTO.† word was at first juncto, from the Lat. junctus, united. Dr. Johnson notices only junto.]

1. A cabal; a kind of men combined in any secret design.

The juncto had run to the length of their line; that is, as far as their master would permit them.

Glanville, Serm. p. 171.

Would men have spent toilsome days and watchful nights in the laborious quest of knowledge preparative to this work, at length come and dance attendance for approbation upon a junto of petty tyrants, acted by party and prejudice, who denied fitness from learning, and grace from morality?

South.

From this time began an intrigue between his majesty and a junto of ministers, which had like to have ended in my destruction.

Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

2. A congress of statesmen; a council.

Some principal soldiers, upon account of their merit or experience, were wont to assist at the juntas.

Townsend, Cong. at Mexico, iii. 18.

The senate [of Venice] consists of a hundred and twenty nobles, one half of whom are ordinary, and the other distinguished by the appellation of the junta.

Drummond, Trav. p. 61.

IVORY. n. s. [ivoire, Fr. ebur, Lat.]

Ivory is a hard, solid, and firm substance, of a fine white colour: it is the dens exertus of the elephant, who carries on each side of his jaws a tooth of six or seven feet in length; the two sometimes weighing three hundred and thirty pounds: these ivory tusks are hollow from the base to a certain height, and the cavity is filled with a compact medullary substance.

Hill.

There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Two gates the silent house of sleep adorn,
Of polish'd ivory this, that of transparent horn:
True visions through transparent horn arise,
Through polish'd ivory pass deluding lies.

Dryden, Æn.

IVORY.* adj. Made of ivory.

Draw Erato with a sweet and lovely countenance, bearing a heart with an ivory key.

Peacham on Drawing.

From their ivory port the cherubim
Forth issu'd.

Milton, P. L.

JUPITER.* n. s. One of the planets.

Jupiter revolves round the sun between Mars and Saturn.

Adams.

JUPPO'N.† n. s. [jupon, Fr.] A short close coat.

Written also gippon, jippo, juppa, and jump. See JIPPO, and JUMP.

Of fustian he wear'd a jippon.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

Some wore a breast-plate and a light juppon,
Their horses cloth'd with rich caparison.

Dryden.

Little men in red or blue juppons.

Brevint, Saul and Sam. at Endor, p. 378.

JURAT.† n. s. [juratus, Lat. juré, Fr.]

A magistrate in some corporations, Dr. Johnson says; which Cowell tells us is in the nature of an alderman; as the mayor and jurats of Maidstone, &c. So in French, "jurats de Bourdeaux." Cotgrave. Originally, however, this word was applied to any person sworn to a particular purpose, juratus.

Witnesses and jurats, which shall proceede in the tryall, do make no lesse othe; but do openly renounce the helpe of God and his saintes, and the benefit of his passyon, if they saye not true, as far forth as they know.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 161. b.

JURATORY. adj. [juratoire, French, juro, Lat.] Comprising an oath.

A contumacious person may be compelled to give juratory caution de parendo juri.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

JURIDICAL.† adj. [juridicus, Latin, juridique, Fr.]

1. Acting in the distribution of justice.

All discipline is not legal, that is to say juridical, but some is personal, some economical, and some ecclesiastical.

Milton, Colasterion.

2. Used in courts of justice.

According to a juridical account and legal signification, time within memory, by the statute of Westminster, was settled in the beginning of the reign of king Richard the First.

Hale, Com. Law of England.

JURIDICALLY. adv. [from juridical.]

With legal authority; according to forms of justice.

JURISCONSULT. n. s. [juris consultus, Lat.] One who gives his opinion in cases of law.

There is mention made, in a decision of the jurisconsult Javolenus, of a Britannick fleet.

Arbutnot on Coins.

JURISDICTION. n. s. [jurisdictio, Lat. jurisdiction, Fr.]

1. Legal authority; extent of power.

Sometimes the practice of such jurisdiction may swerve through error even in the very best, and for other respects, where less integrity is. Hooker.

You wrought to be a legate; by which power

You main'd the jurisdiction of all bishops

Shakespeare.

All persons exercising ecclesiastical jurisdiction should have the king's arms in their seals of office.

Hayward.

This place exempt

From Heaven's high jurisdiction.

Milton.

As Adam had no such power as gave him sovereign jurisdiction over mankind.

Locke.

This custom in a popular state, of impeaching particular men, may seem to be nothing else but the people's chusing to exercise their own jurisdiction in person.

Swift.

2. District to which any authority extends.

JURISDICTIONAL.* adj. [from jurisdiction.]

According to legal authority.

Anciently there were no appeals, properly so called, or jurisdictional, in the church.

Barrow, Works, i. 249.

JURISDICTIVE.* adj. [from jurisdiction.]

Having jurisdiction.

That jurisdiction power in the church.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

JURISPRUDENCE.† n. s. [jurisprudence, Fr. jurisprudentia, Lat.] The science of law.

The talents of Abelard were not confined to theology, jurisprudence, philosophy, and the thorny paths of scholasticism; he gave proofs of a lively genius, by many poetical performances.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

Aristotle himself has said, speaking of the laws of his own country, that jurisprudence, or the knowledge of those laws, is the principal, and most perfect branch of ethics. Blackstone.

JURISPRUDENT.* adj. [Lat. jurisprudentes.] Understanding law.

Puffendorff, a very jurisprudent author.
West to Gray, Lett. dat. 1738.

JURIST. n. s. [juriste, Fr. jura, Lat.] A civil lawyer; a man who professes the science of the law; a civilian.

This is not to be measured by the principles of jurists. Bacon.

JUROR. n. s. [juro, Lat.] One that serves on the jury.

Were the jurors picked out of choice men, the evidence will be as deceitful as the verdict.

Spenser on Ireland.

I shall find your lordship judge and juror,
You are so merciful, I see your end,
'Tis my undoing. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
I sing no harm, good sooth! to any wight,
Juror, or judge. Donne.

About noon the jurors went together, and because they could not agree, they were shut in.
Hayward.

JURY. n. s. [jurata, Lat. jurée, Fr.]

Jury, a company of men, as twenty-four or twelve, sworn to deliver a truth upon such evidence as shall be delivered them touching the matter in question. There be three manners of trials in England: one by parliament, another by battle, and the third by assize or jury. The trial by assize, by the action civil or criminal, publick or private, personal or real, is referred for the fact to a jury, and as they find it, so passeth the judgement. This jury is used not only in circuits of justices errant, but also in other courts, and matters of office, as if the escheatour make inquisition in any thing touching his office, he doth it by a jury of inquest: if the coroner inquire how a subject found dead came to his end, he useth an inquest: the justices of peace in their quarter-sessions, the sheriff in his county and turn, the bailiff of a hundred, the steward of a court-leet or court-baron, if they inquire of any offence, or decide any cause between party and party, they do it by the same manner: so that where it is said, that all things be triable by parliament, battle, or assize; assize, in this place, is taken for a jury or inquest, impannelled upon any cause in a court where this kind of trial is used. This jury, though it appertaineth to most courts of the common law, yet it is most notorious in the half-year courts of the justices errants, commonly called the great assizes, and in the quarter-sessions, and in them it is most ordinarily called a jury, and that in civil causes; whereas in other courts it is often termed an inquest. In the general assize, there are usually many juries, because there be store of causes, both civil and criminal, commonly to be tried, whereof one is called the grand jury, and the rest petit juries. The grand jury consists ordinarily of twenty-four grave and substantial gentlemen, or some of them yeomen, chosen indifferently out of the whole shire by the sheriff, to consider of all bills of indictment preferred to the court; which they do either approve by writing upon them these words, billa vera, or disallow by writing ignoramus. Such as they do approve, if they touch life and death, are farther referred to another jury to be considered of, because the case is of such importance; but others of lighter moment are, upon their allowance, without more work, fined by the bench, except the party traverse the indictment, or challenge it for insufficiency, or remove the cause to a higher court by certiorari; in which two former cases it is referred to another jury, and in the latter transmitted to the higher. Those that pass upon civil causes real, are all, or so many as can conveniently be had, of the same hundred where the land or tenement in question doth lie, and four at the least; and they, upon due examination, bring in their verdict either for the defendant or tenant: according unto which, judgement passeth afterward in the court where the cause first began; and the reason hereof is, because these justices of assize are, in this case, for the ease of the countries only to take the verdict of the jury by the virtue of the writ called nisi prius, and so return it to the court where the cause is depending. Cowel.

The jury, passing on the prisoner's life, May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

How innocent I was,
His noble jury and foul cause can witness.

Shakspeare.

Clodius was acquitted by a corrupt jury, that had palpably taken shares of money before they gave up their verdict. Bacon.

JURYMEN. n. s. [jury and man.] One who is impannelled on a jury.

The hungry judges soon the sentence sign,
And wretches hang that jurymen may dine. Pope.
No judge was known, upon or off the bench, to use the least insinuation, that might affect the interests of any one single jurymen, much less of a whole jury. Swift.

JURYMEN.† n. s. It seems to be properly durée mast, mât de durée, a mast made to last for the present occasion. So the seamen call whatever they set up in the room of a mast lost in a fight, or by a storm; being some great yard which they put down into the step of that lost mast, fastening it into the partners, and fitting it to the mizzen or some lesser yard with sails and ropes, and with it make a shift to sail. Harris.

It has been also thought that the Norman Fr. jur, jura, a day, might give rise to this word; implying a temporary mast, a mast for a day.

JUST.† adj. [juste, Fr. justus, Lat.] The past participle of jubere, to command, as Mr. H. Tooke thus speciously contends. "A right and just action is such a one as is ordered and commanded. A just man is such as he is commanded to be, qui leges juraque servat, who observes and obeys the things laid down and commanded." Divers. of Purley, vol. ii. p. 9.—In reply to the objection, that, according to this doctrine, every thing that is ordered and commanded is right and just, Mr. Tooke not only admits the consequence, but considers it as an identical proposition: It is only affirming, he observes, that what is ordered and commanded is — ordered and commanded!" Dugald Stewart's Philosoph. Essays, p. 165. This however requires an admission, that the nature of the thing itself must depend upon its etymology, or that the obligation of subjection to the commanding or governing power must be conceded. From this dilemma Mr. Tooke endeavours to extricate himself by a distinction "between what is ordered by human authority, and what the laws of our nature teach us to consider as ordered by God." And thus, in the choice of obedience, a man must occasionally disregard what is ordered by one authority. In short, "in the present instance, Mr. Tooke has availed himself of a philological hypothesis to decide, in a few sentences, and, in my opinion, to decide very erroneously, one of the most important questions connected with the theory of morals." Dugald Stewart, p. 166.]

1. Upright; incorrupt; equitable in the distribution of justice.

Take it, while yet 'tis praise, before my rage
Unsafely just, break loose on this bad age. Dryden.
Men are commonly so just to virtue and goodness, as to praise it in others, even when they do not practise it themselves. Tillotson.

2. Honest; without crime in dealing with others.

Just balances, just weights, and a just ephab. Lev. xix.

3. I know not whether just of has any other authority.

Just of thy word, in every thought sincere,
Who knew no wish but what the world might hear. Pope.

4. Exact; proper; accurate.

Boileau's numbers are excellent, his expressions noble, his thoughts just, his language pure, and his sense close. Dryden.

These scenes were wrought,
Embellish'd with good morals and just thought. Granville.

Just precepts thus from great examples giv'n,
She drew from them what they deriv'd from Heav'n. Pope.

Just to the tale, as present at the fray,
Or taught the labours of the dreadful way. Pope.
Once on a time La Mancha's knight, they say,
A certain bard countering on the way,
Discours'd in terms as just, with looks as sage,
As ere could Dennis of the laws o' the stage. Pope.

Though the syllogism be irregular, yet the inferences are just and true. Watts, Logick.

5. Virtuous; innocent; pure.

How should man be just with God? Job, ix. 2.
A just man falleth seven times and riseth. Prov. xiv. 16.

He shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. St. Luke, xiv. 14.

- The just the unjust to serve. Milton, P. L.
 6. True; not forged.
 Crimes were laid to his charge too many, the least whereof being just, had bereaved him of estimation and credit. Hooker.
 7. Grounded on principles of justice;
 rightful.

- Me though just right
 Did first create your leader. Milton, P. L.
 8. Equally retributed.
 He received a just recompence of reward.

- Whose damnation is just. Rom. iii. 8.
 As Hesiod sings, spread war o'er thy fields,
 And a most just and glad increase it yields. Denham.

9. Complete without superfluity or defect.
 He was a comely personage, a little above just stature, well and strait limbed, but slender. Bacon, Hen. VII.

10. Regular; orderly.
 When all
 The war shall stand ranged in its just array,
 And dreadful pomp, then will I think on thee. Addison.

11. Exactly proportioned.
 The prince is here at hand: pleaseth your lordship
 To meet his grace, just distance 'tween our armies? Shakspeare.

12. Full; of full dimensions.
 His soldiers had skirmishes with the Numidians,
 so that once the skirmish was like to have come to a just battle. Knolles, Hist.
 Their names alone would make a just volume.
 Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 653.
 There is not any one particular above mentioned, but would take up the business of a just volume. Hale, Orig. of Manh.
 There seldom appeared a just army in the civil wars. Dutches of Newcastle.

JUST.† adv.

1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.
 The god Pan guided my hand just to the heart of the beast. Sidney.
 They go about to make us believe that they are just of the same opinion, and that they only think such ceremonies are not to be used when they are unprofitable, or when as good or better may be established. Hooker.
 2. There, ev'n just there he stood; and as she spoke,
 Where last the spectre was, she cast her look. Dryden.

- A few understanding him right; just as when our Saviour said, in an allegorical sense, Except ye eat the flesh of the son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Bentley.
 'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none
 Go just alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.

2. Merely; barely.
 It is the humour of weak and trifling men to value themselves upon just nothing at all. L'Estrange.

- The Nereids swam before
 To smoothe the seas; a soft Etesian gale
 But just inspir'd and gently swell'd the sail. Dryden.

- Give me, ye gods, the product of one field,
 That so I neither may be rich nor poor;
 And having just enough, not covet more. Dryden.
 3. Nearly; almost; tantum non.

- Being spent with age, and just at the point of death, Democritus called for leaves of new bread to be brought, and with the steam of them under his nose prolonged his life. Temple.

4. Just now. Immediately. Craven Dialect.

- JUST. n. s. [jouste, French.] Mock encounter on horseback; tilt; tournament.
Joust is more proper. See JOUST.

None was either more grateful to the beholders, or more noble in itself, than justs, both with sword and lance. Sidney.
 What news? hold those justs and triumphs? Shakspeare.

Among themselves the tourney they divide,
 In equal squadrons rang'd on either side;
 Then turn'd their horses' heads, and man to man,
 And stood to steed oppos'd, the justs began. Dryden.

To JUST. v. n. [jouster, French. See TO JOUST.]

1. To engage in a mock fight: to tilt.
 2. To push; to drive; to joust.

JUSTICE.† n. s. [Sax. uirtice, Sax.
 Chron. justice, French; justitia, Lat.]

1. The virtue by which we give to every man what is his due: opposed to injury or wrong. It is either distributive, belonging to magistrates; or commutative, respecting common transactions between men.

O that I were judge, I would do justice.
 2 Sam. xv. 4.

The king-becoming graces,
 As justice, virtue, temperance, stableness,
 I have no relish of them. Shakspeare. Macbeth.
 The nature and office of justice being to dispose the mind to a constant and perpetual readiness to render to every man his due, it is evident, that if gratitude be a part of justice, it must be conversant about something that is due to another. Locke.

2. Equity; agreeableness to right: as, he proved the justice of his claim.
 3. Vindicative retribution; punishment:
 opposed to mercy.

He executed the justice of the Lord.
 Deut. xxxiii. 21.

Let justice overtake us. Isa. lix. 9.
 Examples of justice must be made, for terror to some; examples of mercy, for comfort to others.
 Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

4. Right; assertion of right.
 Draw thy sword,
 That if my speech offend a noble heart,
 Thy arm may do thee justice. Shakspeare. K. Lear.
 5. [Justiciarius, Lat.] One deputed by the king to do right by way of judgement. Cowell.

A lewd officer, a vain justice.
 Chaucer, Sec. Nonnes Tale.
 And thou, Esdras, ordain judges and justices, that they may judge in all Syria. 1 Esdras, viii. 23.

6. JU'STICE of the King's Bench. [justici-arius de Banquo Regis.] Is a lord by his office, and the chief of the rest;
 wherefore he is also called capitalis justiciarius Anglie. His office especially is to hear and determine all pleas of the crown; that is, such as concern offences committed against the crown, dignity, and peace of the king; as treasons, felonies, mayhems, and such like; but it is come to pass, that he with his assistants heareth all personal actions, and real also, if they be incident to any personal action depending before them. Cowell.

Give that whipster his errand,
 He'll take my lord chief justice' warrant. Prior.

7. JU'STICE of the Common Pleas. [justici-arius Communium Placitorum.] Is a lord by his office, and is called dominus justici-arius communium placitorum. He with his assistants originally did hear and determine all causes at the common law;

 that is, all civil causes between common persons, as well personal as real; for which cause it was called the court of common pleas, in opposition to the pleas of the crown, or the king's pleas, which are special, and appertaining to him only. Cowell.

8. JU'STICE of the Forest. [justiciarius Forestæ.] Is a lord by his office, and hath the hearing and determining of all offences within the king's forest, committed against venison or vert: of these there be two, whereof the one hath jurisdiction over all the forests on this side Trent, and the other of all beyond. Cowell.

9. JU'STICES of Assize. [justicarii ad capiendas Assisas.] Are such as were wont, by special commission, to be sent into this or that country to take assizes;
 the ground of which polity was the ease of the subjects: for whereas these actions pass always by jury, so many men might not, without great hindrance, be brought to London; and therefore justices, for this purpose, were by commission particularly authorized and sent down to them. Cowell.

10. JU'STICES in Eyre. [justicarii itineraries.] Are so termed of the French erre, iter. The use of these, in ancient time, was to send them with commission into divers counties, to hear such causes especially as were termed the pleas of the crown, and therefore I must imagine they were sent abroad for the ease of the subjects, who must else have been hurried to the King's Bench, if the cause were too high for the country court.
 They differed from the justices of Oyer and Terminer, because they were sent upon some one or few especial cases, and to one place; whereas the justices in eyre were sent through the provinces and countries of the land, with more indefinite and general commission. Cowell.

11. JU'STICES of Gaol Delivery. [justici-arii ad Gaolas deliberandas.] Are such as are sent with commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to such as for any offence are cast into gaol, part of whose authority is to punish such as let to mainprize those prisoners that by law be not bailable. These by likelihood, in ancient time, were sent to countries upon several occasions; but afterward justices of assize were likewise authorized to this. Cowell.

12. JU'STICES of Nisi Prius are all one now-a-days with justices of assize; for it is a common adjournment of a cause, in the common pleas, to put it off to such a day; nisi prius justicarii venerint ad eas partes ad capiendas assisas; and upon this clause of adjournment they are called justices of nisi prius, as well as justices of assize, by reason of the writ or action that they have to deal in. Cowell.

13. JU'STICES of Peace. [justicarii ad Pacem.] Are they that are appointed by the king's commission, with others, to attend the peace of the country where they dwell; of whom some, upon especial respect, are made of the quorum, because some business of importance may not be dealt in without the presence of them, or one of them? Cowel.

The justice,
In fair round belly with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. Shaksp. As you like it.
Thou hast appointed justices of the peace to call poor men before them, about matters they were not able to answer. Shakspere.

The justices of peace are of great use: anciently they were conservators of the peace; these are the same, saving that several acts of parliament have enlarged their jurisdiction. Bacon.
To JU'STICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To administer justice to any. A word not in use.

As for the title of proscription, wherein the emperor hath been judge and party, and hath justified himself, God forbid but that it should endure an appeal to a war. Bacon.

Whereas one Steward, a Scot, was apprehended for intending to poison the young queen of Scots; the king delivered him to the French king, to be justified by him at his pleasure. Hayward.

JU'STICEABLE.* adj. [from justice.] Liable to account in a court of justice.

Many petty kings of Gaul — were subject to their nobility, and justiceable by them.

Hayward, Answ. to Doleman, (1603,) ch. 3.
JU'STICEMENT. n. s. [from justice.] Procedure in courts.

JU'STICER.† n. s. [from To justice.] Administrator of justice. An old word, found in the law-books of elder times, viz. "justicers of the peace."

With what fear and astonishment did the repeating offenders look upon so unexpected a justicer! Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

He was a singular good justicer; and if he had not died in the second year of his government, was the likeliest person to have reformed the English colonies. Davies on Ireland.

Preceding his progenitors, a justicer upright. Warner, Albion's Eng. x. 54.

He was a good justicer.

Harington, Br. View of the Ch. p. 110.

JU'STICESHIP. n. s. [from justice.] Rank or office of justice. Swift.

JUSTI'CIABLE. adj. [from justice.] Proper to be examined in courts of justice.

JUSTI'CIARY.* n. s. [justiciarius, low Lat.]

1. An administrator of justice.

The civil justiciary, who omitteth the performance of those good duties which the law requireth, is in a damnable condition.

Junius, Sin Stigmat. (1639,) p. 465.
They [the clergy] were — sometimes sheriffs of counties, and almost constantly the justiciaries of the kingdom, [an 1162.]

Burke, Abridgm. Eng. Hist. iii. 6.
2. One who boasts the justice of his own action; a self-appointed judge.

The devil is in full force to those that are justiciaries, trusting in their own works, or in the liberty of their own will.

Deriving on the Ep. to the Hebrews, (1576,) M. 8.
I believe it would be no hard matter to unravel, and run through, most of the pompous austerities, and fastings, of many religious operators and splendid justiciaries. South, Serm. ix. 146.

JU'STIFIABLE. adj. [from justify.] Defensible by law or reason.

Just are the ways of God,
And justifiable to men. Milton, S. A.

Although some animals in the water do carry a justifiable resemblance to some at land, yet are the major part which bear their names unlike.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

JU'STIFIABLENESS. n. s. [from justifiable.] Rectitude; possibility of being fairly defended.

Men, jealous of the justifiableness of their doings before God, never think they have human strength enough. King Charles.

JU'STIFIABLY. adv. [from justifiable.] Rightly; so as to be supported by right; defensibly.

A man may more justifiably throw cross and pile for his opinions, than take them up by such measures. Locke.

JUSTIFICATION. n. s. [justification, French; justificatio, low Latin.]

1. Absolution.

I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this but as an essay of my virtue. Shakspere, K. Lear.

2. Defence; maintenance; vindication; support.

Among theological arguments, in justification of absolute obedience, was one of a singular nature. Swift.

3. Deliverance by pardon from sins past. Clarke.

In such righteousness
To them by faith imputed, they may find
Justification towards God, and peace

Of conscience. Milton, P. L.

'Tis the consummation of that former act of faith by this latter, or in the words of St. Paul and St. James, the consummation of faith by charity and good works, that God accepteth in Christ to justification, and not the bare aptness of faith to bring forth works, if those works, by the fault of a rebellious infidel, will not be brought forth.

Hammond.

JU'STIFICATIVE.* adj. [justificativus, Fr.] Having power to justify; justifying; making right. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

JU'STIFICATORY. n. s. [from justify.] One who supports, defends, vindicates, or justifies.

JUSTI'FICATORY.* adj. [from To justify.] Vindicatory; defensory. Johnson in V. VINDICATORY.

JU'STIFIER. n. s. [from justify.] One who justifies; one who defends or absolves; one who frees from sin by pardon.

That he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus. Rom. iii. 26.

To JU'STIFY. v. a. [justifier, French; justifico, low Latin.]

1. To clear from imputed guilt; to absolve from an accusation.

The law hath judg'd thee, Eleanor;
I cannot justify whom law condemns. Shaksp.

They say, behold a man gluttonous, a friend of publicans and sinners; but wisdom is justified of her children. St. Matt. xi. 19.

How can man be justified with God? Or how can he be clean that is born of a woman?

Job, xxv. 4.

There is an exquisite subtilty, and the same is unjust; and there is a wise man that justifieth in judgement. Eccclus. xix. 25.

Sins may be forgiven through repentance, but no act or wit of man will ever justify them.

Sherlock.

You're neither justify'd, nor yet accus'd.
Dryden.

2. To maintain; to defend; to vindicate.

When we began in courteous manner to lay his unkindness unto him, he seeing himself confronted by so many, like a resolute orator, went not to denial, but to justify his cruel falsehood. Sidney.

What she did, whatever in itself,
Her doing seem'd to justify the deed. Milt. P. L.

My unwilling flight the gods enforce,
And that must justify our sad divorce. Denham.

Yet still thy fools shall stand in thy defence,
And justify their author's want of sense. Dryd.

Let others justify their missions as they can, we are sure we can justify that of our fathers by an uninterrupted succession. Atterbury.

3. To free from past sin by pardon.

By him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses. Acts, xiii. 39.

To JU'STLE. v. n. [from just, jouster, French.] To encounter; to clash; to rush against each other.

While injury of chance
Puts back leave taking, justles roughly by
All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoindure. Shakspere, Tr. and Cress.

The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall justle one against another in the broad ways. Nah. ii. 4.

Argo pass'd
Through Bosphorus, betwixt the justling rocks. Milton, P. L.

Late the clouds
Justling, or push'd with winds, rude in their shock,
Time the slant lightning. Milton, P. L.

Not one starry spark,
But gods meet taking, and justle in the dark. Lee.

Courtiers therefore justle for a grant;
And, when they break their friendship, plead their want. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

The more remote run stumbling with their fear,
And, in the dark, men justle as they meet.

Dryden.

When elephant 'gainst elephant did rear
His trunk, and castles justled in the air,
My sword way thro' to victory had shewn. Dryd.

I thought the dean had been too proud
To justle here among the crowd. Swift.

To JU'STLE. v. a. To push; to drive; to force by rushing against it. It is commonly used with a particle following; as, out, or off.

Private and single abilities should not justle out and deprive the church of the joint abilities of many learned and godly men. King Charles.

Many excellent strains have been justled off by their intrusions. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The surly commons shall respect deny,
And justle peamage out with property. Dryden.

It is not to be imagined that the incongruous alphabets and abuses of writing can ever be justled out of their possession of all libraries. Holder.

Running in the dark, a man may justle a post. Collier.

Absent good, though thought on, not making any part of unhappiness in its absence, is justled out, to make way for the removal of those uneasinesses we feel. Locke.

We justled one another out, and disputed the post for a great while. Addison, Guardian.

JU'STLE.* n. s. [from the verb.] Shock; slight encounter.

Every little justle,
Which is but the ninth part of a sound thump. Baum. and Fl. Nice Valour.

All such as have been aggrieved by any ambiguous expression, accidental justle, or unkind repartee. Tatler, No. 250.

JU'STLING.* n. s. [from justle.] Shock; the act of rushing against each other.

Was there not one who had set bars and doors to it, and said, Hitherto shalt thou come, but no farther, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed; then might we well expect such vicissitudes, such justlings, and clashings, in nature.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

JU'STLY. adv. [from just.]

1. Uprightly; honestly; in a just manner.

Nothing can justly be despised that cannot justly be blamed; where there is no choice, there can be no blame.

South.

With ignominy scourg'd, in open sight:

Next view the Tarquin kings; the avenging sword Of Brutus justly drawn, and Rome restor'd.

Dryden.

The goddess, studious of her Grecian's fate,

Taught them in laws and letters to excel,

In acting justly, and in writing well.

Prior.

2. Properly; exactly; accurately.

Their artful hands instruct the lute to sound,

Their feet assist their hands, and justly beat the ground.

Dryden.

JU'STNESS. n. s. [from just.]

1. Justness; reasonableness; equity. Justness is properly applied to things; and justice to persons; though we now say the justice of a cause, as well as of a judge.

It maketh unto the right of the war against him, whose success useth commonly to be according to the justness of the cause for which it is made.

Spenser on Ireland.

We may not think the justness of each act

Such and no other than event doth form it.

Shaks.

2. Accuracy; exactness; propriety. In this sense it is now most used.

I value the satisfaction I had in seeing it represented with all the justness and gracefulness of action.

Dryden.

I appeal to the people, was the usual saying of a very excellent dramatic poet, when he had any dispute with particular persons about the justness and regularity of his productions.

Addison, Guardian.

TO JUT. v. n. [This word is supposed to be corrupted from jet, perhaps from shoot. Dr. Johnson. — Not from shoot. See TO JET.]

1. To push or shoot into prominences; to come out beyond the main bulk.

Insulting tyranny begins to jut

Upon the innocent and awless throne.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

All the projected or jutting parts should be very moderate, especially the cornices of the lower orders.

Wotton.

The land, if not restrain'd, had met your way,

Projected out a neck and jutted to the sea.

Dryden.

Broke by the jutting land on either side;

In double streams the briny waters glide.

Dryden.

It seems to jut out of the structure of the poem, and be independent of it.

Broomer on the Odyssey.

2. To run against; to but.

Barret.

Of the ram

And jutting steer drive their entangling horns

Through the frail meshes.

Mason, Eng. Garden, B. 2.

TO JU'TTY. v. a. [from jut.] To shoot out beyond.

Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;

Let it pry through the portage of the head,

Like the brass cannon, let the brow o'erwhelm it,

As fearfully, as doth a galled rock

O'erhang and jutty his confounded base,

Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

TO JU'TTY. v. n. To jut. See TO JETTY.

JU'TTY.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. That part of a building which shoots forward beyond the rest. See JETTEE.

No jutty, frieze, buttress,

Nor coigne of vantage.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. A kind of pier; a mole projected into the sea.

Maintenance of piers, jutties, walles, and banks, against the rages of the sea.

Acts, 1 Edward VI. c. 14.

JUT-WINDOW.* n. s. [jut and window.] A window jutting from a building.

I fancied her like the front of her father's hall; her eyes were the two jut windows, and her mouth the great door.

Congreve.

JUVENILE. adj. [juvenilis, Lat.] Young; youthful.

Learning hath its infancy when it is almost childish; then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile; then its strength of years when it is solid; and lastly, its old age, when it waxeth dry and exhaust.

Bacon, Essays.

JUVENILITY. n. s. [from juvenile.]

1. Youthfulness.

The restoration of grey hairs to juvenility, and renewing exhausted marrow, may be effected without a miracle.

Glanville.

2. Light and careless manner.

Customary strains and abstracted juvenilities have made it difficult to commend and speak credibly in dedications.

Glanville.

JUXTAPOSITION. n. s. [juxtaposition, French; juxta and positio, Latin.] Apposition; the act of placing together; the state of being placed by each other.

Nor can it be a difference that the parts of solid bodies are held together by hooks, since the coherence of these will be of difficult conception; and we must either suppose an infinite number of them holding together, or at last come to parts that are united by a mere juxtaposition.

Glanville.

By the abduction and juxtaposition of parallels, universally gleaned both from his poetry and prose, to ascertain his favourite words.

Warton, Pref. to Milton's Sm. Poems.

The man who first invented the word above, must not only have distinguished, in some measure, the relation of superiority from the objects which were so related, but he must also have distinguished this relation from other relations, such as, from the relation of inferiority denoted by the word below, from the relation of juxtaposition, expressed by the word beside, and the like.

A. Smith, Formation of Languages.

IVY. n. s. [iᵛ, iᵛz, Saxon; hedera, Lat.] A plant.

It is a parasitick plant, sending forth roots or fibres from its branches, by which it is fastened to either trees, walls, or plants which are near it, and from thence receives a great share of its nourishment.

Miller.

A gown made of the finest wool;—

A belt of straw, and ivy buds,

With coral clasps and amber studs;

And if these pleasures may thee move,

Then live with me and be my love.

Marlow.

Direct the clasping ivy where to climb.

Milton, P. L.

IVYED.* adj. [from ivy.] Overgrown with ivy. A favourite epithet of modern poets.

Underneath the brow

Of ivyed cliffs, through many a winding path,

Many a low valley, and forsaken lawn,

I stray'd with my conductor.

W. Richardson.

I'll seek some lonely church, or dreary hall,

Where fancy paints the glimmering taper blue,

Where lamps hang mouldering on the ivy'd wall,

And sheeted ghosts drink up the midnight dew.

Smollet.

Repeated objects of his view,

The gloomy battlements, and ivy'd spires;

That crown the solitary dome, arise.

Warton, Pleasures of Melancholy.

JY'MOLD. adj. See GIMMAL.

K.

K

K A I

K. A letter borrowed by the English from the Greek alphabet. It has before all the vowels one invariable sound: as, keen, ken, kill. It is used after c at the end of words: as, knock, clock, crack, back, brick, stick, pluck, check, which were written anciently with e final: as, clocke, checke, tricke. It is also in use between a vowel and the silent e final: as, cloke, broke, brake, pike, duke, eke. It likewise ends a word after a diphthong: as, look, break, shook, leek. The English [should] never use c at the end of a word. K is silent in the present pronunciation before n: as, knife, knee, knell.

VOL. II.

TO KABOB.* See TO CABOB.

KAIL.* n. s. [caᵛl, Saxon; caul, old Fr.; kal, Icel. and Su. Goth. See also COLE.

1. A kind of cabbage.

I was told at Aberdeen, that the people learned from Cromwell's soldiers to make shoes and to plant kail.

Johnson, Journ. Western Islands.

2. A kind of broth; pottage. A northern term. Grose, Craven Dial. and Brockett. See KELL.

KA'LENDAR. n. s. [now written calendar.] An account of time.

Let this pernicious hour
Stand aye accursed in the calendar.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

To KA'LENDAR.* v. a. [from the noun. See To CALENDAR.] To enter in the calendar.

We are generally more apt to calendar saints than sinners' days. Hooker, Ecc. Pol. v. 72.

KA'LENDER.* n. s. A sort of dervise. See CALENDER.

KA'LL. n. s. [An arabick word.] Seaweed, of the ashes of which glass was made; whence the word alkali.

The ashes of the weed kali are sold to the Venetians for their glass works. Bacon.

KA'LLIGRAPHY.* n. s. Beautiful writing. See CALIGRAPHY.

My kalligraphy, a fair hand,
Fit for a secretary. B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

KA'LMIA.* n. s. An elegant ever green plant, of which one kind has been called, the dwarf laurel, with a tinus leaf. The leaf of another sort is larger. Mason.

KA'LOYER.* n. s. A monk of the Greek church. See CALOYER. Dr. Shaw calls the Presbyters of the monastery of St. Catherine at Mount Sinai kalories, Trav. p. 330. Ricaut writes the word in the same manner. Others write it caloyer, as Churchill, Tournefort, &c. The doctor, Mr. Pegge observes, derives the word from καλός, a good old man; but Mr. Pegge prefers καλλιέργος, one who performs good works. See Anon. ix. 93. It is probably from καλός, without any adjunct.

The second are habited like Greek kalories of that order.

Ricaut, State of the Greek Church, p. 424.

KAM.† adj. [Kam, in Erse, is squint-eyed, and applied to any thing awry: clean kam signifies crooked, athwart, awry, cross from the purpose. A-schembo, Italian; hence our English a-kimbo. Clean kam is, by vulgar pronunciation, brought to kim kam. Dr. Johnson. — kamm, or camm, Welsh, crooked. See CAMOUS.] Crooked.

Sicini. This is clean kam.
Brut. Merely awry. Shakespeare, Coriol.

The new way, clean contrary, quite kam.

Cotgrave, in V. Contrepoint.

All goes topsy turvy; all kim kam.

Transl. of Guzman de Alfarache.

KANGAROO.* n. s. An animal of South Wales.

The head, neck and shoulders are very small in proportion; the tail is nearly as long as the body, thick near the rump, and tapering towards the end: the fore legs of this were only eight inches long, the hind ones two-and-twenty; its progress is by successive leaps of great length in an erect posture. The skin is covered by a short fur, mouse colour. This animal is called by the natives Kangaroo.

Hawkesworth's Collect. of Voyages.

To KAW.† v. n. [from the sound. Dr. Johnson. — Hence the bird's name, kue, Teut. ceo, Saxon, cawci, Welsh; and much the same in several other languages.] To cry as a raven, crow, or rook.

Jack-daws kawing and fluttering about the nests, set all their young ones a-gaping; but having nothing in their mouths but air, leave them as hungry as before. Locke.

KAW. n. s. [from the verb.] The cry of a raven or crow.

The dastard crow that to the wood made wings,
With her loud kaws her raven-kind doth bring,
Who, safe in numbers, cuff the noble bird. Dryden.

KAYLES. n. s. pl. [quille, French.]

1. Ninepins; kettlepins, of which skittles seems a corruption.

And now at keels they try a harmless chance,
And now their cur they teach to fetch and dance. Sidney.

The residue of the time they wear out at coils, kayles, or the like idle exercises. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

2. A kind of play still retained in Scotland, in which nine holes ranged in three's are made in the ground, and an iron bullet rolled in among them.

KA'ZARDLY.* adj. Unlucky; liable to accident. A northern word. Mr. Wilbraham, in his Cheshire Glossary, considers it a corruption of hazardly. Ray thus defines hazardly cattle, "cattle subject to casualties, hazardous, &c."

To KECK.† v. n. [kecken, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — From the Iceland, kuok, the throat; kuoka, "gula niti." Serenius. So, in Berkshire, kecker is used for the gullet.] To heave the stomach; to reach at vomiting.

All those diets do dry up humours and rheums, which they first attenuate, and while the humour is attenuated it troubleth the body a great deal more; and therefore patients must not keck at them at the first. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The faction is it not notorious?
Keck at the memory of glorious. Swift.

KE'CKER.* n. s. The gullet. A provincial term. See the etymology of To KECK.

To KE'CKLE.† v. a. [perhaps from kughelen, Teut. rotundare.] To defend a cable round with rope. Ainsworth.

KE'CKSY. n. s. [commonly keez, cigue, French; cutita, Latin. Skinner.] Skinner seems to think kecksey or keez the same as hemlock. It is used in Staffordshire both for hemlock, and any other hollow-jointed plant.

Nothing tems
But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

KE'CKY. adj. [from keez.] Resembling a keck.

An Indian sceptre, made of a sort of cane, without any joint, and perfectly round, consisteth of hard and blackish cylinders, mixed with a soft kecky body; so as at the end cut transversely, it looks as a bundle of wires. Grew.

To KEDGE.† v. a. [kaghe, a small vessel, Dutch.]

1. In bringing a ship up or down a narrow river, when the wind is contrary to the tide, they set the foresail, or fore-top-sail and mizzen, and so let her drive with the tide. The sails are to flat her about, if she comes too near the shore. They also carry out an anchor in the head of the boat, with a hawser that comes from the ship; which anchor, if the ship comes too near the shore, they let fall in the stream, and so wind her head about it; then weigh the anchor again when she is about, which is called kedging, and from this use the anchor a kedger. Harris.

2. To fill with meat. A northern expression; as, "kedge thy kite," i. e. fill thy belly. See KITE. Praise of Yorkshire Ale, 1697, Grose, and Craven Dialect, &c.

KEDGE.* } adj. Brisk; lively. A Suffolk
KE'DGY. } word. Ray, and Moore. Caigie, or caidgy, is a Scottish term also for cheerful, sportive. See Jamieson in V. CAIGIE.

KE'DGER.† n. s. [from kedge.]

Cicely, the western lass, that tends the kees. Gay, Past.

KE'DLACK. n. s. A weed among corn; charlock. Tusser.

KEECH.* n. s. [caicchio, Ital. a barrel.] A solid lump or mass.

I wonder,

That such a keech can with his very bulk

Take up the rays o' the beneficial sun,
And keep it from the earth. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

A keech of tallow is the fat of an ox or cow rolled up by the butcher in a round lump, in order to be carried to the chandler. It is the proper word in use now.

Bp. Percy, Note on Shakespeare.

To KECK.* v. n. [kijcken, Teut. inspicere.] To peep; to look pryingly. Cumberland Dialect, and Brockett's N. C. Words.

KEEL.† n. s. [ceole, Saxon; kiel, Dutch; quille, Fr.]

1. The bottom of the ship.

Portunus

Heav'd up his lighten'd keel, and sunk the sand,
And steer'd the sacred vessel. Dryden.

Her sharp bill serves for a keel to cut the air before her; her tail she useth as her rudder. Grew, Cosmol.

Your cable's burst, and you must quickly feel
The waves impetuous ent'ring at your keel. Swift.

2 A barge or lighter. "The vessels or barges, in which coals are carried from the colliery-staiths to the ships in the Tyne and Wear, are called keels. Keel is a very ancient name, of Saxon origin, for a ship or vessel, ceole, ceol, navis. On the first arrival of the Saxons in England, they came over in three large ships, styled by themselves, as Verstegan informs us, keeles." Brockett's N. C. Words.

KEELS, the same with keyles; which see. To KEEL.† v. a. [celan, Saxon, to cool; "to kele; or kelan, to make cold." Prompt. Parv.] To cool; to render cold. Dr. Johnson has been misled by Sir T. Hanmer in regard to the meaning of this word, which he confines to the kitchen; and has considered it as existing only in Shakspeare. It is one of our oldest words.

I shall lazar to the sende
With water on his finger ende,
Thyn hote tonge for to kele.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 6.

And down on knees full humbly gan I knele,
Beseeching her my fervent vo to kele.

Chaucer, Court of Love.

While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

Shakspeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

To KEEL.* v. n. To become cold; to lose spirit; to quail. "He keels," that is, he is cowardly; his courage cools, Lancashire.

The cote he found, and eke he feleth
The mace; and then his herte keleth,
That there durst he not abide.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

KE'ELAGE.* n. s. [from keel.] Duty paid for a ship coming into port.

Keelage, whereby he had by custom what is here expressed, "octo denarios, &c." for the keel of every ship that came into his sea-port [of Harlepool] with a boat.

Blount, Anc. Tenures, p. 146.

KE'ELER, or KE'ELMAN.* n. s.

1. One who works in the management of barges or vessels: the old word is keeler; the modern, keelman. Brockett.

2. A shallow tub. "Ray does not give keeler as a local word, but he uses it casually, viz. A swill, a keeler to wash in, standing on three feet." Moore's Suffolk Words.

KE'ELFAT. n. s. [celan, Saxon, to cool, and fat or vat, a vessel.] Cooler; tub in which liquor is let to cool.

To KE'ELHALE. v. a. [keel and hale.] To punish in the seaman's way, by dragging the criminal under water on one side of the ship and up again on the other.

KE'ELING.* n. s. [of uncertain etymology.] A kind of small cod, whereof stockfish is made. Cotgrave, and Sherwood. The name given to cod of a large size. Dr. Jamieson.

KE'ELSON. n. s. The next piece of timber in a ship to her keel, lying right over it next above the floor timber.

Harris.

KEEN.† adj. [cene, kene, Saxon; kuhn, German; koen, Dutch; daring; brave; bold: from kennen, posse. Wachter.—Goth, kienn, callidus, prudens; Su. Goth. kaenna, noscere, sentire. Sere-nius.—Our oldest sense certainly implies that of strength; yet in the expression a keen man, or a man of keen observation, we mean a sharp, clever, or cunning person.]

1. Sharp; well edged; not blunt. We say keen of an edge; and sharp, either of edge or point.

Come, thick night,

That my keen knife see not the wound it makes.

Shakspeare.

Here is my keen-edg'd sword,
Deck'd with fine flower-de-luces on each side.

Shakspeare.

To me the cries of fighting fields are charms,
Keen be my sabre, and of proof my arms.

Dryden.

A sword keen-edg'd within his right he held,
The warlike emblem of the conquer'd field.

Dryden.

2. Severe; piercing.

The keen cold blows through my beaten hide.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

The winds

Blow moist, and keen, shattering the graceful locks

Of these fair spreading trees; which bids us seek
Some better shroud.

Milton, P. L.

The cold was very supportable; but as it changed to the north-west, or north, it became excessively keen.

Ellis's Voyage.

3. Eager; vehement.

Never did I know

A creature, that did bear the shape of man,

So keen and greedy to confound a man.

Shakspeare.

Keen dispatch of real hunger.

Milton, P. L.

The sheep were so keen upon the acorns, that they gobbled up a piece of the coat.

L'Estrange.

Those curs are so extremely hungry, that they are too keen at the sport, and worry their game.

Tatler.

This was a prospect so very inviting, that it could not be easily withstood by any who have so keen an appetite for wealth.

Swift.

4. Acrimonious; bitter of mind.

Good father cardinal, cry thou, Amen,

To my keen curses.

Shakspeare, K. John.

I have known some of these absent officers as keen against Ireland, as if they had never been indebted to her.

Swift.

5. Sharp; acute of mind.

To KEEN. v. a. [from the adjective.] To sharpen. An unauthorized word.

Nor when cold winter keens the brightening flood,

Would I weak shivering linger on the brink.

Thomson.

KE'ENLY.† adv. [from keen. Sax. kenlice.] Sharply; vehemently; eagerly; bitterly.

KE'ENNESS.† n. s. [from keen.]

1. Sharpness; edge.

No, not the hangman's ax bears half the keenness

Of thy sharp envy.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Time and calmer considerations — do oft take off the edge and keenness of men's spirits against those things, whereof they were sometimes great abhorers; reconciling their mortal feuds, and wearing off their popular prejudices.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 134.

2. Rigour of weather; piercing cold.

3. Asperity; bitterness of mind.

That they might keep up the keenness against the court, his lordship furnished them with informations to the king's disadvantage.

Clarendon.

The sting of every reproachful speech is the truth of it; and to be conscious is that which gives an edge and keenness to the invective.

South.

4. Eagerness; vehemence.

These interposals of forbearance do but whet
the appetite to a greater keenness of desire.

South, Sermon, vi. 436.

5. Acuteness of understanding.

To KEEP.† v. a. [cepan, kepan, Saxon; kepen, old Dutch. "In the English language we have two words, which add the idea of care or diligence to that of holding or possessing. These words are keep and save, which we perceive are the same words under different forms. On the word keep our etymologists supply us with a set of terms belonging to the same element, (C. B. whence the Latin capiō, to take hold, to contain, &c.) which may be found in Skinner; cepan, κίπειν, (pera) kepen, coop. — Kefes signifies in Persia and Arabic a coop or cage for birds. Under coop, in Junius, we find a Dutch expression, 'kuype der stad, septa urbis; and coop or coupp, vas, dolium. Hence is derived cooper, doliarius. Keep is sometimes used in the sense of restrain, confine; as, in the phrases, keep in, to keep a person to any business, &c. The commentators on Shakspeare will supply us with examples, in which keep is used in the sense of care for; and there is another signification of this word, still preserved in the phrasology of our university, [Cambridge], in which it recurs to a different sense of the element, and has reference to an enclosure for the purpose of rest, habitation, &c." Whiter, Etymolog. Magn. p. 43.]

1. To retain; not to lose.

I kept the field with the death of some, and

Rude, as their ships, was navigation then; No useful compass or meridian known: Coasting they kept the land within their ken, And knew the north but when the pole-star shone.

Dryden.

When we consider the reasons we have to think, that what lies within our ken is but a small part of the universe, we shall discover an huge abyss of ignorance.

Locke.

KE'NDAL-GREEN,* n. s. A kind of green cloth, made at Kendal in Westmoreland; a place long distinguished for dying cloths with several bright colours. This sort of stuff is mentioned in a statute of king Richard the Second. See Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poetry, vol. iv. p. 40.

Three misbegotten knaves, in Kendal-green, came at my back, and let drive at me.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

Now doth he inly scorn his Kendal-green, And his patch'd cockers now despised beene,

Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 6.

KE'NMARKED,* } part. Adj. [from ken, to KE'NSPECKED, } know, to distinguish, add mark, and speck.] Marked, or branded, so as to be known; blemished. A northern expression. Ray, Grose, and Craven Dialect.

KE'NNEL,† n. s. [chenil, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — From chien, Fr. a dog; canis, Latin. And our old word, for a kennel of hounds, is accordingly cannel. See Huloet's Dictionary.]

1. A cot for dogs.

A dog sure, if he could speak, had wit enough to describe his kennel. Sidney.

From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept A hell-hound, that doth hunt us all to death.

The seditious remain within their station, which by reason of the nastiness of the beastly multitude might be more fitly termed a kennel than a camp. Hayward.

2. A number of dogs kept in a kennel.

A little herd of England's tim'rous deer, Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs. Shakspeare.

3. The hole of a fox, or other beast.

4. [Kennel, Dutch; chenal, Fr. canalis, Lat.] The watercourse of a street.

A scavenger working in the canell.

The crosses also of certain brethren—they overthrew and laid flat with the cheynell. A. Wood, Ann. Univ. Ox. under the year 1354.

Bad humours gather to a bile; or, as divers kennels flow to one sink, so in short time their numbers increased. Hayward.

He always came in so dirty, as if he had been dragged through the kennel at a boarding-school. Arbutnot.

KE'NNEL Coal.* See CANAL Coal.

To KE'NNEL. v. n. [from kennel.] To lie; to dwell: used of beasts, and of man in contempt.

Yet, when they list, would creep, If aught disturb'd their noise, into her womb, And kennel there; yet there still bark'd and howl'd

Within, unseen. Milton, P. L.
The dog kennelled in a hollow tree, and the cock roosted upon the boughs. L'Estrange.

To KE'NNEL.* v. a. To keep in a kennel.

Pompey, a tall hound, kennelled in a convent in France; and knows a rich soil. Tatler, No. 62.

From their slumbers shook, the kennell'd hounds Mix in the music of the day again. Thomson, Autumn.

KE'NNING.* n. s. [from To ken.] View.

Apparently a sea term.

The next day about evening we saw, within a kenning, thick clouds, which did put us in some hope of land. Bacon.

His ships were past a kenning from the shore. Trag. of Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

To KEP.* v. a. [cepan, Saxon, captare, Lat.] To catch. A northern word.

Grose, Craven Dial. and Brockett. "To kep a ball, is to catch it; to keep it from falling." Ray.

KEPT. pret. and part. pass. of keep.

KERB.* n. s. [ceoppan, Sax. to cut; kerbe, Germ. notch, indent.] Any edging of strong solid stuff, which serves as a guard to something else. Thus the edging of the stone footways in London streets is called the kerb-stone.

[Ebm] scarce has any superior for kerbs of coppers. Evelyn, b. i. ch. 4. § 15.

KE'RCHEIF.† n. s. [covercheif; Chaucer; couvre, to cover, and chef, the head; and hence a handkerchief to wipe the face or hands. Dr. Johnson.—It should seem, from the following citation, that Chaucer's word was not what Dr. Johnson states it to be, but covercephe.

"Among Latin and Greek words, by common usage taken for English, as sevre, &c. he mentions cephe, whereof cometh Chaucer's covercephe in the Romance of the Rose, written and pronounced commonly kerchief in the South, and courchief in the North." Caius's Counseille against the Sweate, 1552. fol. 10.]

1. A head dress of a woman.

I see how time eye would emulate the diamond; thou hast the right arched bent of the brow, that becomes the tire vaultant.

—A plain kerchief, Sir John; my brows become nothing else. Shaks. M. Wives of Windsor.

O! what a time have you chose out, brave Caius,

To wear a kerchief. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

The proudest kerchief of the court shall rest

Well satisfy'd of what they love the best. Dryden.

2. Any loose cloth used in dress.

Every man had a large kerchief folded about the neck. Hayward.

KE'RCHEIFED.† adj. [from kerchief.]

KE'RCHEIF.† adj. Dressed; hooded.

Sickness with his kerchief'd head upwound.

G. Fletcher, Christ's Vict. P. 1. st. 12.

Thus, Night, oft seeme in thy pale career,

Till civil-suited Morn appear,

Not trick'd and frounc'd as she was wont

With the Attick boy to hunt,

But kercheif in a comely cloud,

While rocking winds are piping loud. Milton, Il Pens.

KERF. n. s. [ceoppan, Saxon, to cut.] The sawn-away slit between two pieces of stuff is called a kerf. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

KE'RMES.† n. s. [kermes, old Fr. But see

ALKERMES.]

Kermes is a roundish body, of the bigness of a pea, and of a brownish red colour. It contains a multitude of little distinct granules, soft, and when crushed yield a scarlet juice. It till lately was understood to be a vegetable excrescence; but we now know it to be the extended body of an animal parent, filled with a numerous offspring, which are the little red granules. Hill.

KERN.† n. s. [Neither Sir James Ware in his remarks on Ireland, nor Dr. Johnson in his notice of this word, offer any etymology. Stanihurst, in his old description of Ireland, has given the following:

"Kerne (kigheyren) signifieth a shower of hell; because they are taken for no better than rake-hells, or the devil's black garde!" ch. 8. fol. 28. The Irish foot-soldier will not consider himself very highly obliged to master Stanihurst.

Let him console himself, however, first, with honest Fuller's admirable remark on the Irish soldiery, in his account of the Holy War, made not long after that of Stanihurst: "All the consort of Christendome in this war could have made no music, if the Irish harp had been wanting." Hist. of the Holy War,

1639. p. 269. Let him next apply this observation to the warfare of our own times, and then laugh at the fiery etymology ascribed to the name of his predecessors. Kelham, it may be added, notices the Norman Fr. kernes as meaning idle persons, vagabonds. Dr. Jamieson states the opinion of others, that kerns were formerly called cateranes; and that the true name is keathern, which signifies a company of keathernach or soldiers.] An Irish foot-soldier: an Irish boor.

Out of the fry of these rake-hell horseboys, growing up in knavery and villainy, are their kerns supplied. Spenser on Ireland.

Justice had with valour arm'd, Compell'd these skipping kernes to trust their heels. Shakspeare.

If in good plight these Northern kerns arrive, Then does fortune promise fair. Philips, Briton.

KERN.† n. s. [querne, Teut. "hand-mo-len." Kilian.]

1. A hand-mill consisting of two pieces of stone by which corn is ground. It is written likewise quern. It is still used in some parts of Scotland.

2. A churn. See CHURN. "Kern-milk,"

Yorkshire; butter-milk.

3. KERN Baby. An image dressed up with corn, carried before the reapers to their harvest home; perhaps not yet discontinued in the northern parts of England.

A corruption of corn-baby. See To KERN.

To KERN. v. n. [probably from kernel, or,

by change of a vowel, corrupted from corn.]

1. To harden as ripened corn.

When the price of corn falleth, men break no more ground than will supply their own turn, wherethrough it falleth out that an ill kerned or saved harvest soon emptieth their store.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

2. To take the form of grains; to granulate.

The principal knack is in making the juice,

when sufficiently boiled, to kern or granulate. Grew.

KE'RNEL. n. s. [cýpnell, a gland, Saxon; kerne, Teut. cerneus, Fr.]

1. The edible substance contained in a shell.

As brown in hue

As hazle nuts, and sweeter than the kernels. Shakspeare.

There can be no kernel in this light nut; the soul of this man is his clothes. Shakspeare, All's well.

The kernel of the nut serves them for bread and meat, and the shells for cups. More.

2. Any thing included in a husk or integument.

The kernel of a grape, the fig's small grain,

Can clothe a mountain, and o'ershade a plain. Denham.

Oats are ripe when the straw turns yellow and the kernel hard. Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. The seeds of pulpy fruits.

I think he will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.—And sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands. Shakspeare, Tempest.

The apple inclosed in wax was as fresh as at the first putting in, and the kernels continued white. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. The central part of any thing upon which the ambient strata are concreted.

A solid body in the bladder makes the kernel of a stone. Arbutnot.

5. Knobby concretions in children's flesh.

To KE'RNEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To ripen to kernels.

In Staffordshire, garden-rouncivals sown in the fields kernel well, and yield a good increase.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

KE'RNELLY.† adj. [from kernel.] Full of kernels; having the quality or resemblance of kernels. Sherwood.

KE'RNELWORT. n. s. [scrofularia.] An herb. Ainsworth.

To KE'RSÉN, or KI'RSÉN.* v. a. [kersten, Teut.] To christen. Common in the north of England. And so Kersmas for Christmas. Westmoreland and Craven Dialects, and Brockett's N. C. words.

KE'RSÉY.† n. s. [karsaye, Dutch; carisée, Fr. The last syllable, Dr. Jamieson observes, seems borrowed from the coarse cloth called say.] The origin of the first is quite uncertain. Coarse stuff.

Taffata phrases, silken terms precise,
I do forswear them; and I here protest,
Henceforth my wooling mind shall be exprest
In russet years, and honest kersey noes. Shakespeare.
His lackey with a linen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot-hose on the other.

Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

The same wool one man felt into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, and another into kersey or serge. Hale.

Thy kersey doublet spreading wide,
Drew Cie'l'y's eye aside. Gay.

To KERVE.* v. a. [ceorpan, Saxon.] To cut; to carve.

In that figure Plinius saw him kerved.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 57. b.

That else was like to sterve

Through cruell knife, that her deare heart did kerve.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. i. 4.

KE'RVÉR.* n. s. [from kerve. Norm. Fr. kerver. Kelham.] A carver.
Ne portreieur, ne kerver of images.

Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

KE'SAR.* n. s. [kaisar, Goth. Cæsar, Lat.] An emperor. Obsolete.

Whilst kings and kesars at her feet did them prostrate. Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 29.

KE'SLOP.* n. s. [cepeh, cýeh, Sax. coagalum; kaselab, Germ. rennet. Kase is cheese, and laben is to help, strengthen, or quicken, Brockett's N. C. Words.] The stomach of a calf prepared for rennet; the substance used in curdling milk. A northern word. Grose, Cumberland Dialect, and Brockett.

KEST.† The preter tense of cast. It is still used in Scotland.

The rose mark, which she remembered well
That little infant had, which forth she kest.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. xii. 15.

Only that noise heav'n's rolling circles kest.

Fairfax.

KE'STREL. n. s. A little kind of bastard hawk.

Kites and kestrels have a resemblance with hawks. Bacon.

KE'STREL.* adj. Like a kestrel; base. Obsolete.

No thought of honour ever did essay
His baser breast, but in his kestrell kynd
A pleasant veine of glory he did fynd.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. iii. 4.

KET.* n. s. [kœtt, Su. Goth. kaet, Icel. caro; kael, Teut. sordes.] Carrion; any sort of filth. Grose defines it horse-flesh. It is a northern word in the former general sense. Craven Dialect, and Brockett.

KETCH.† n. s. [from caicchio, Italian, a barrel.] A heavy ship; as a bomb ketch. Dr. Johnson gives as an example the passage from Shakespeare, which belongs to keech. A ketch is a vessel with two masts, usually from 100 to 250 tons burthen. Formerly perhaps with only one mast, as it should seem in the following example.

We stood in for the channel; about noon we saw a sail having but one mast; judged it to be a ketch; but, drawing nearer, found it was a ship in distress, having lost her main and mizen masts.
Randolph's Islands in the Archipel. (1687), p. 108.

KE'TTLE.† n. s. [cecl, Saxon; ketel, Dutch; katila, Gothick.] A vessel in which liquor is boiled. In the kitchen the name of pot is given to the boiler that grows narrower towards the top, and of kettle to that which grows wider. In authors they are confounded.

The fire thus form'd, she sets the kettle on;
Like burnish'd gold the little seether shone.

Dryden.

KE'TTLEDROM. n. s. [kettle and drum.] A drum of which the head is spread over a body of brass, or copper.

As he drains his draughts of Rhenish down,
The kettledrum and trumpet thus Bray out
The triumph of his pledge. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

KE'TTLEPINS.* Ninepins; skittles. See KAYLE.

Billiards, kettle-pins, noddie boards, tables, trunks, shovel boards, fox and geese, or the like.
Gayton on D. Quix. p. 340.

KE'TTY.* adj. [from ket.] Filthy; dirty; worthless: as, a ketty cur, a ketty fellow. Grose, Craven Dial. and Brockett.

KEK.* n. s. [See KECKSY.] 1. Hemlock.

2. A dry stalk. The stem of the teasel. North. As dry as a kek. [from the Icel. queck, any thing that kindles; fuel.] I bring with me a book as dry as a kek, void of invention, barren of good phrase.

Shelton, Pref. to Transl. of Don Quixote.
Those sharp and sorry shrubs, those dry and sapless kezes.

Bp. Gauden's Hierasp. (1653.) p. 230.

KEY.† n. s. [cæx, Sax. from cæxxian, to shut up. Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. An instrument formed with cavities correspondent to the wards of a lock, by which the bolt of a lock is pushed forward or backward.

If a man were porter of hellgate, he should have old turning the key. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne'er turns the key to th' poor. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
The glorious standard last to heav'n they spread,
With Peter's keys ennobled and his crown.

Fairfax.

Yet some there be, that by due steps aspire
To lay their just hands on that golden key,
That opens the palace of eternity. Milton, Comus.
Conscience is its own counsellor, the sole master of its own secrets; and it is the privilege of our nature, that every man should keep the key of his own breast. South.

He came, and knocking thrice, without delay,
The longing lady heard, and turn'd the key. Dryden.

2. An instrument by which something is screwed or turned.

Hide the key of the jack: Swift.

3. An explanation of any thing difficult.

An emblem without a key to't, is no more than a tale of a tub. L'Estrange.

These notions, in the writings of the ancients darkly delivered, receive a clearer light when compared with this theory, which represents every thing plainly, and is a key to their thoughts.

Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

Those who are accustomed to reason have got the true key of books. Locke.

4. The parts of a musical instrument which are struck with the fingers.

Pamela loves to handle the spinnet, and touch the keys. Richardson, Pamela.

5. [In musick.] Is a certain tone whereto every composition, whether long or short, ought to be fitted; and this key is said to be either flat or sharp, not in respect of its own nature, but with relation to the flat or sharp third, which is joined with it. Harris.

Hippolita, I woo'd thee with my sword,
And won thy love, doing thee injuries;
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pomp, with triumph, and with revelling. Shakespeare.

But speak you with a sad brow? Or do you play the flouting Jack? Come, in what key shall a man take you to go in the song? Shakespeare, Much Ado.

Not know my voice! Oh, time's extremity!
Hast thou so crack'd and splitt'd my poor tongue
In sev'n short years, that here my only son
Knows not my feeble key of untun'd cares? Shakespeare.

6. [Kaye, Dutch; quai, French.] A bank raised perpendicular for the ease of lading and unlading ships.

A key of fire ran along the shore,
And lightn'd all the river with a blaze. Dryden.

7. [In botany.] The husk containing the seed of an ash.

Ash, elm, tilia, poplar, hornbeam, &c. are distinguished by their keys, tongues, &c. small, flat, and husky skins including the seeds. Evelyn.

KEY'COLD.† adj. [key and cold.]

1. Lifeless; formerly a common expression; now perhaps obsolete. A key, on account of the coldness of the metal of which it is made, was formerly and even yet is employed to stop a bleeding of the nose.

Such objections as protestants now, &c. key-colds christians do make.

Stapleton, Fort. of the Faith, (1565.) fol. 123. b.
Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster!

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

I see zealous professors transformed to key-cold worldlings.

Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 323.

Her apostolick virtue is departed from her, and hath left her key-cold.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

2. Cold.
'Twixt sleep and wake,
I do them take,
And on the key-cold floor them throw.
Old Song of Rob. Goodfellow, Percy's Reliques.

KEYCO'LDNESS.* n. s. [from the adjective.] Want of animation or activity.

The greatest part of your professed virtue we find to consist in a key-coldness, and well-nigh mute silence, when the hottest and most pungent arguments approach your skin.

Unlawfulness, &c. of Limited Episc. (1641), p. 5.

KEY'YAGE. n. s. [from key.] Money paid for lying at the key, or quay. Ainsworth.

KEY'WHOLE. n. s. [key and hole.] The perforation in the door or lock through which the key is put.

Make doors fast upon a woman's wit, and it will out at the casement; shut that, and 'twill out at the keyhole.

I looked in at the keyhole, and saw a well-made man.

I keep her in one room; I lock it; The key, look here, is in this pocket; The keyhole is that left? Most certain.

KEYSTONE. n. s. [key and stone.] The middle stone of an arch.

If you will add a keystone and chaprels to the arch, let the breadth of the upper part of the keystone be the height of the arch.

KHANE. n. s. [A Turkish word.] A sort of house or place of general reception.

Here is a spacious vaulted bazar, and a noble khane. — A khane is commonly a square court, colonaded in the manner of Covent Garden; built in charity for the reception of strangers, as there are no inns in these countries.

Drummond, Trav. p. 219.

KIBE. n. s. [from kerb, a cut, German, Skinner; from kibwe, Welsh, Minshew.] An ulcerated chilblain; a chap in the heel caused by the cold.

If 'twere a kibe, 'twould put me to my slipper.

The toe of the peasant comes so near the heel of our courtier, that it galls his kibe.

One boasted of the cure, calling them a few kibes.

KI'BED. adj. [from kibe.] Troubled with kibes; as, kibed heels.

KI'BY.* adj. [from kibe.] Having kibes; sore with kibes.

He halteth often that hath a kyby heele.

Skelton, Poems, p. 25.

To KICK.† v. a. [kauchen, Germ.; calco, Lat. Dr. Johnson. — Kuika, Iceland. Serenius. Chaucer writes our word kike.] To strike with the foot.

He must endure and digest all affronts, adore the foot that kicks him, and kiss the hand that strikes him.

It anger'd Turenne once upon a day, To see a footman kick'd that took his pay.

Another, whose son had employments at court, valued not, now and then, a kicking or a caning.

To KICK. v. n. To beat the foot in anger or contempt.

Wherefore kick ye at my sacrifice, which I have commanded?

Jeshurun waxed fat and kicked. Deut. xxxii. 15. The doctrines of the Holy Scriptures are terrible enemies to wicked men, and this is that which makes them kick against religion, and spurn at the doctrines of that holy book.

KICK. n. s. [from the verb.] A blow with the foot.

What are you dumb? Quick, with your answer, quick,

Before my foot salutes you with a kick.

KICKER.† n. s. [from kick.]

1. One who strikes with his foot.

2. A winning horse.

KICKSHAW.† n. s. [This word is supposed, I think with truth, to be only a corruption of quelque chose, some thing; yet Milton seems to have understood it otherwise; for he writes it kickshoe, as if he thought it used in contempt of] dancing. Dr. Johnson. — Milton's word, in the passage cited from the original edition of his Treatise on Education, is kichshoes; probably intended for kickshoe, agreeably to the pronunciation of the French chose, as it had been used by Featley, a little before Milton: "I make bold to set on the board kickshoes, and variety of strange fruits." Dippers Dipt, 1645. p. 199.

1. Something uncommon; fantastical; something ridiculous.

Nor shall we then need the monsieurs of Paris to take our youth into their slight and prodigal custodies, and send them over back again transformed into mimicks, apes, and kichshoes. Milton.

2. A dish so changed by the cookery that it can scarcely be known.

Some pigeons, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little tiny kickshaws.

In wit, as well as war, they give us vigour; Cressy was lost by kickshaws and soup-meagre.

KICKSY-WICKSEY. n. s. [from kick and wince.] A made word in ridicule and disdain of a wife.

He wears his honour in a box, unseen, That hugs his kicksy-wicksey here at home, Spending his manly marrow in her arms.

KID. n. s. [kid, Danish.]

1. The young of a goat.

Leaping like wanton kids in pleasant spring.

There was a herd of goats with their young ones, upon which sight Sir Richard Graham tells, he would snap one of the kids, and carry him close to their lodging.

Sporting the lion ramp'd, and in his paw Dandled the kid.

So kids and whelps their sires and dams express; And so the great I measur'd by the less.

2. [From cidweln, Welsh, a faggot.] A bundle of heath or furze.

To KID.† v. n. [from the noun.] To bring forth kids.

To KID. v. a. [cyðan, Saxon; to declare, to make known; kit, Teut. known.] To discover; to shew; to make known.

The fame, which maie ought be hid, Throughout the londe is soone kid.

The sothfastnesse, that now is hid, Without coverture shall be kid.

But, ah! unwise and witlesse Colin Cloute, That kydst the hidden kiddes of many a weede,

Yet kydst not ene to cure thy sore heart-roote.

KIDDED.* adj. [from the noun.] Fallen as a young kid.

KIDDER.† n. s.

1. An engrosser of corn to enhance its price.

2. A badger, or carrier of goods on horseback. Ray. A travelling vender of small wares. Moore's Suffolk Words.

KIDDLE.* n. s. [Norman Fr. kideux, kiddles, Kelham; kidellus, low Latin. The word is in Magna Charta.] A kind of wear in a river, to catch fish. Corruptly called, in some places, kittle, or kettle.

Fishes love not old kiddles, as they do the new.

Old Poem in Aschmole's Theat. Chem. (1652,) p. 71.

KIDDOW.* n. s. The most common English name of the Loewia, a web-footed bird, common on our shores, and called in different places the guillemot or guillem, and the sea-hen, and skout. Chambers.

KIDDLING.* n. s. [from kid.] A young kid. Mountains where the wanton kidding dallies.

Like kiddings blithe and merry.

To KIDNAP.† v. a. [from kind, Dutch, a child, and nap.] To steal children; to steal human beings.

This poor child was kidnapped by the Jews.

Drummond, Trav. (Lett. dat. 1744,) p. 18.

The offence of kidnapping (being the stealing away) man, woman, or child, from their own country, and selling them into another, was capital by the Jewish law.

KIDNAPPER. n. s. [from kidnap.] One who steals human beings; a manstealer.

The man compounded with the merchant, upon condition that he might have his child again; for he had smelt it out, that the merchant himself was the kidnapper.

These people lye in wait for our children, and may be considered as a kind of kidnappers within the law.

KIDNEY.† n. s. [Etymology unknown. Dr. Johnson. — There is great probability in Serenius's derivation of our word from the Icel. quidr. Su. Goth. qued, the belly; and nigh. Our word might at first be quidney.]

1. These are two in number, one on each side: they have the same figure as kidneybeans: their length is four or five fingers, their breadth three, and their thickness two: the right is under the liver, and the left under the spleen. The use of the kidneys is to separate the urine from the blood, which, by the motion of the heart and arteries, is thrust into the emulgent branches, which carry it to the little glands, by which the serosity being separated, is received by the orifice of the little tubes, which go from the glands to the pelvis, and from thence it runs by the ureters into the bladder.

A youth laboured under a complication of diseases, from his mesentery and kidneys.

2. Sort; kind: in ludicrous language.

Think of that, a man of my kidney; think of that, that am as subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw.

There are millions in the world of this man's kidney, that take up the same resolution without noise.

KIDNEYBEAN. n. s. [phaseolus. So named from its shape.] A leguminous plant.

Kidneybeans are a sort of cod ware, that are very pleasant wholesome food.

KIDNEYVETCH. [anthyllis.] n. s. Plants.

KIDNEYWORT. [cotyledon.] n. s. Plants.

KIE.* Kine. Our northern word. See also KEE, and KY.

KILDERKIN.† n. s. [Dutch, kindeken, a baby; "vasculum, dolium; octava pars cadi; quod eandem habeat rationem ad integrum dolium, quam infantulus ad hominem perfectum." Junius. Skinner accordingly denominates it the great cask's baby, "filioles vasis majoris."

Bishop Parker, who was Dryden's contemporary, writes our word, nearer to the Dutch, kinderkin.] A great barrel of purpose. Bacon.

A tun of man in thy large bulk is writ; But sure thou'rt but a kilderkin of wit. Dryden.
Many vessels of authority, some kinderkins, some hogsheds, some tuns.

Bp. Parker, Repr. of Rehears. Transpr. p. 11.
To KILL. v. a. [anciently quell; cpellan, Saxon: kelen, Dutch.]

1. To deprive of life; to put to death, as an agent.

Dar'st thou resolve to kill a friend of mine?
— Please you, I'd rather kill two enemies.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.
Ye have brought us forth into this wilderness, to kill this whole assembly with hunger. Ezod. xvi. 3.

There was killing of young and old, making away of men, women, and children. 2 Macc. v. 18.

2. To destroy animals for food.

We're mere usurpers, tyrants, and what's worse, To fright the animals, and to kill them up
In their assign'd and native dwelling place. Shaks.

Shall I take my bread, and my flesh that I have killed for my shearers? 1 Sam. xxv. 11.

3. To deprive of life, as a cause or instrument.

The medicines, if they were used inwards, would kill those that use them; and therefore they work potently, though outwards. Bacon.

4. To deprive of vegetative or other motion, or active qualities.

Try with oil, or balm of drink, so they be such things as kill not the bough. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Catharticks of mercurials mix with all animal acids, as appears by killing it with spittle.

Floyer on the Humours.
KILLER. n. s. [from kill.] One that deprives of life.

What sorrow, what amazement, what shame was in Amphialus, when he saw his dear foster-father find him the killer of his only son. Sidney.

Wilt thou for the old lion hunt, or fill His hungry whelps? and for the killer kill,
When couch'd in dreadful dens? Sandys.

So rude a time,
When love was held so capital a crime,
That a crown'd head could no compassion find,
But died, because the killer had been kind. Waller.

KILLLOW. n. s. [This seems a corruption of coal and low, a flame, as soot is thereby produced.]

An earth of a blackish or deep blue colour, and doubtless had its name from kollow, by which name, in the north, the smut or grime on the backs of chimneys is called. Woodward.

KILN. n. s. [cŷln, Saxon.] A stove; a fabrick formed for admitting heat, in order to dry or burn things contained in it.

I'll creep up into the chimney. — There they always use to discharge their birding-pieces: creep into the kin hole. Shaks. M. Wives of Windsor.

After the putting forth in sprouts, and the drying upon the kin, there will be gained a bushel in eight of malt. Bacon.

Physicians chuse lime which is newly drawn out of the kin, and not slacked. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

To KILNDRY. v. a. [kiln and dry.] To dry by means of a kin.

The best way is to kilndry them.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

KILT.† Used by Spenser for killed; not in the phrase of the Irish, for merely hurt, or wounded, but deprived of life. It is also thus used in the Westmoreland and Lancashire dialects.

But what art thou, that tell'st of nephews kilt?

Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 26.

A horse, please your honour, that this man here sold me at the fair of Gurtishannon, last Shrove fair — lay down three times with myself, and kilt me!

Castle Rackrent, p. 206.

This word frequently occurs in the preceding pages, where it means not killed, but much hurt. In Ireland, not only cowards, but the brave, "die many times before their death!" Ibid. Gloss.

To KILT.* v. a. [kilte-op, Dan. Brockett.] To tuck up; to tuss up the clothes: as, she kilts her gown. Craven Dialect, and Brockett's N. C. Words.

KIMBO.† adj. [a schembo, Italian. Dr. Johnson. — See KAM. Serenius considers the Icel. kime, kimpell, ansa, the handle of a pot or jug, as likely to have suggested our word; and, in our old lexicography, the word is kembol, which Sherwood renders, in the following phrase, conformably to this etymon, "with arms set on kemboll, les bras courbez en anse." Others write our word kembo.] Crooked; bent; arched.

The kimbo handles seem with bears-foot carv'd, And never yet to table have been serv'd.

Dryden, Virg.

He observed them edging towards one another to whisper; so that John was forced to sit with his arms a kimbo, to keep them asunder.

Arbuthnot, John Bull.

KIMNEL.* See KEMELIN.

KIN.† n. s. [cŷnn, Sax. kyn, Icel. kun, Gothick. Wicliffe writes our word kyn.]

1. Relation either of consanguinity or affinity.

You must use them with fit respects, according to the bonds of nature; but you are of kin, and so a friend to their persons, not to their errors.

Bacon, Adv. Villiers.

The unhappy Palamon,
Whom Theseus holds in bonds, and will not free,
Without a crime, except his kin to me. Dryden.

2. Relatives; those who are of the same race.

Tumultuous wars
Shall kin with kin, and kind with kind, confound.

Shakespeare.

The father, mother, and the kin beside,
Were overborne by fury of the tide. Dryden.

3. A relation; one related.

Then is the soul from God; so pagans say,
Which saw by nature's light her heavenly kind,
Naming her kin to God, and God's bright ray,
A citizen of heav'n, to earth confin'd. Davies.

4. The same general class, though perhaps not the same species; thing related.

The burst,
And the ear-deafening voice of the oracle,
Kin to Jove's thunder, so surpris'd my sense,
That I was nothing. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

The odour of the fixed nitre is very languid; but that which it discovers, being dissolved in a little hot water, is altogether differing from the stink of the other, being of kin to that of other alcalizate salts. Boyle.

5. A diminutive termination from kind, a child, Dutch: as, manikin, minikin, thomkin, wilkin.

KIN.* adj. Of the same nature; congenial; kindred.

Some kin afraid,
Envie, or pride, or passion, or offence.

Chaucer, Man of Law's Tale.

KIND. adj. [from cŷne, relation, Saxon.]

1. Benevolent; filled with general goodwill.

By the kind gods, 'tis most ignobly done
To pluck me by the beard. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Some of the ancients, like kind-hearted men, have talked much of annual refrigeriums, or intervals of punishment to the damned, as particularly on the great festivals of the resurrection and ascension. South.

2. Favourable; beneficent.

He is kind to the unthankful and evil.

St. Luke, vi. 35.

KIND-HEARTED.* adj. [kind and heart.] Having great benevolence; a frequent colloquial expression; as, a kind-hearted man.

The sea at last from Colchian mountains seen,
Kind-hearted transport round their captain threw
The soldiers' fond embrace; o'erflow'd their eyes
With tender floods, and loos'd the general voice
To cries resounding loud — The sea, the sea!
Thomson, Liberty, P. ii.

KIND.† n. s. [kund, Gothick; from kun. See KIN.]

1. Race; general class. Kind in Teutonick English answers to genus, and sort to species; though this distinction, in popular language, is not always observed.

Thus far we have endeavoured in part to open of what nature and force laws are, according to their kinds. Hooker.

As when the total kind
Of birds, in orderly array on wing,
Came summon'd over Eden, to receive Their names of thee. Milton, P. L.

That both are animalia,
I grant; but not rationalia;
For though they do agree in kind,
Specific difference we find. Hudibras.

God and nature do not principally concern themselves in the preservation of particulars, but kinds and companies. South, Serm.

He with his wife were only left behind
Of perish'd man; they two were human kind. Dryden.

Some acts of virtue are common to Heathens and Christians; but I suppose them to be performed by Christians, after a more sublime manner than among the Heathens; and even when they do not differ in kind from moral virtues, yet differ in the degrees of perfection. Atterbury.

He, with a hundred arts refin'd,
Shall stretch thy conquests over half the kind. Pope.

2. Particular nature.

No human laws are exempt from faults, since those that have been looked upon as most perfect in their kind, have been found to have so many.

Baker.

3. Natural state.

He did give the goods of all the prisoners unto those that had taken them, either to take them in kind, or compound for them. Bacon, Hen. VII.
The tax upon tillage was often levied in kind upon corn, and called decumæ, or tithes.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

4. Nature; natural determination.

A monstrous cruelty 'gainst course of kind. Spenser, F. Q.

The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wand,
And, in the doing of the deed of kind,
He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Some of you, on pure instinct of nature,
Are led by kind t' admire your fellow creature. Dryden.

5. Manner; way.

Send me your prisoners with the speediest means,
Or you shall hear in such a kind from me
As will displease you. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

This will encourage industrious improvements, because many will rather venture in that kind than take five in the hundred. Bacon, Ess.
 6. Sort. It has a slight and unimportant sense.

Diogenes was asked, in a kind of scorn, What was the matter that philosophers haunted rich men, and not rich men philosophers? He answered, Because the one knew what they wanted, the other did not. Bacon.

KI'NDED.* part. adj. [cennan, Sax. to beget; from kind.] Begotten.

Though she still have worn
 Her days in war, yet (weet thou) was not borne
 Of bears and tygres, nor so salvage-mynded
 As that, albe all love of men she scorned,
 She yet forgets that she of men was kynded.
Spenser, F. Q.

To KI'NDLE.† v. a. [Probably from the Welsh cynne, or cynneu, to light, to set on fire; Serenius notices also the Goth. kinda, accendere, kyndell, candelā. But our old word was without the d, as in Gower's Conf. Am. B. 7. "Fire kenled." Then it became kendle, as in Barret's Alveary; and lastly kindle.]

1. To set on fire; to light; to make to burn.

He will take thereof, and warm himself; yea, he kindleth it and baketh bread. Is. xlv. 15.
 I was not forgetful of those sparks, which some men's distempers formerly studied to kindle in parliaments. King Charles.

If the fire burns vigorously, it is no matter by what means it was at first kindled: there is the same force and the same refreshing virtue in it, kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled from the sun. South.

2. To inflame the passions; to exasperate; to animate; to heat; to fire the mind.

I've been to you a true and humble wife;
 At all times to your will conformable:
 Ever in fear to kindle your dislike.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
 He hath kindled his wrath against me, and counteth me as one of his enemies. Job, xix. 11.

Thus one by one kindling each other's fire,
 Till all inflam'd, they all in one agree. Daniel.

Each was a cause alone, and all combin'd
 To kindle vengeance in her haughty mind. Dryden.

3. [from cennan, Saxon.] To bring forth. It is used of some particular animals.

Are you native of this place?
 — As the coney that you see dwells where she is kindled. Shakespeare.

To KI'NDLE. v. n. To catch fire.

When thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burnt, neither shall the flame kindle upon thee. Is. xliii. 2.

KI'NDLER.† n. s. [from kindle.] One that lights; one who inflames.

By what equity is a publick rebellion commended in the kindlers of it, that it may be punished in the furtherers?

Bewailing of the Peace of Germany, (1635), p. 47.
 Now is the time that rakes their revels keep,
Kindlers of riot, enemies of sleep. Gay.

KI'NDLESS.* adj. [kind and less.] Un-natural.

Ramorous, treacherous, lecherous, kindless villain! Shakespeare, Hamlet.

KI'NDLINESS.* n. s. [from kindly.]

1. Favour; affection; good will.

In kinde a father, but not kindliness.
Sackville's Gorboduc, (1561.)

2. Natural disposition; natural course.

That mute kindliness among the herds and flocks.
Milton, Tetrachordon.

Fruits and corn are much advanced by temper of the air and kindliness of seasons.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Engl. p. 427.
 KI'NDLY.† adj. [from kind; probably from kind the substantive.]

1. Homogeneous; congenial; kindred; of the same nature.

This competency I beseech God I may be able to digest into kindly juice, that I may grow thereby. Hammond.

These soft fires
 Not only enlighten, but with kindly heat,
 Of various influence, foment and warm,
 Temper or nourish. Milton, P. L.

2. Natural; fit; proper.

The earth shall sooner leave her kindly skill.
Spenser, F. Q.

The kindly fruits of the earth. Litany.

3. The foregoing senses seem to have been originally implied by this word; but following writers, inattentive to its etymology, confounded it with kind.

4. Bland; mild; softening.

Through all the living regions dost thou move,
 And scatter'st where thou goest, the kindly seeds of love. Dryden.

Ye heavens, from high the dewy nectar pour,
 And in soft silence shed the kindly show'r! Pope.

KI'NDLY.† adv. [from kind.]

1. Benevolently; favourably; with good will.

Sir Thurio borrows his wit from your ladyship's looks, and spends what he borrows kindly in your company. Shakespeare.

I sometimes lay here in Corioli,
 At a poor man's house: he us'd me kindly. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Be kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love, in honour preferring one another. Rom. xii. 10.

His griefs some pity, others blame;
 The fatal cause all kindly seek. Prior.

Who, with least designing ends,
Kindlier entertain their friends;
 With good words, and countenance sprightly,
 Strive to treat them all politely. Swift.

2. Naturally; fitly. [from kind, the substantive.]

Like as men sow, such corne needs must they reap;
 And nature planted so in each degree,
 That crabs like crabs will kindly crawl and creepe. Mir. for Mag. p. 464.

This do, and do it kindly, gentle sirs;
 It will be pastime passing excellent.

Shakespeare, Tam. of Shrew.
 Examine how kindly the Hebrew manners of speech mix and incorporate with the English language. Addison, Spect. No. 405.

KI'NDNESS.† n. s. [from kind.]

1. Benevolence; beneficence; good will; favour, love.

If there be kindness, meekness, or comfort in her tongue, then is not her husband like other men. Ecclus. xxxvi. 23.

Old Lelius professes he had an extraordinary kindness for several young people. Collier of Friendship.

Ever blest be Cytherea's shrine,
 Since thy dear breast has felt an equal wound,
 Since in thy kindness my desires are crown'd. Prior.

Love and inclination can be produced only by an experience or opinion of kindness to us. Rogers, Serm.

2. Benefit conferred.

KI'NDRED.† n. s. [from kin; cýnpen, Saxon. Accordingly our old word was kinred. So Chaucer writes it; so our old lexicography gives it; and it continued to be used till late in the 17th century. "The boy is brought in by his father and kinred, in his new vest and turban." Smith, Manners of the Turks, p. 40.]

1. Relation by birth or marriage; cognation; consanguinity; affinity.

Like her, of equal kindred to the throne,
 You keep her conquests, and extend your own. Dryden.

2. Relation; suit.

An old mothy saddle, and the stirrups of no kindred. Shakespeare.

3. Relatives.

I think there is no man secure
 But the queen's kindred. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
 Nor needs thy juster title the foul guilt
 Of eastern kings, who, to secure their reign,
 Must have their brothers, sons, and kindred slain. Denham.

KI'NDRED. adj. Congeneal; related; cognate.

From Tuscan Coritum he claim'd his birth;
 But after, when exempt from mortal earth,
 From thence ascended to his kindred skies
 A god. Dryden.

KINE.† n. s. plur. from cow, that is, cowen.

To milk the kine,
 E'er the milk-maid fine
 Hath open'd her eye. B. Jonson.

A field I went amid the morning dew,
 To milk my kine. Gay.

KING. n. s. [A contraction of the Teutonic word cuning, or cynyn, the name of sovereign dignity. In the primitive tongue it signifies stout or valiant, the kings of most nations being, in the beginning, chosen by the people on account of their valour and strength. Verstegan.]

1. Monarch; supreme governour.

The great King of kings,
 Hath in the table of his law commanded,
 That thou shalt do no murder. Shaks. Rich. III.

A substitute shines brightly as a king,
 Until a king be by; and then his state
 Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
 Into the main of waters. Shakespeare, Merch. Ven.

True hope is swift, and flies with swallow's wings;
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings. Shakespeare.

The king becoming graces,
 As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
 Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
 Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
 I have no reliish of them. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Thus states were form'd; the name of king unknown,

Till common interest plac'd the sway in one;
 'Twas virtue only, or in arts or arms,
 Diffusing blessings, or averting harms,
 The same which in a sire the sons obey'd,
 A prince the father of a people made. Pope.

2. It is taken by Bacon in the feminine; as prince also is.

Ferdinand and Isabella, kings of Spain, recovered the great and rich kingdom of Granada from the Moors. Bacon.

3. A card with the picture of a king.

The king unseen
 Lurk'd in her hand, and mourn'd his captive queen. Pope.

4. KING at Arms, a principal officer at arms, that has the pre-eminence of the society; of whom there are three in number, viz. Garter, Norroy, and Clarendieu. Philips.

A letter under his own hand was lately shewed me by sir William Dugdale, king at arms. Walton.
TO KING. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with a king. A word rather ludicrous.

England is so idly king'd,
 Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
 That fear attends her not. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

2. To make royal; to raise to royalty.

Sometimes am I a king;
 Then treason makes me wish myself a beggar,
 And so I am: then crushing penury
 Persuades me, I was better when a king;
 Then am I king'd again. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

KINGAPPLE. n. s. A kind of apple.
 The kingapple is preferred before the jenetting.
Mortimer.

KINGCRAFT. n. s. [king and craft.] The art of governing. A word commonly used by king James.

 and upon his head a garland of bents, kingcups, and maidenhair. Peacham.

Fair is the kingcup that in meadow blows,
 Fair is the daisy that beside her grows. Gay.

KINGDOM. n. s. [king and dom.]

1. The dominion of a king; the territories subject to a monarch.

You're welcome,
 Most learned, reverend sir, into our kingdom.
Shakespeare.

Moses gave unto them the kingdom of Sihon,
 king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og, king of Bashan. Numb. xxxii. 33.

2. A different class or order of beings. A word chiefly used among naturalists.

The animal and vegetable kingdoms are so nearly joined, that if you take the lowest of one, and the highest of the other, there will scarce be perceived any difference. Locke.

3. A region; a tract.

The wat'ry kingdom is no bar
 To stop the foreign spirits; but they come,
 As o'er a brook, to see fair Portia. Shakespeare.

KINGDOMED.* adj. [from kingdom.] Proud of kingly power. Not in use.

Kingdom'd Achilles in commotion rages,
 And batters down himself.
Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

 Which is the charge of his kinghede.
Gower, Conf. Am. b. 7.

KINGLIKE.† } adj. [from king.]
KINGLY.

1. Royal; sovereign; monarchical.

There we'll sit,
 Ruling in large and ample empery,
 O'er France and all her almost kingly dukedom.
Shakespeare.

I, kinglike, sate, with armed troops inclos'd.
Sandys, Job. p. 42.

Yet this place
 Had been thy kingly seat, and here thy race,
 From all the ends of peopled earth, had come
 To reverence thee. Dryden, State of Innocence.

In Sparta, a kingly government, though the people were perfectly free, the administration was in the two kings and the ephori. Swift.

The cities of Greece, when they drove out their tyrannical kings, either chose others from a new family, or abolished the kingly government, and became free states. Swift.

2. Belonging to a king; suitable to a king.

Why liest thou with the vile
 In loathsome beds, and leav'st the kingly couch
 A watch-case to a common 'larum bell?
Shakespeare.

Then shalt thou give me with thy kingly hand,
 What husband in thy power I will command.
Shakespeare.

3. Noble; august; magnificent.

He was not born to live a subject life, each action of his bearing in it majesty, such a kingly entertainment, such a kingly magnificence, such a kingly heart for enterprises. Sidney.

I am far better born than is the king;
 More like a king, more kingly in my thoughts.
Shakespeare.

KINGLY. adv. With an air of royalty;
 with superiour dignity.

Adam bow'd low; he, kingly, from his state
 Inclined not. Milton, P. L.

His hat, which never vail'd to human pride,
 Walker with reverence took, and laid aside;
 Low bow'd the rest, he, kingly, did but nod.
Pope, Dunciad.

KINGSEVIL. n. s. [king and evil.] A scrofulous distemper, in which the glands are ulcerated, commonly believed to be cured by the touch of the king.

Sore eyes are frequently a species of the kingsevil, and take their beginning from vicious humours inflaming the tunica adnata. Wiseinan, Surgery.

KINGSHIP. n. s. [from king.] Royalty;
 monarchy.

They designed and proposed to me the new-modelling of sovereignty and kingship, without any reality of power, or without any necessity of subjection and obedience. King Charles.

We know how successful the late usurper was, while his army believed him real in his zeal against kingship; but when they found out the imposture, upon his aspiring to the same himself, he was presently deserted and opposed by them, and never able to crown his usurped greatness with the addition of that title which he passionately thirsted after. South.

KINGSPEAR. n. s. [asphodelus.] A plant.

KINGSTONE. n. s. [squatina.] A fish.
Ainsworth.

To KINK.* v. n. [kichen, kinchen, Teut. difficult spirare.] To labour for northern word. Ray, Grose, and Brockett.

KINK.* n. s. A fit of coughing, or a convulsive fit of laughter. Grose, and Brockett's N. C. Words. Hence KINK-COUGH, or CHINCOUGH; and KINKHAUST, which see.

KINKHAUST.* n. s. A violent cough;
 Lancashire; the chincough. See CHIN-
 COUGH, and HAUST.

KINGSFOLK. n. s. [kin and folk.] Relations;
 those who are of the same family.

Those lords, since their first grants of those lands,
 have bestowed them amongst their kingfolds.
Spenser on Ireland.

My kinsfolk have failed, and my familiar friends forgotten me. Job, xix. 14.

KINSMAN. n. s. [kin and man.] A man of the same race or family.

The jury he made to be chosen out of their nearest kinsmen, and their judges he made of their own fathers. Spenser on Ireland.

Both fair, and both of royal blood they seem'd,
 Whom kinsmen to the crown the heralds dem'd.
Dryden.

Let me stand excluded from my right,
 Robb'd of my kinsman's arms, who first appear'd
 in fight. Dryden, Fab.

There is a branch of the Medicis in Naples:
 the head of it has been owned as a kinsman by the great duke, and 'tis thought will succeed to his dominions. Addison on Italy.

KINSWOMAN. n. s. [kin and woman.] A female relation.

A young noble lady, near kinswoman to the fair
 Helen, queen of Corinth, was come thither. Sidney.

 and Henley upon Thames in kipper time, viz.
 between the invention of the Cross (3 May) and the Epiphany. Rot. Parl. 50 Edw. III. Cowel.

The salmon, after spawning, become very poor and thin; and are called kipper.
Pennant, Zool. iii. 242.

KIRN.* See KERN.

KIRK. n. s. [cýpce, Saxon; κκλησία, Gr.]
 An old word for a church, yet retained in Scotland.

Home they hasten the posts to dight,
 And all the kirk pillars ere day-light,
 With hawthorn buds and sweet eglantine.
Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Nor is it all the nation has these spots,
 There is a church as well as kirk of Scots.
Cleveland.

What one party thought to rivet by the Scots, that the other contemns, despising the kirk government and discipline of the Scots. King Charles.

KIRKMAN.* n. s. [kirk and man.] One of the church of Scotland.

It [the king's declaration] in the month of July 1637, was publicly read in the great church of Edinburgh. The kirkmen took fire at it; nor wanted there some in England to fan the flame.
Vindicia Carolinae, (1692) p. 37.

KIRTLE.† n. s. [cýpcel, Saxon; kiortell,
 Iceland. Of old we find the same term applied to the gowns worn by the men.
 Thus Franco-Goth. "Un altre lui vestira un kyrtel du rouge tartarin." V. Du Cange, and Callander's Anc. Scot. Poems, p. 106.
 It was indeed the name of the surcoat at the creation of knights of the garter.] A gown;
 a jacket; a petticoat; a mantle; a cloak.

Damoscellis two,
 Right yong, and full of semelyhede,
 In kirtills, and none other wede.
Chaucer, Rom. R. 778.

Yclad he was full small and properly
 All in a kirtel of a light waget.
Chaucer, Mill. Tale.

All in a kirtle of discoloured say
 He clothed was. Spenser, F. Q.

What stuff will have a kirtle of? I shall receive money on Thursday: thou shalt have a cap tomorrow. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Thy gowns, thy shoes, thy beds of roses,
 Thy cap, thy kirtle, and thy posies,
 Soon break, soon wither, soon forgotten,
 In folly ripe, in reason rotten. Marlow.

KIRTLED,* adj. [from kirtle.] Wearing a kirtle.

The flowery-kirtled Naiades,
Culling their potent herbs and baleful drugs.

Milton, Comus.

To KISS.† v. a. [Saxo, cýrran; Su. Goth. kyssa; Welsh, cusan; κῦσά νῶσας, Greek. This kuss is kiss, in some parts of the north of England. Chaucer writes it kess.]

1. To touch with the lips.

But who those ruddy lips can miss,

Which blessed still themselves do kiss. Sidney.

He took

The bride about the neck, and kiss'd her lips,
With such a clamorous smack, that at the parting
All the church echoed. Shakesp. Tam. of the Shrew.
Their lips were four red roses on a stalk,
And in their summer beauty kiss'd each other.

Shakespeare.

2. To treat with fondness.

The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it; but to stubborn spirits,
They swell and grow as terrible as storms.

Shakespeare.

3. To touch gently.

The moon shines bright: in such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Kiss, n. s. [from the verb.] Salute given by joining lips.

What sense had I of her stol'n hours or lust?
I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss:

O envy not the dead, they feel not bliss! Dryden.

KISSER.† n. s. [from kiss.] One that kisses.

Sherwood.

KISSINGCOMFIT.* n. s. [kissing and comfit.] Perfumed sugar-plums, to make the breath sweet.

Let the sky rain potatoes; let it thunder to the tune of Green Sleeves; hail kissing-comfits, and snow eringoes. Shakespeare, Merr. W. of Windsor.

KISSINGCRUST. n. s. [kissing and crust.] Crust formed where one loaf in the oven touches another.

These bak'd him kissingcrusts, and those Brought him small beer.

King, Cookery.

KIST.* n. s. [cert, Saxon; kist, German; cist, Welsh.] A chest. Lancashire, Westmoreland, and other parts of the north.

KIT.† n. s.

1. A large bottle. Skinner.

2. A small diminutive fiddle. [probably from cithara, Lat.; κίθρα, Gr. See GUITAR.]

The gittern and the kit the wandering fiddlers like.

Drayton, Polyol. S. 4.

'Tis kept in a case fitted to it, almost like a dancing master's kit.

Greiv, Mus.

3. A small wooden vessel, in which Newcastle salmon is sent up to town. [kitte, kit, Dutch.]

4. A milking pail, like a churn, with two ears, and a cover. [kitte, Dutch, Ray; kuttr, "tonnula sex circiter sextarios continens." Serenius.]

5. A set or company; generally in a contemptuous sense, "the whole kit of them." Wilbraham, Cheshire Gloss. All the whole kit, whether applied to persons or things. Craven Dialect. A tribe; a collection; a gang. Jennings, W. Country Words.

KITCAT.* adj.

1. Denoting a club of whigs at the beginning of the last century, of which Addison, Steele, and other distinguished wits were members; so named from Christopher Cat, a pastry cook, who excelled in mutton pies, by whom the club was served with this part of the entertainment.

You have been for some years past laying the foundation of new schemes in your kit-cat clubs, calf's head clubs, juntos, and other infernal cabals of this kind!

Acc. of Tom Whig, Esq. (1710.) p. 31.

Our modern celebrated clubs are founded upon eating and drinking. — The kit-cat itself is said to have taken its original from a mutton-pie.

Addison, Spect. No. 9. (1710-11.)

2. Denoting a portrait, somewhat larger than a three quarter's, and less than a half length; so called from the room in which portraits of the kit-cat club at first were placed, being not sufficiently lofty to admit half lengths.

There is a kit-cat size of St. Ignatius holding a crucifix, which is faint, but sweetly done.

Drummond, Trav. p. 31.

KITCHEN. n. s. [kegin, Welsh; keg, Flemish; cýcene, Sax.; cuisine, French; cucina, Italian; kysken, Erse.] The room in a house where the provisions are cooked.

These being culpable of this crime, or favourers of their friends, which are such by whom their kitchens are sometimes amended, will not suffer any such statue to pass.

Spenser on Ireland.

Can we judge it a thing seemly for any man to go about the building of an house to the God of heaven, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use.

Hooker.

He was taken into service in his court to a base office in his kitchen; so that he turned a broach that had worn a crown.

Bacon.

We see no new-built palaces aspire,
No kitchens emulate the vestal fire.

Pope.

To KITCHEN.* v. a. [from the noun.] To use thriftily. A northern word. Grose. Still in use as a Scottish expression in the sense of to save, to be sparing of. See Dr. Jamieson's Supplement in voce.

KITCHENGARDEN. n. s. [kitchen and garden.] Garden in which esculent plants are produced.

Gardens, if planted with such things as are fit for food, are called kitchengardens.

Bacon.

A kitchengarden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery.

Spectator.

KITCHENMAID.† n. s. [kitchen and maid.] A maid under the cookmaid, whose business is to clean the utensils of the kitchen.

Did not her kitchenmaid rail, taunt, and scorn me?

Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

KITCHENSTUFF. n. s. [kitchen and stuff.] The fat of meat scummed off the pot, or gathered out of the dripping-pan.

As a thrifty wench scrapes kitchenstuff,
And barrelling the droppings and the snuff
Of wasting candles, which in thirty year,
Reliquely kept, perchance buys wedding cheer.

Donne.

Instead of kitchenstuff some cry

A gospel preaching ministry.

Hudibras.

KITCHENWENCH. n. s. [kitchen and wench.] Scullion; maid employed to clean the instruments of cookery.

Laura to his lady was but a kitchenwench.

Shakespeare.

Roasting and boiling leave to the kitchenwench.

Swift.

KITCHENWORK. n. s. [kitchen and work.]

Cookery; work done in the kitchen.

KITE. n. s. [cýta, Saxon; milvus.]

1. A bird of prey that infests the farms, and steals the chickens.

More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,

While kites and buzzards pray at liberty. Shaks.

The heron, when she soareth high, so as sometimes she is seen to pass over a cloud, sheweth winds; but kites, flying aloft, shew fair and dry weather.

Bacon.

A leopard and a cat seem to differ just as a kite doth from an eagle.

Greiv.

2. A name of reproach denoting rapacity.

Detested kite! thou liest. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

3. A fictitious bird made of paper.

A man may have a great estate conveyed to him; but if he will madly burn, or childishly make paper kites of his deeds, he forfeits his title with his evidence.

Gon. of the Tongue.

KITE.* n. s. [qued, Su. Goth. quidr, Icel.

κίτρος, Gr. the belly. Craven Dialect.]

In the north of England, the belly.

KITFOOT. n. s. A plant. Ainsworth.

KITH.* n. s. [cýðe, knowledge, Saxon; cýðan, to make known.] Acquaintance. Bullockar. Kith and kin, friends and relations. A northern expression. Brockett.

First she made hym the fleese to wyinne;

And after that from kith and kynne,

With great treasure with him she staye,

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

KITLING.* n. s. [catulus, Lat.] A whelp; the young of all beasts. Barret, Alv. 1580. Now, a young cat or kitten.

Whither go you now?

What, to buy gingerbread, or to drown kitlings?

B. Jonson, For.

KITTEN. n. s. [katteken, Dutch. It is probable that the true singular is kit, the diminutive of cat, of which the old plural was kitten, or young cats, which was in time taken for the singular, like chicken.] A young cat.

That a mare will sooner drown than an horse, is not experience; nor is the same observed in the drowning of whelps and kittens. Brown, Vulg. Err. It was scratched in playing with a kitten.

Wiseman.

Helen was just slipt into bed;

Her eyebrows on the toilet lay,

Away the kitten with them fled,

As fees belonging to her prey.

Prior.

To KITTEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring forth young cats.

So it would have done

At the same season, if your mother's cat

Had kitten'd, though yourself had ne'er been born.

Shakespeare.

The eagle timbered upon the top of a high oak, and the cat kittened in the hollow trunk of it.

L'Estrange.

KITTIWAKE.* n. s. A bird of the gull kind; common among the rocks of Flamborough head.

To KITTLER.* v. a. [cýtelan, Saxon, titillare.] To tickle. Common in the north of England. It is also in Sherwood's old dictionary.

KI'TLE.* adj. [keteligh, Teut. [Uncertain; fickle; difficult; unsafe: applied to the weather, to work, to a horse, &c. A northern word. Grose, Craven Dial. and Brockett.

KI'TLISH.* adj. [from kittle.] Ticklish. A northern word. Grose.

KIVE.* n. s. The tub-hole is a hollow place in the ground, over which the kive, (mashing-fat) stands. Kelly's Scotch Proverbs, p. 300. cited by Dr. Jamieson, in his Scottish dictionary; who says, "I have not met with this word any where else." It appears, however, to be of English usage, and by an old author of great merit.

Lime, or calke which is strong lime, is used to accelerate the fermentation of the woad, which by the help of the same pot-ashes and warm liquors kept always so, in three or four days will come to work like a kive of beer, and will have a blue or rather greenish froth or flowry upon it; answering to the yeast of the kive.

Sir W. Petty, Hist. of Dying, Sprat's H. R. Soc. p. 301.

To KI'VE.* v. a. To cover. See To COVER. Mr. Pegge, in his Anecdotes of the English language, gives a catalogue of words, of which the use and pronunciation are deformed by the natives of London. Among these are kiver for cover; which, however, he might have defended by Chaucer's employment of kever, and by Huloet's introduction into his old dictionary of kiver, for the more modern cover.

To KI'ZEN, or KI'ZZEN.* v. a. [gizen, Icel. hisco. Craven Dial.] To parch; to dry up. A northern word. Grose, and Craven Dialect.

To KICK.* v. n.

1. To make a small sharp noise. [from clack.]
2. In Scotland it denotes to pilfer, or steal away suddenly with a snatch. Dr. Johnson.—It has the sense also of to catch up, to snatch, in the north of England.

To KNAB.* v. a. [knappen, Dutch; knaap, Erse.] To bite. Perhaps properly to bite something brittle, that makes a noise when it is broken; so as that knab and knay may be the same.

I had much rather lie knabbing crusts, without fear, in my own hole, than be mistress of the world with cares.

An ass was wishing, in a hard winter, for a little warm weather, and a mouthful of fresh grass to knab upon.

To KNABBLE.* v. n. [from knab.] To bite idly, or wantonly; to nibble. This word is perhaps found no where else.

Horses will knabble at walls, and rats gnaw iron.

KNACK.* n. s. [cnapning, skill, Saxon. Dr. Johnson.—The word seems to have been formed, as Mr. Tyrwhitt observes, from the knacking or snapping, of the fingers used by jugglers. See Cotgrave in V. NIQUET, viz. "a knick, klick, snap with the teeth or fingers; a trifle, bauble, matter of small value, &c."

And in V. MATASSINER des mains, viz. "to move, knock, or waggle the fingers, like a juggler, player, &c."]

1. A little machine; a petty contrivance; a toy.

The more quaint knackes that they make.

Chaucer, Reve's Tale.
These knacks were brought first into England by them.

When I was young, I was wont
To load my she with knacks: I would have ransack'd

The pedlar's silken treasury, and have pour'd it
To her acceptance.

For these, fond boy,
If I may ever know thou do'st but sigh
That thou no more shalt see this knack, as never
I mean thou shalt, we'll bar thee from success.

Shakespeare.
This cap was moulded on a porringer,
A velvet dish; fie, fie, 'tis lewd and filthy:
Why 'tis a cockle, or a walnut shell,
A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap.
But is't not presumption to write verse to you,
Who make the better poems of the two?
For all these pretty knacks that you compose,
Alas! what are they but poems in prose! Denham.
He expounded both his pockets,
And found a watch, with rings and lockets;
A copper-plate, with almanacks
Engrav'd upon't, with other knacks.

2. A readiness; an habitual facility; a lucky dexterity.

I'll teach you the knacks
Of eating of flux,
And out of their noses
Draw ribbands and posies.
The knack of fast and loose passes with foolish people for a turn of wit; but they are not aware all this while of the desperate consequences of an ill habit.

There is a certain knack in conversation that gives a good grace by the manner and address.

Knaves, who in full assemblies have the knack
Of turning truth to lies, and white to black.

My author has a great knack at remarks: in the end he makes another, about our refining in controversy, and coming nearer and nearer to the church of Rome.

The dean was famous in his time,
And had a kind of knack at rhyme.

3. A nice trick.

For how should equal colours do the knack?
Cameleons who can paint in white and black?

To KNACK.* v. n. [knacken, Teut. frangere. And Barret defines our knack, "to break a nut." Alv. 1580.]

1. To make a sharp quick noise, as when a stick breaks, or a nut is cracked; to chink.

If they can hear their beads knack upon each other.

2. To speak finely or affectedly. North.

KNACKER.* n. s. [from knack.]
1. A maker of small work; one that makes collars and other furniture for cart-horses. Ray.
One part for plow-right, knacker, and smith.

2. A ropemaker. [restio, Latin.] Ainsw.

KNACKISH.* adj. [from knack.] Trickish; knavishly artful.

Beating the air with knackish forms of gracious speeches, and vain grandiloquence that tends to nothing.

KNACKISHNESS.* n. s. [from knackish.] Artifice; trickery.

A set form (of prayer) will prevent all pride and knackishness, and preserve the publick worship in its due reverence and honour.

More, Myst. of Godl. (1660,) p. 539.

KNACKY.* adj. [from knack.] Handy; having a knack, perhaps, of doing several things. Moore's Suffolk Words. Cunning; crafty: so used in Berwickshire. Dr. Jamieson.

KNAG.* n. s. [knack, knocke, knocht, nodus, Teut. knoge, condylus. Su. Goth. cnag, Irish, a knob, a peg.]

1. A hard knot in wood. Barret.
I have cutte of the knagges that you poynted upon. Confut. of N. Shaxton, (1546,) sign. E.1.
2. A peg for hanging any thing upon.
I schall hyt hynde on a knag.

Romance of Le Bone Florence.
3. Knags are the shoots of a deer's horns, called brow-antlers. Sherwood.

4. Knags also are pointed rocks, or rugged tops of hills. [V. Ihre, knagglig.] Brockett's N. C. Words.

KNAGGY.* adj. [from knag.]

1. Knotty; set with hard rough knots. Sherwood.
2. Figuratively, full of rough or sour humours: illhumoured. Used in the north of England.

KNAP.* n. s. [cnap, Welsh, a protuberance, or a broken piece; cnæp, Sax. a protuberance.]

1. A protuberance; a swelling prominence; a knoll; a hillock.

You shall see many fine seats set upon a knap of ground, environed with higher hills round about it, whereby the heat of the sun is pent in, and the wind gathered as in troughs.

Bacon, Ess. of Building.
Hark, on knap of yonder hill,
Some sweet shepherd tunes his quill.

2. The pile on cloth. See NAP.
To KNAP.* v. a. [knappen, Dutch.]

1. To bite; to break short.
He knappeth the spear in sunder.

Ps. Com. Prayer.
He will knap the spears a-pieces with his teeth.

2. [Knaap, Erse.] To strike so as to make a sharp noise like that of breaking.
Knay a pair of tongs some depth in a vessel o water, and you shall hear the sound of the tongs.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.
To KNAP.* v. n. To make a short sharp noise.

I reduced the shoulders so soon, that the standers-by heard them knay in before they knew they were out.

KNAPBOTTLE.* n. s. [papaver, spumeum.] A plant.

KNAPPISH.* adj. [from knay.] Our old word for snappish; froward.

Barret, and Sherwood.
To KNA'PPLE.* v. n. [from knay.] To break off with a sharp quick noise. Dr. Johnson from Ainsworth. Cotgrave defines it "to nibble or eat like a squirrel; to gnaw." V. GRIGNOTER.

KNAPPY.* adj. [from knay.] Full of knaps or hillocks.

Hubot.

KNA'PSACK.† n. s. [from knappen, Germ. to eat. But see SNAPSACK.] The bag which a soldier carries on his back; a bag of provisions.

The constitutions of this church shall not be repealed, till I see more religious motives than soldiers carry in their knapsacks. King Charles.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it farthest: there are hedges in summer, and barns in winter: I with my knapsack, and you with your bottle at your back: we'll leave honour to madmen, and riches to knaves, and travel till we come to the ridge of the world. Dryden.

KNA'PWEED. n. s. [jacea, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

KNAR.† n. s. [knor, German; but our word is more frequently written knur; though the adjective knarry, hitherto unnoticed, is very old. See KNUR. "A bunch or knor in a tree," is noticed in our lexicography. See Wythall's Dict. 1568.] A hard knot.

A cake of scurf lies baking on the ground, And prickly stubs instead of trees are found; Or woods with knots and knars deform'd and old, Headless the most, and hideous to behold, Dryden.

KNA'RLED.* adj. [from knar.] Knotted. See GNARLED. It should be knarled.

KNA'RRY.* adj. [from knar.] Knotty; stubby. Cockeram, and Bullokar.

Knotty knarry barren trees old

Of stubbes sharpe, and hidous to behold.

Chaucer, Kⁿ. Tale.
This knarry club — the which no hand shall ever tosse. Transl. of Seneca, (1581.) fol. 213.

KNA'VE.† n. s. [knafa, Saxon, knab, German; knabe, knape, Iceland. All these have reference both to child and servant, which our word originally denoted. Mr. Tooke's opinion that the Saxon knafa, knave, was probable nafað, i. e. ne-hafað, zenafað, qui nihil habet, (who has nothing,) the third person singular of nabban, i. e. ne-habban, is not likely to be received.]

1. A boy; a male or man-child.

Sche bare a knave-child. Wicliffe, Rev. xii. 5.
He had of children younge two;

Fixus the first was of tho,

A knave-child, right faire withall!

A daughter eke, the whiche men call

Helle. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

2. A servant. Both these are obsolete.

For lord and knave is all one wey,

When they be bore and when they dey.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

For as the moon the eye doth please

With gentle beams not hurting sight,

Yet hath sir sun the greater praise,

Because from him doth come her light:

So if my man must praises have,

What then must I that keep the knave? Sidney.

He eats and drinks with his domestic slaves;

A viceroy hie than any of his knaves. Dryden.

3. A petty rascal; a scoundrel; a dishonest fellow.

Most men rather brooke their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools; knave, in the mean time, passing for a name of credit. South.

When both plaintiff and defendant happen to be crafty knaves, there's equity against both.

L'Estrange.

An honest man may take a knave's advice;

But idiots only may be cozen'd twice. Dryden.

See all our fools aspiring to be knaves. Pope.

4. A card with a soldier painted on it.

For 'twill return, and turn t' account,

If we are brought in play upon't,

Or but by casting knaves get in,

What pow'r can hinder us to win! Hudibras.

KNA'VERY. n. s. [from knave.]

1. Dishonesty; tricks; petty villany.

Here's no knavery! See, to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together. Shakespeare.

If I thought it were not a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would do't: I hold it the more knavery to conceal it. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

The cunning courtier should be slighted too,

Who with dull knavery makes so much ado;

Till the shrewd fool, by thriving too too fast,

Like Æsop's fox, becomes a prey at last. Dryden.

2. Mischievous tricks or practices. In the following passage it seems a general term for any thing put to an ill use, or perhaps for trifling things of more cost than use.

We'll revel it as bravely as the best,

With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knavery. Shakespeare.

KNA'VISH. adj. [from knave.]

1. Dishonest; wicked; fraudulent.

'Tis foolish to conceal it at all, and knavish to do it from friends. Pope, Lett.

2. Waggish; mischievous.

Here she comes curst and sad;

Cupid is a knavish lad,

Thus to make poor females mad. Shakespeare.

KNA'VISHLY.† adv. [from knavish.]

1. Dishonestly; fraudulently.

2. Waggishly; mischievously.

Huloet, and Sherwood.

It is ordinary for hosts to be knavishly witty. Gayton, on D. Quix. p. 8.

KNA'VISHNESS.* n. s. [from knavish.]

State or quality of being knavish.

Sherwood.

To KNAW.* Sometimes written for gnaw.

See also To BEGNAW.

To KNEAD.† v. a. cnæban, Saxon;

kneden, Dutch. "Ab antiq. knēt, massa.

Wachter. Potius autem id deductum iverim ab Icel. knæae, vel naeda, factitere, movere." Serenius. The Saxon gniban also is to knead, as well as cnæban.) To beat or mingle any stuff or substance. It is seldom applied in popular language but to the act of making bread.

Here's yet in the word hereafter, the kneading,

the making of the cakes, and the heating of the oven. Shakespeare.

It is a lump, where all beasts kneaded be;

Wisdom makes him an ark where all agree. Donne.

Thus kneaded up with milk the new-made man

His kingdom o'er his kindred world began;

Till knowledge misapp'ly'd, misunderstood,

And pride of empire, sour'd his balmy blood. Dryden.

One paste of flesh on all degrees bestow'd,

And kneaded up alike with moist'ning blood. Dryden.

Prometheus, in the kneading up of the heart, seasoned it with some furious particles of the lion. Addison, Spect.

No man ever reapt his corn,

Or from the oven drew his bread,

Ere hinds and bakers yet were born,

That taught them both to sow and knead. Prior.

The cake she kneaded was the savoury meat.

KNE'ADER.* n. s. [from knead.] A baker. Prior.

Huloet, and Sherwood.

KNE'ADINGTROUGH. n. s. [from knead and trough.] A trough in which the paste of bread is worked together.

Frogs shall come into thy kneadingtroughs.

Ezod, viii. 3.

KNEE.† n. s. [knīw, Goth. cnēop, Sax. knee, Dutch. Mr. Horne Tooke believes the Saxon hneagan, and the Gothick hneiwān, to be same verb, meaning to bow, to bend; and the substantives to have been thence formed. A similar opinion appears to have long before been entertained by Serenius, who notices the Gothick verb in his illustration of our substantive; adding, however, the Icel. hnie, hnea, the knee, "vox antiquissima."] Shakespeare.

1. The joint of the leg where the leg is joined to the thigh.

Thy royal father

Was a most sainted king: the queen that bore thee

Offener upon her knees than on her feet,

Died every day she lived. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Scotch skink is a kind of strong nourishment, made of the knees and sinews of beef long boiled. Bacon.

I beg and clasp thy knees. Milton, P. L.

Wearied with length of ways, worn out with toil,

to lay down, and leaning on her knees,

Invok'd the cause of all her miseries;

And cast her languishing regards above,

For help from heaven, and her ungrateful Jove. Dryden.

2. A knee is a piece of timber growing crooked, and so cut that the trunk and branch make an angle.

Moxon, Mech. Exercises.

Such dispositions are the fittest timber to make great politticks of: like to knee timber, that is good for ships that are to be tossed, but not for building houses, that shall stand firm. Bacon.

To KNEE. v. a. [from the noun.] To supplicate by kneeling.

Go, you that banish'd him,

A mile before his tent, fall down and knee

The way into his mercy. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Return with her!

Why, the hot-blooded France, that dowerless took

Our youngest born: I could as well be brought

To knee his throne, and, squire-like, pension beg. Shakespeare.

KNEED. adj. [from knee.]

1. Having knees: as, in-kneed, or out- kneed.

2. Having joints: as, kneed grass.

KNEEDE'EP.† adj. [knee and deep.]

1. Rising to the knees.

The ground in fourteen days is dry, and grass

kneedeep within a month. Milton, Brief Hist. of Moscowin.

2. Sunk to the knees.

Gone already;

Inch thick, kneedeep! Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

The country peasant meditates no harm,

When clad with skins of beasts to keep him warm;

In winter weather unconcern'd he goes,

Almost kneedeep through mire in clumsy shoes. Dryden.

KNEE-CRO'OKING.* adj. [knee and crook.]

Obsequious.

Many a duteous and knee-crooking knave.
Shakspeare, Othello.
KNE'EDGRASS. n. s. [gramen geniculatum.]

An herb.

KNE'E HOLM.† n. s. [aquifolium.] The name of a plant, called also kneeholly.
To KNEEL. v. n. [from knee.] To perform the act of genuflection; to bend the knee.

When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel down,
And ask of thee forgiveness. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Ere I was risen from the place that shew'd
My duty kneeling, came a reeking post
Stew'd in his haste, half breathing, panting forth
From Goneril, his mistress, salutation.

A certain man kneeling down to him, said,
Lord, have mercy upon my son; for he is lunatick.
St. Matt. xvii. 14.

As soon as you are dressed, kneel and say the Lord's prayer.
Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

KNE'ELER.* n. s. [from kneel.] One who shews obeisance by kneeling.

In this part of the church,—stood the class of the penitents, who were called kneelers, because at their going out, they fell down upon their knees before the bishop, who laid his hands upon them.
Lewis, Consecration of Churches, p. 95.

KNE'PAN. n. s. [knee and pan.] A little round bone about two inches broad, pretty thick, a little convex on both sides, and covered with a smooth cartilage on its foreside. It is soft in children, but very hard in those of riper years: it is called patella or mola. Over it passes the tendon of the muscles which extend the leg, to which it serves as a pulley.
Quincy.

The kneopan must be shewn, with the knitting thereof, by a fine shadow underneath the joint.
Peacham on Drawing.

KNEETIMBER.* n. s. See the second sense of KNEE.

We see how the shipwright doth make use of kneetimber, and other cross-grained pieces, as well as of straight and even, for framing a goodly vessel to ride on Neptune's back.
Howell, Lett. iv. 4.

KNEETRIBUTE. n. s. [knee and tribute.] Genuflection; worship or obeisance shewn by kneeling.

Receive from us
Kneetribute, yet unpaid prostration vile.
Milton, P. L.

KNELL.† n. s. [cnill, cnul, Welsh, the ringing of bells, a passing-bell; cnyll, Sax. from cnýllan, to strike a bell, to ring a bell. Some refer these words, as well as knoll, to the Latin nola, a little bell, which had its name from Nola, a town in Campania, in which they are pretended to have been invented, or to have been first used for pious purposes.] The sound of a bell rung at a funeral.

I would not wish them to a fairer death,
And so his knell is knoll'd.
Shakspeare.

Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell:
Hark, now I hear them. Shakspeare, Tempest.

When he was brought again to the bar to hear
His knell rung out, his judgement, he was stirr'd
With such an agony, he sweat extremely.
Shakspeare.

All these motions, which we saw,
Are but as ice, which crackles at a thaw:
Or as a lute, which in moist weather rings
Her knell alone, by cracking of her strings.
Donne.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Which his hours work, as well as hours do tell;
Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell.
Cowley.

At dawn poor Stella danc'd and sung;
The amorous youth around her bow'd:
At night her fatal knell was rung;
I saw and kiss'd her in her shroud. Prior.

KNEW. The preterite of know.
KNICK-KNACK.* A colloquial term, meaning any trifle or toy. See the first sense of KNACK.

KNIFE.† n. s. plur. knives. [cnif, Saxon; knif, Su. kniv. Dan. canif, Fr. knif, old Teut. both a knife and a sword, Kilian; knif, Icel. hneipa, to cut. Serenius. Some cite the Greek ἐπίς, a sword. It is to the Celtic cnelfio, to shear, however, that we may trace these words.]

1. An instrument edged and pointed, wherewith meat is cut, and animals killed.

Blest pow'rs, forbid thy tender life
Should bleed upon a barbarous knife. Crashaw.

The sacred priests with ready knives bereave
The beast of life, and in full bowls receive
The streaming blood. Dryden, Æn.

Ev'n in his sleep he starts, and fears the knife,
And, trembling, in his arms takes his accomplice wife. Dryden.

Pain is not in the knife that cuts us; but we call it cutting in the knife, and pain only in ourselves.
Watts.

2. A sword or dagger.

The time appointed now
Approach'd is, when knife
Of manly knight must yelde him fame,
And end the deadly strife.

Elviden, Hist. of Palsir. and Catanea, bl. l. M. 6.
The red-cross knight was slain with paynim knife. Spenser, F. Q.

Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dunest smoke of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes.
Shakspeare, Macbeth.

KNIGHT.† n. s. [cnht, Sax. knecht, Germ. a servant or pupil. Dr. Johnson.—The Saxon word originally means a boy, cnht, and cnecht; cnhtchil; cnhtchab, childhood. Wachter and Ihre consider it as from the same stock with cnapa, or cnapa, a little boy. See KNAVE. Dr. Jamieson refers it to cneco, generation, which cnecht nearly resembles. The word next signified a servant, like knave; and often a military one: "I am a man ordeynid under power, and, have knights under me." Wicliffe, St. Matt. viii. Mr. H. Tooke considers it as the participle cnýt, (from cnýtcan, to bind, un attached.)

1. A man advanced to a certain degree of military rank. It was anciently the custom to knight every man of rank or fortune, that he might be qualified to give challenges to fight in the lists, and to perform feats of arms. In England knighthood confers the title of sir: as, sir Thomas, sir Richard. When the name was not known, it was usual to say sir knight.

That same knight's own sword this is of yore,
Which Merlin made. Spenser, F. Q.

Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestalled place. Spenser, F. Q.

When every case in law is right,
No squire in debt, and no poor knight.
Shakspeare, K. Lear.

This knight; but yet why should I call him knight?
To give impiety to this reverent site?
Daniel, Civil Wars.

No squire with knight did better fit
In parts, in manners, and in wit. Hudibras.

2. Shakspeare uses it of a female, and it must therefore be understood in its original meaning, pupil or follower.

Pardon, goddess of the night,
Those that slew thy virgin knight;
For the which, with songs of woe,
Round about her tomb they go. Shakspeare.

3. A champion.

He suddenly unties the poke,
Which out of it sent such a smoke,
As ready was them all to choke,
So grievous was the pother;
So that the knights each other lost,
And stood as still as any post. Dayton.

Did I for this my country bring
To help their knight against their king,
And raise the first sedition? Denham.

KNIGHT Errant. [chevalier errant, Fr.] A wandering knight: one who went about in quest of adventures.

Like a bold knight errant did proclaim
Combat to all, and bore away the dame. Denham.

The ancient errant knights
Won all their mistresses in fights;
They cut whole giants into fitters,
To put them into am'rous twitters. Hudibras.

KNIGHT Errantry. [from knight errant.] The character or manners of wandering knights.

That which with the vulgar passes for courage
Is a brutish sort of knight errantry, seeking out Needless encounters. Norris.

KNIGHT of the Post.† A hiring evidence; a knight dubbed at the whipping-post, or pillory.

I may not term them men, if there be such as I have heard to be, who will not let to swear upon a booke, and that before any judge, beyng hyred thereunto for money. And such are called by the names of knights of the poste, more fit for the gallows than to live in a commonwealth where Christ is possessed.

Knight, Trial of Truth, (1580.) fol. 39. b.

There are knights of the post, and holy cheats enough, to swear the truth of the broadest contradictions, where pious frauds shall give them an extraordinary call. South.

KNIGHT of the Shire. One of the representatives of a county in parliament: he formerly was a military knight, but now any man having an estate in land of six hundred pounds a year is qualified.

To KNIGHT. v. a. [from the noun.] To create one a knight, which is done by the king, who gives the person kneeling a blow with a sword, and bids him rise up sir.

Favours came thick upon him: the next St. George's day he was knighted. Wotton.

The lord protector knighted the king; and immediately the king stood up, took the sword from the lord protector, and dubbed the Lord mayor of London knight. Hayward.

The hero William, and the martyr Charles,
One knighted Blackmore, and one pension'd Quarles. Pope.

KNIGHTHOOD. n. s. [from knight.] The character or dignity of a knight.

The sword which Merlin made,
For that his noursing, when he knighthood swore,
Therewith to doen his foes eternal smart.

Speak truly on thy knighthood, and thine oath,
And so defend thee Heaven and thy valour.

Is this the sir, who some waste wit to win,
A knighthood bought, to go a-wooing in?

If you needs must write, write Cæsar's praise,
You'll gain at least a knighthood, or the bays.

KNIGHTLESS. adj. [from knight.] Unbecoming a knight. Obsolete.

Arise, thou cursed miscreant,
That hast with knighthless guile, and treacherous train,

Fair knighthood foully shamed.

KNIGHTLINESS.* n. s. [from knighthly.]
Duties of a knight.

The prince did wonder much, yet could not ghesse

The cause of that his sorrowfull constraint;
Yet would by secret signes of mannesse,
Which close appear'd in that rude brutishnesse,
That he whilome some gentle swaine had bene,
Train'd up in feasts of arms and knighthnesse.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. vii. 45.

KNIGHTLY. adj. [from knight.] Befitting
a knight; beeseeming a knight.

Let us take care of your wound, upon condition that a more knighly combat shall be performed under us.

Sidney.

How dares your pride presume against my laws?

As in a listed field to fight your cause:
Unask'd the royal grant, no marshal by,
As knighly rites require, nor judge to try.

Dryden.

KNIGHTLY.* adv. In a manner becoming a knight.

Sherwood.

TO KNIT. v. a. preter. knit or knitted.
[cnittan, Saxon.]

1. To make or unite by texture without a loom.

Sleep, that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care,
The birth of each day's life, sore labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds.
A thousand Cupids in those curls do sit;
Those curious nets thy slender fingers knit.

Waller.

2. To tie.

Send for the county; go tell him of this;
I'll have this knot knit up to-morrow morning.

Shakespeare.

3. To join; to unite. This was formerly a word of extensive use; it is now less frequent.

His gall did grate for grief and high disdain,
And, knitting all his force, got one hand free.

Spenser, F. Q.

These, mine enemies, are all knit up
In their distractions: they are in my power.

Shakespeare.

O let the vile world end,
And the premised flames of the last day
Knit earth and heaven together!

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Lay your highness'
Command upon me; to the which my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tie
For ever knit.

in marriage, and thereby knit both realms into one.

Hayward.

Come, knit hands, and beat the ground
In a light fantastic round.

Milton, Comus.

God gave several abilities to several persons,
that each might help to supply the publick needs, and, by joining to fill up all wants, they be knit together by justice, as the parts of the world are by nature.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

Nature cannot knit the bones while the parts are under a discharge.

Wiseman, Surgery.

4. To contract.

What are the thoughts that knit thy brow in frowns,

And turn thy eyes so coldly on thy prince?

Addison, Cato.

5. To tie up.

He saw heaven opened, and a certain vessel descending unto him as it had been a great sheet, knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth.

Acts, x. 11.

TO KNIT. v. n.

1. To weave without a loom.

a blow, Welsh.]

1. To clash; to be driven suddenly together.

Any hard body thrust forwards by another body contiguous, without knocking, giveth no noise.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

They may say, the atoms of the chaos being variously moved according to this catholic law, must needs knock and interfere.

Bentley, Serm.

2. To beat, as at a door for admittance:
commonly with at.

Villain, I say knock me at this gate,
And rap me well; or I'll knock your knave's pate!

Shakespeare.

Whether to knock against the gates of Rome,
Or rudely visit them in parts remote,

To fright them, ere destroy.

I bid the rascal knock upon your gate,

And could not get him for my heart to do it.

Shakespeare.

For harbour at a thousand doors they knock'd,
Not one of all the thousand but was lock'd.

Dryden.

Knock at your own breast, and ask your soul,
If those fatal eyes ead'g'd not your sword.

Dryden.

3. TO KNOCK under. A common expression, which denotes that a man yields or submits. Submission is expressed among good fellows by knocking under the table. Followed commonly by a particle: as, to knock up, to rouse, by knocking; to knock down, to fell by a blow.

TO KNOCK. v. a.

1. To affect or change in any respect by blows.

How do you mean removing him;

— Why, by making him incapable of Othello's place; knocking out his brains.

Shakespeare, Othello.

He that has his chains knocked off, and the prison doors set open to him, is perfectly at liberty.

Locke.

Time was, a sober Englishman would knock
His servants up, and rise by five o'clock;
Instruct his family in every rule,
And send his wife to church, his son to school.

Pope.

1. A complication of a cord or string not easily to be disentangled.

He found that reason's self now reasons found
To fasten knots, which fancy first had bound.

Sidney.

As the fair vestal to the fountain came,
Let none be startled at a vestal's name,
Tir'd with the walk, she laid her down to rest;
And to the winds expos'd her glowing breast,
To take the freshness of the morning air,
And gather in a knot her flowing hair. Addison.

2. Any figure of which the lines frequently intersect each other.

Garden knots, the frets of houses, and all equal figures, please; whereas unequal figures are but deformities. Bacon.

Our sea-wall'd garden, the whole land,
Is full of weeds, her fairest flowers choked up,
Her knots disorder'd. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

Flowers worthy of paradise, which not nice art
In beds and curious knots, but nature boon,
Pour'd forth profuse on hill and dale, and plain.

Milton, P. L.

Their quarters are contrived into elegant knots, adorned with the most beautiful flowers. More.

Henry in knots involving Emma's name,
Had half express'd, and half conceal'd his flame
Upon this tree; and as the tender mark
Grew with the year, and widen'd with the bark,
Venus had heard the virgin's soft address,
That, as the wound, the passion might increase.

Prior.

3. Any bond of association or union. [from knit.]

Confirm that amity

With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant
That virtuous lady Bona. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Dryden.

2. Having figures of which the lines intersect each other; having "curious knots," as Shakespeare and Milton express it, in allusion to the garden-taste of the time. See the second sense of KNOT.

The West corner of thy curious — knotted garden.

Shakespeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

KNO'TTINESS.† n. s. [from knotty.]

1. Fulness of knots; unevenness; intricacy; difficulty.

Virtue was represented by Hercules naked, with his lion's skin and knotted club: by his oaken club is signified reason ruling the appetite: the knottiness thereof, the difficulty they have that seek after virtue.

Peacham on Drawing.

2. A protuberance, or swelling; as the muscles, or fleshy parts.

He has omitted the characteristical excellencies of this famous piece of Grecian workmanship, [the Farnesian Hercules.] namely, the uncommon breadth of the shoulders, the knottiness and spaciousness of the chest.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

KNO'TTY. adj. [from knót.]

1. Full of knots.

I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds
Have riv'd the knotty oaks. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

The timber in some trees more clean, in some more knotty: try it by speaking at one end, and laying the ear at the other; for if it be knotty, the voice will not pass well.

Bacon.

The knotty oaks their listening branches bow.

Roscommon.

One with a brand yet burning from the flame,
Arm'd with a knotty club another came.

Dryden, Æn.

Where the vales with violets once were crown'd,
Now knotty burrs and thorns disgrace the ground.

Dryden.

2. Hard; rugged.

Valiant fools

Were made by nature for the wise to work with: They are their tools; and 'tis the sport of statesmen,

When heroes knock their knotty heads together,
And fall by one another. Rowe, Amb. Stepmother.

3. Intricate; perplexed; difficult; embarrassed.

King Henry, in the very entrance of his reign, met with a point of great difficulty, and knotty to solve, able to trouble and confound the wisest kings.

Bacon.

Princes exercised skill in putting intricate questions; and he that was the best at the untying of knotty difficulties, carried the prize.

L'Estrange.

Some on the bench the knotty laws untie.

Dryden.

They compliment, they sit, they chat,

Fight o'er the wars; reform the state;

A thousand knotty points they clear,

Till supper and my wife appear. Prior.

To KNOW.† v. a. preter. I knew, I have known. [cnapan, Saxon; kunnan, Gothic; γνώσκω, ᾔσθω, to know, Greek; and νοῖω, to understand; from νόος, vñs, the mind.]

1. To perceive with certainty, whether intuitive or discursive.

O, that a man might know

The end of this day's business ere it come?

Shakespeare.

The memorial of virtue is immortal, because it is known with God and with men.

Wisdom. iv. 1.

The gods all things know.

Milton.

Not from experience, for the world was new,

He only from their cause their natures knew.

Denham.

We doubt not, neither can we properly say we think we admire and love you above all other men: there is a certainty in the proposition and we know it.

Dryden.

When a man makes use of the name of any simple idea, which he perceives is not understood, he is obliged by the laws of ingenuity, and the end of speech, to make known what idea he makes it stand for.

Locke.

2. To be informed of; to be taught.

Ye shall be healed, and it shall be known to you why his hand is not removed from you.

1 Sam. vi. 3.

Led on with a desire to know

What nearer might concern him. Milton, P. L.

One would have thought you had known better things than to expect a kindness from a common enemy.

L'Estrange.

3. To distinguish.

Numeration is but the adding of one unit more, and giving to the whole a new name, whereby to know it from those before and after, and distinguishing it from every smaller or greater multitude of units.

Locke.

4. To recognise.

What art thou, thus to rail on me, that is neither known of thee, nor knows thee? Shakspeare.

They told what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in breaking of bread.

Luke, xxiv. 35.

At nearer view he thought he knew the dead,
And call'd the wretched man to mind. Flatman.

Milton.

5. To be no stranger to; to be familiar with.

What are you?

— A most poor man, made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

6. To converse with another sex.

And Adam knew Eve his wife. Gen. iv. 1.

To KNOW. v. n.

1. To have clear and certain perception; not to be doubtful.

I know of a surety that the Lord hath sent his angel, and delivered me out of the hand of Herod.

Acts, xii. 11.

2. Not to be ignorant.

When they know within themselves they speak of that they do not well know, they would nevertheless seem to others to know of that which they may not well speak.

Bacon.

Not to know of things remote, but know That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom.

Milton, P. L.

In the other world there is no consideration that will sting our consciences more cruelly than this, that we did wickedly, when we knew to have done better; and chose to make ourselves miserable, when we understood the way to have been happy.

Tillotson.

They might understand those excellencies which they blindly valued, so as not to be farther imposed upon by bad pieces, and to know when nature was well imitated by the most able masters.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

3. To be informed.

The prince and Mr. Pains will put on our jerkins and aprons, and sir John must not know of it.

Shakespeare.

There is but one mineral body that we know of, heavier than common quicksilver.

Boyle.

4. To Know for. To have knowledge of. A colloquial expression.

He said the water itself was a good healthy water; but for the party that own'd it, he might have more diseases than he know for.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

5. To Know of. In Shakespeare, is to take cognisance of; to examine.

Fair Hernia, question your desires;
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether, if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a nun,
For aye to be in shady cloister mew'd. Shakespeare.

KNO'WABLE. adj. [from know.] Cognoscible; possible to be discovered or understood.

These are resolved into a confessed ignorance, and I shall not pursue them to their old asylum; and yet it may be, there is more known in these than in less acknowledged mysteries.

Glanville, Scepis.

'Tis plain, that under the law of works is comprehended also the law of nature, knowable by reason, as well as the law given by Moses. Locke.

These two arguments are the voices of nature, the unanimous suffrages of all real beings and substances created, that are naturally knowable without revelation.

Bentley.

KNO'WER.† n. s. [from know.] One who has skill or knowledge.

Hulot.

God, — the most certain and true knower of all things. Bryskett, Disc. of Civil Life, (1606), p. 172.

If we look on a vegetable, and can only say 'tis cold and dry, we are pitiful knowers.

Glanville.

I know the respect and reverence which in this address I ought to appear in before you, who are a general knower of mankind and poetry.

Southern.

KNO'WING. adj. [from know.]

1. Skilful; well instructed; remote from ignorance.

You have heard, and with a knowing ear,
That he, which hath our noble father slain,
Pursu'd my life.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

The knowingest of these have of late reformed their hypothesis.

Boyle.

What makes the clergy glorious is to be knowing in their profession, unsupported in their lives, active and laborious in their charges. South.

The necessity of preparing for the offices of religion was a lesson which the mere light and dictates of common reason, without the help of revelation, taught all the knowing and intelligent part of the world. South, Sermon.

Bellino, one of the first who was of any consideration at Venice, painted very dully, according to the manner of his time: he was very knowing both in architecture and perspective. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

All animals of the same kind, which form a society, are more knowing than others. Addison, Guardian.

2. Conscious; intelligent.

Could any but a knowing prudent cause
Begin such motions and assign such laws?
If the Great Mind had form'd a different frame,
Might not your wanton wit the system blame?

Blackmore.

KNOWING. n. s. [from know.] Know-ledge.

Let him be so entertain'd as suits gentlemen of your knowing to a stranger of his quality. Shakespeare.

KNOWINGLY. adv. [from knowing.] With skill; with knowledge.

He knowingly and wittingly brought evil into the world. Milton, Divine Dialogues.

They who were rather fond of it than knowingly admired it, might defend their inclination by their reason. Dryden.

To the private duties of the closet he repaired, as often as he entered upon any business of consequence: I speak knowingly. Atterbury.

KNOWLEDGE. n. s. [from know.]

1. Certain perception; indubitable apprehension.

Knowledge, which is the highest degree of the speculative faculties, consists in the perception of the truth of affirmative or negative propositions. Locke.

Do but say to me what I should do,
That in your knowledge may by me be done,
And I am prest unto it. Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice.

2. Learning; illumination of the mind.

Ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heaven. Shakespeare.

3. Skill in any thing.

Shipmen that have knowledge of the sea.
1 Kings, ix. 27.

4. Acquaintance with any fact or person.

The dog straight fawned upon his master for old knowledge. Sidney.

5. Cognisance; notice.

Why have I found grace in thine eyes, that thou shouldst take knowledge of me, seeing I am a stranger? Ruth, ii. 10.

A state's anger should not take
Knowledge either of fools or women.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

6. Information; power of knowing.

I pulled off my headpiece, and humbly entreated her pardon, or knowledge why she was cruel. Sidney.

TO KNOWLEDGE. v. a. To acknowledge; to avow. Not now in use; but formerly very common; and is moreover one of our oldest verbs.

Knowleche ye ech to othire youre sinnes.

Wicliffe, St. James, v.

I knowledge my follye, wherewith ye have with good right imbraided me. Sir T. Elyot, fol. 127. b.

The prophet Hosea tells us that God saith of the Jews, they have reigned, but not by me; which proveth plainly, that there are governments which God doth not avow: for though they be ordained by his secret providence, yet they are not *knowledge*d by his revealed will. Bacon, Holy War.

TO KNOWBBLE. v. a. [knipler, Danish.] To beat. Skinner.

KNUCKLE. n. s. [cnucl, Saxon; knockle, Dutch.]

1. The joints of the fingers protuberant when the fingers close.

Thus often at the Temple-stairs we've seen
Two tritons, of a rough athletic mien,
Sourly dispute some quarrel of the flood,
With knuckles bruised, and face besmeared in blood. Garth.

2. The knee joint of a calf.

Jelly, which they used for a restorative, is chiefly made of knuckles of veal. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. The articulation or joint of a plant.

Divers herbs have joints or knuckles, as it were stops in their germination; as gillyflowers, pinks, and corn. Bacon.

TO KNUCKLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To submit: I suppose from an odd custom of striking the under side of the table with the knuckles, in confession of an argumental defeat.

KNUCKLED. adj. [from knuckle.] Jointed.

The reed or cane is a watry plant, and groweth not but in the water: it hath these properties, that it is hollow, and it is knuckled both stalk and root; that, being dry, it is more hard and fragile than other wood; that it putteth forth no boughs, though many stalks out of one root. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

KNUFF. n. s. [perhaps corrupted from knave, or the same with chuff.] Dr. Johnson. — Rather a corruption of gnoff. See GNOFF.] A lout. An old word preserved in a rhyme of prediction.

The country knuffs, Hob, Dick, and Hick,
With clubs and clouted shoon,
Shall fill up Dussendale

Hayward.

KNUR. n. s. [knor, German, from

KNURLE. n. s. [knoll, Wachter; knorw, Norm. Fr. See also KNAR, and KNOR.] A knot; a hard substance.

Knurre or knob of a tree. Hulot.

The stony nodules found lodged in the strata, are called by the workmen knurs and knots. Woodward.

KNURLED. adj. [from knurle.] Set with knurles; knotty. Sherwood.

KNURRY. adj. [from knur.] Full of knots.

Now I am like the knurrie-bulked oke.

Drayton, Shep. Garland, (1593), p. 8.

KONED. † for konned, or conned, i. e. knew. Spenser. So kunne, to know.

Wicliffe. [kunnan, Goth.; cunnan, Sax.] Obsolete.

KORAN. n. s. [koran, Arab. See ALCORAN.] The book of the Mahometan precepts and credenda.

The koran, — far from supporting its arrogant claim to a supernatural work, sinks below the level of many compositions confessedly of human origin. Professor White, Sermon. vi.

KSAR. n. s. [See CZAR.] A Russian sovereign.

The Russian ksar

Milton, P. L.

TO KYD. † v. n. To know. See TO KID.

L, † A liquid consonant, which pre-serves always the same sound in English. In the Saxon it was aspirated; as, hlaf, loaf; hlæfeg, lady.

At the end of a monosyllable it is always doubled; as, shall; still; full, except after a diphthong; as, fail; feel; weal; cool. In a word of more syllables it is usually written single; as, channel; canal; tendril. It is sometimes put before e, and sounded feebly after it; as Bible; title.

Originally this letter, at the end of a monosyllable, was not doubled; al, ful, shal, &c. being the form of our old English,

It is sometimes mute; as, in alms, calf, chalk, and some other words.

LA. † interject. [corrupted by an effeminate pronunciation from lo; unless it be the French la. Dr. Johnson. — This is not the case; the expression is pure Saxon; la nu, lo now! “la hu opt, lo!” how oft." Ps. lxxvii. 45.] See; look; behold.

La you! if you speak ill of the devil,
How he takes it at heart. Shaksp. Tw. Night.

LAB.* n. s. A blab; a great talker; one that cannot keep a secret. One of our oldest words; and yet preserved in the Exmouth dialect. Chaucer uses also labbing for blabbing.

I am no labbe,
Ne though I say it, I n'am not lefe to gabbe.
Chaucer, Mill. Tale.

LAB'DANUM. n. s. A resin, of a strong but not unpleasant smell, and an aromatic, but not an agreeable taste. This juice exudates from a low spreading shrub in Crete. Hill.

To LA'BEEFY. v. a. [labefacio, Lat.] To weaken; to impair. Dict.

LAB'EL.† n. s. [labellum, Lat.] 1. The earliest sense seems to be that of a small slip of silk, or other materials; a kind of tassel; as, "a label hanging on each side of a mitre; labels hanging down on garlands or crowns; also jesses hanging at hawks' legs." Barret's Alveary, 1580. Thus Ainsworth translates "infula" a label hanging on each side of a mitre.

2. A small slip or scrap of writing. When wak'd, I found
This label on my bosom; whose containing
Is so from sense in hardness, that I can Make no collection of it. Shakspere, Cymb.

3. Any thing appendant to a larger writing. On the label of lead, the heads of St. Peter and St. Paul are impressed from the papal seal. Ayliffe, Parergon.

4. [In law.] A narrow slip of paper or parchment affixed to a deed or writing, in order to hold the appending seal. So also any paper, annexed by way of addition or explication to any will or testament, is called a label or codicil.

Harris.
God join'd my heart to Romeo's; thou our hands;
And ere this hand by thee to Romeo seal'd,
Shall be the label to another deed,
Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this shall slay them both.

Shakspere.
To LA'BEL.* v. a. [from the noun.] To affix a label on any thing, in order to distinguish it.

LA'BENT. adj. [labens, Lat.] Sliding; gliding; slipping. Dict.

LA'BIAL.† adj. [labialis, Lat.] Uttered by the lips.

The Hebrews have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which guttural.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Some particular affection of sound in its passage to the lips, will seem to make some composition in any vowel which is labial.

Holder, Elem. of Speech.
LA'BIATED. adj. [labium, Lat.] Formed with lips.

LABIODENTAL.† adj. [labium and dentalis.] Formed or pronounced by the co-operation of the lips and teeth.

P and B are labial: Ph and Bh, or F and V, are labiodental. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

LABO'RANT. n. s. [laborans, Lat.] A chemist. Not in use.

I can shew you a sort of fixt sulphur made by an industrious laborant. Boyle.

LA'BORATORY.† n. s. [laboratoire, Fr.] A chemist's work-room.

They had forged this new doctrine in the laboratories at Rome.

Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. 1. § 4.
It would contribute to the history of colours, if chemists would in their laboratory take a heedful notice, and give us a faithful account, of the colours observed in the steam of bodies, either sublimed or distilled. Boyle.

The flames of love will perform those miracles they of the furnace boast of, would they employ themselves in this laboratory. Decay of Chr. Piety.

LABORIOUS. adj. [laborieux, French; laboriosus, Lat.]

1. Diligent in work; assiduous.

That which makes the clergy glorious, is to be knowing in their professions, unspotted in their lives, active and laborious in their charges, bold and resolute in opposing seducers, and daring to look vice in the face; and, lastly, to be gentle, courteous, and compassionate to all. South.

A spacious cave within its farmost part,
Was hew'd and fashion'd by laborious art,
Through the hill's hollow sides. Dryden.

To his laborious youth consum'd in war,
And lasting age, adorn'd and crown'd with peace. Prior.

2. Requiring labour; tiresome; not easy. Do'st thou love watchings, abstinence, and toil, laborious virtues all? learn them from Cato. Addison.

LABORIOUSLY. adv. [from laborious.] With labour; with toil.

The folly of him who pumps very laboriously in a ship yet neglects to stop the leak. Decay of Chr. Piety.

I chuse laboriously to bear
A weight of woes, and breathe the vital air. Pope.

LABORIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from laborious.] 1. Toilsomeness; difficulty.

The parallel holds in the gainlessness, as well as the laboriousness of the work; those wretched creatures, buried in earth, and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore they digged; no more is the insatiate miser. Decay of Chr. Piety.

2. Diligence; assiduity.

Idleness is the emptiness, and business the fullness of the soul; and we all know that we may infuse what we will into an empty vessel, but a full one has no room for a farther infusion. In a word, idleness is that which sets all the capacities of the soul wide open, to let in the evil spirit, and to give both him, and all the villainies he can bring along with him, a free reception, and a full possession; whereas, on the contrary, laboriousness shuts the doors and stops all the avenues of the mind, whereby a temptation would enter, and (which is yet more) leaves no void room for it to dwell there, if by any accident it should chance to creep in. South, Sermon vi. 372.

LA'BOUR. n. s. [labour, French; labor, Lat.]

1. The act of doing what requires a painful exertion of strength, or wearisome perseverance; pains; toil; travail; work.

If I find her honest, I lose not my labour; if she be otherwise, it is labour well bestowed. Shakspere.

I sent to know your faith, lest the tempter have tempted you, and our labour be in vain. 1 Thess. iii. 5.

2. Work to be done.

Being a labour of so great difficulty, the exact performance thereof we may rather wish than look for. Hooker.

If you had been the wife of Hercules
Six of his labours you'd have done, and sav'd
Your husband so much sweat. Shakspere, Coriol.

3. Work done; performance.

4. Exercise; motion with some degree of violence. Moderate labour of the body conduces to the preservation of health, and curing many initial diseases; but the toil of the mind destroys health, and generates maladies. Harvey.

5. Childbirth; travail. Sith of women's labours thou hast charge,
And generation goodly doest enlarge,
Incline thy will to affect our wishful vow. Spenser.
Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of sudden shootings, and of grinding pain;
My throes come thicker, and my cries encrease'd,
Which with her hand the conscious nurse suppress'd. Dryden.

Not one woman of two hundred dies in labour. Gravatt.
His heart is in continual labour; it even travails with the obligation, and is in pangs till it be delivered. South, Sermon.

To LA'BOUR.† v. n. [laboro, Lat.]

1. To toil; to act with painful effort. When shall I come to the top of that same hill? — You do climb up it now; look how we labour. Shakspere.

For your highness' good I ever labour'd,
More than mine own. Shakspere, Hen. VIII.

Who is with him?
— None but the fool, who labours to out-jest
His heart-struck injuries. Shakspere, K. Lear.

Let more work be laid upon the men, that they may labour therein. Ezod. v. 9.

He is so touched with the memory of her benevolence and protection, that his soul labours for an expression to represent it. Notes on Pope's Odysseus.

Ephraim saluteth you, always labouring fervently for you in prayers, that ye may stand perfect. Col. iv. 12.

2. To do work; to take pains. A labouring man that is given to drunkenness, shall not be rich. Ecclesi. xix. 1.

That in the night they may be a guard to us, and labour on the day. Neh. iv. 22.

As a man had a right to all he could employ his labour upon, so he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of. Lacke.

3. To move with difficulty. The stone that labours up the hill,
Mocking the labourers toil, returning still,
Is love. Granville.

4. To be diseased with. [morbo laborare, Lat.] Not in use.

They abound with horse,
Of which one want our camp doth only labour. D. Jonson.

I was called to another, who in childbed laboured of an ulcer in her left hip. Wiseman.

5. To be in distress; to be pressed. To this infernal lake the fury flies, Here hides her hated head, and frees the labouring skies. Dryden.

Trumpets and drums shall fright her from the throne,
As sounding cymbals aid the labouring moon. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

This exercise will call down the favour of Heaven upon you, to remove those afflictions you now labour under from you. Wake, Prep. for Death.

6. To be in child-birth; to be in travail. There lay a log unlighted on the earth,
When she was labouring in the throes of birth;
For the unborn chief the fatal sisters came,
And rais'd it up, and toss'd it on the flame. Dryden, Ovid.

Here, like some furious prophet, Pindar rode,
And seem'd to labour with th' inspiring god. Pope.

7. In naval language, spoken of a ship, when every timber is put to the test, and the whole constitution of her architecture is in the full play of all its powers.

To LA'BOUR. v. a.

1. To work at; to move with difficulty; to form with labour; to prosecute with effort.

To use brevity, and avoid much labouring of the work is to be granted to him that will make an abridgement. 2 Mac.

Had you requir'd my helpful hand,
The artificer and art you might command,
To labour arms for Troy. Dryden, Æn.

An eager desire to know something concerning him, has occasioned mankind to labour the point, under these disadvantages, and turn on all hands to see if there were any thing left which might have the least appearance of information.

Pope, Ess. on Homer.

2. To beat; to belabour.

Take, shepherd, take a plant of stubborn oak,
And labour him with many a sturdy stroke.

Dryden.

LA'BOURER. n. s. [laboureur, French.]

1. One who is most employed in coarse and toilsome work.

If a state run most to noblemen and gentlemen, and that the husbandmen be but as their work-folks and labourers, you may have a good cavalry, but never good stable foot. Bacon.

The sun but seem'd 'the labourer of the year,
Each waxing moon supply'd her wat'ry store,

To swell those tides, which from the line did bear
Their brinful vessels to the Belgian shore.

Dryden.

Labourers and idle persons, children and stripplings, old men and young men, must have divers diets. Arbutnot.

Not balmy sleep to labourers faint with pain,
Not showers to larks, or sun-shine to the bee,
Are half so charming as thy sight to me. Pope.

Yet hence the poor are cloth'd, the hungry fed,
Health to himself, and to his infants bread,
The labourer bears. Pope.

The prince cannot say to the merchant, I have no need of thee; nor the merchant to the labourer, I have no need of thee. Swift.

2. One who takes pains in any employment.

Sir, I am a true labourer; I earn that I eat; got that I wear; owe no man hate; envy no man's happiness. Shakspeare.

The stone that labours up the hill,
Mocking the labourers toil, returning still,
Is love. Granville.

LA'BOURLESS.* adj. [labour and less.] Not laborious.

They intend not your precise abstinence from any light and labourless work.

Brerewood on the Sab. (1630), p. 48.

LA'BOUROUS.* adj. [from labour.] Our old word for laborious.

For husband's life is laborous hard.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

LA'BOUROUSLY.* adv. [from labourous.] Laboriously.

He labourously and studiously discussed controversies.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 168.

LA'BOURSOME.* adj. [from labour.] Made with great labour and diligence. Not now in use.

A skilful and laboursome husbandman,

Abp. Sandys, Serm. fol. 23. b.

Forget

Your laboursome and dainty trims, wherein
You made great Jove angry. Shakspeare, Cymb.

He hath, my lord, by laboursome petition.
Wrung from me my slow leave.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

This may suffice after all their laboursome scrutiny of the councils.

Milton, Animadv. Rem. Def.

LA'BRA. n. s. [Spanish.] A lip. Not used.

Word of denial in thy labras here;
Word of denial, froth and scum thou liest.

Shakspeare.

LA'BYRINTH.* n. s. [labyrinthus, Latin.]

1. A maze; a place formed with inextricable windings.

Suffolk, stay;
Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth;
There Minotaurs, and ugly treasurs lurk.

Shakspeare.

Words, which would tear
The tender labyrinth of a maid's soft ear. Donne.

My clamour tear
The ear's soft labyrinth, and cleft the air. Sandys.

The earl of Essex had not proceeded with his accustomed wariness and skill; but run into labyrinths, from whence he could not disentangle himself.

Clarendon.

My soul is on her journey; do not now
Divert, or lead her back, to lose herself
I 'the maze and winding labyrinths o' th' world.

Denham.

2. Formerly a distinguished ornament in the gardens of our ancestors.

Delightful bowers, to solace lovers true;
False labyrinths, fond runners' eyes to daze.

Spenser, F. Q.

LABYRI'NTIAN.* adj. [from labyrinth.]

Having inextricable turnings or windings; perplexed like a labyrinth.

His linen collar labyrinthian set,
Whose thousand double turnings never met.

Bp. Hall, Sat. iii. 7.

A contracted, subtle, and intricate face, full of quirks and turnings; a labyrinthian face.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

Mark, how the labyrinthian turns they take,
The circles intricate. Young, Night Th. 9.

LABU'RNUM.* n. s. A shrub [of the cytisus kind] that grows to the size of a tree.

The pale laburnum grac'd with yellow plumes.

Anon.

LAC. n. s.

Lac is usually distinguished by the name of a gum, but improperly, because it is inflammable and not soluble in water. We have three sorts of it, which are all the product of the same tree. 1. The stick lac. The seed lac. 3. The shell lac. Authors leave us uncertain whether this drug belongs to the animal or the vegetable kingdom. Hill.

LACE.* n. s. [lacet, French; laqueus, Latin. Dr. Johnson. — From the Sax. læccan, læczan, læccan, prehendere, apprehendere, to take hold of. Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. A string; a cord.

There the fond fly entangled, struggled long,
Himself to free thereout; but all in vain:
For striving more, the more in laces strong
Himself he tied, and wrapt his wings twain
In limy snares, the subtil loops among.

Spenser, Muirpotmos.

2. A snare; a gin.

The king had snared been in love's strong lace.

Fairfax.

3. A platted string, with which women fasten their clothes.

O, cut my lace, lest my heart cracking, it Break too. Shakspeare.

Doll ne'er was call'd to cut her lace,
Or throw cold water in her face. Swift.

4. Ornaments of fine thread curiously woven.

Our English dames are much given to the wearing of costly laces; and, if they be brought from Italy, they are in great esteem. Bacon.

5. Textures of thread, with gold or silver.

He wears a stuff, whose thread is coarse and round,

But trimm'd with curious lace. Herbert.

6. Sugar. A cant word: now out of use. Dr. Johnson. — Rather the addition of spirits.

He is forced every morning to drink his dish of coffee by itself, without the addition of the Spectator, that used to be better than lace to it.

Addison, Spect. No. 488.

If haply he the sect pursues,
That read and comment upon news;
He takes up their mysterious face,
He drinks his coffee without lace. Prior.

To LACE.* v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tie; to bind as with a cord.

Never man wist of pain,
But he were laced in love's chain,

Chaucer, Rom. R. 3178.

2. To fasten with a string run through eyelet holes.

I caused a fomentation to be made, and put on a laced sock, by which the weak parts were strengthened.

Wise man.

At this, for new replies he did not stay,
But lac'd his crested helm, and strode away.

Dryden.

These glitt'ring spoils, now made the victor's gain,
He to his body suits; but suits in vain:
Messapus' helm he finds among the rest,
And laces on, and wears the waving crest.

Dryden.

Like Mrs. Primly's great belly; she may lace it down before, but it burnishes on her hips.

Congreve.

When Jenny's stays are newly lac'd,
Fair Alma plays about her waist.

Prior.

3. To adorn with gold or silver textures sewed on.

It is but a night-gown in respect of yours;
cloth of gold and coats, and lac'd with silver.

Shakspeare.

4. To embellish with variegations.

Look, love, what envious streaks
Do lace the severing clouds in yonder east;
Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day
Stands tip-toe on the misty mountains' tops.

Shakspeare.

Then clap four slices of pilaster on't,
That, lac'd with bits of rustic, makes a front.

Pope.

5. To beat; whether from the form which L'Estrange uses, or by corruption of lash. Dr. Johnson. — It is no doubt from the sense of lace as a cord, a rope's end; and no corruption of lash.

L'Estrange's phrase is still in use among the common people.

I do not love to be lac'd in, when I go to lace a rascal. Two Angry Women of Abingdon, (1599.)

Go you, and find me out a man that has no curiosity at all, or I'll lace your coat for ye.

L'Estrange.

LACED Coffee.* See the last sense of the substantive lace. Coffee having spirits in it. I believe "laced tea" is yet an expression in the north of England.

Mr. Nisby is of opinion, that laced coffee is bad for the head.

Addison, Spect. No. 317.

LACED MUTTON. An old word for a whore. Ay, sir, I, a lost mutton, gave your letter to her, a laced mutton; and she, a laced mutton, gave me, a lost mutton, nothing for my labour.

Shakspeare.

LA'CEMAN. n. s. [lace and man.] One who deals in lace.

I met with a nonjurer, engaged with a laced man, whether the late French king was most like Augustus Caesar or Nero.

Addison, Spect.

LA'CEWOMAN.* n. s. [lace and woman.] She who makes or sells lace.

Mrs. Basset, the great laced woman of Cheapside, went foremost, and led the queen by the hand.

Strofford Letters, (under the Year 1635,) i. 306.

LA'CREABLE. adj. [from lacerate.] That may be torn.

Since the lungs are obliged to a perpetual commerce with the air, they must necessarily lie open to great damages, because of their thin and lacerable composure.

Harvey.

To LA'CRERATE.† v. a. [lacero, Latin; probably from the Greek λάρειν, to crack, whence λαρίξ, a rent, and λαρίζω, to tear asunder; loc, Celt. to cut, pain, or wound.] To tear; to rend; to separate by violence.

And my sons lacerate and rip up, viper-like, the womb that brought them forth.

Howell, Engl. Tears.

The heat breaks through the water, so as to lacerate and lift up great bubbles too heavy for the air to buoy up, and causeth boiling.

Derham, Physico-Theol.

Here lacerated friendship claims a tear.

Vanity of Human Wishes.

LACERATION. n. s. [from lacerate.] The act of tearing or rending; the breach made by tearing.

The effects are, extension of the great vessels, compression of the lesser, and lacerations upon small causes.

Arbuthnot.

LA'CRIMATE. adj. [from lacerate.] Tearing; having the power to tear.

Some depend upon the intemperance of the part ulcerated, others upon the continual afflux of lacerative humours.

Harvey on Consumptions.

LA'CHES.* n. s. pl. [laag, Dan. vallis.] Boggy places. Craven Dialect.

LA'CHRYMABLE.* adj. [lachrymabilis, Latin.] Lamentable. Cockeram.

This lachrymable vale of misery, in which we be born.

Ld. Morley, Tr. of Baccane, temp. Hen. VIII. Music can shew us which are the lachrymable notes; but can it demonstrate unto us, in our misery, how not to utter a lamentable voice?

Heywood, Hier. of Angels, (1635,) p. 158.

LA'CHRYMAL. adj. [lachrymal, French.] Generating tears.

It is of an exquisite sense, that, upon any touch, the tears might be squeezed from the lachrymal glands, to wash and clean it.

Cheyne, Philos. Principles.

LA'CHRYMARY. adj. [lachryma, Latin.] Containing tears.

How many dresses are there for each particular deity? what a variety of shapes in the ancient urns, lamps, and lachrymary vessels?

Addison.

LA'CHRYMATION.† n. s. [from lachryma.] The act of weeping, or shedding tears.

Cockeram.

LA'CHRYMATORY.† n. s. [lachrymatore, French.] A vessel in which tears are gathered to the honour of the dead.

Your unparalleled museum is furnished with a great variety of lamps, lacrimatories, &c.

Greenhill, Art of Embalming, (1705,) p. 308.

The learned Mr. Wise, late Radclivian librarian, had a glass lachrymatory, or rather a sepulchral aromatic phial, dug up between Noke and Wood-Eaton. Warton, Hist. of Kidlington, p. 57.

LACINIATED. adj. [from lacinia, Latin.] Adorned with fringes and borders.

To LA'CK.† v. a. [lacka, to be wanting, Gothic; laecken, to lessen, Dutch.]

1. To want; to need; to be without.

Every good and holy desire, though it lack the form, hath notwithstanding in itself the substance, and with him the force of prayer, who regardeth the very moanings, groans, and sighs of the heart.

Hooker.

A land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness; thou shalt not lack any thing in it.

Deut. viii. 9.

One day we hope thou shalt bring back, Dear Bolingbroke, the justice that we lack.

Daniel.

Intreat they may; authority they lack.

2. To blame; to find fault with. [Su. Goth. lacka, to blame.] Obsolete.

Ye have discriven so, And lacke and praise it bothe two.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 4804.

To LA'CK. v. n.

1. To be in want.

The lions do lack and suffer hunger.

Ps. Common Prayer.

2. To be wanting.

Peradventure there shall lack five of the fifty righteous; wilt thou destroy all the city for lack of five?

There was nothing lacking to them: David recovered all.

1 Sam. xxx. 19.

That which was lacking on your part, they have supplied.

1 Cor. xvi. 17.

LACK.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Want; need; failure. Rarely found in the plural number.

Medicine to reform any small lacks in a prince, or to cure any little griefs in a government.

Homilies, Sermon Part. 1. Against Rebellion.

In the Scripture there neither wanteth any thing, the lack whereof might deprive us of life.

Hooker.

Many that are not mad

Have sure more lack of reason.

Shakspeare.

He was not able to keep that place three days, for lack of victuals.

Knolles.

The trenchant blade, toledo trusty,

For want of fighting was grown rusty,

And eat into itself, for lack

Of somebody to hew and hack.

Hudibras.

2. A term in India applied to money; as a lack of, or one hundred thousand, rupees. Written also leck.

A hundred thousand rupees make one leck, a hundred leck make one crou.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 45.

LACKADA'Y.* interj. A frequent colloquial term, implying alas; most probably from the forgotten verb lack, to blame. See the second sense of the active verb LACK. The expression therefore may be considered, as blaming, finding fault with, the day, on which the event mentioned happened.

LA'CKBRAIN. n. s. [lack and brain.] One that wants wit.

What a lackbrain is this? Our plot is as good a plot as ever was laid.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

LA'CKER.* n. s. [from lack.] One who is wanting.

The lack of one may cause the wreck of all; Although the lackers were terrestrial gods, Yet will they ruling reel, or reeling fall.

Davies, Wiliam's Pilgrimage, K. 2.

LA'CKER. n. s. A kind of varnish, which, spread upon a white substance, exhibits a gold colour.

To LA'CKER. v. a. [from the noun.] To smear over with lack.

Cato's long wig, flower'd gown, and lack'd chair.

Pope.

LA'CKEY.† n. s. [lacquais, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — Sueth. olim lacka, currere, to run; M. Goth. laikan; Su. Goth. leka, ludere, to scoff, to make game of. Serenius. But to this etymology of Serenius must be added that of Roquefort, Supplem. Gloss. p. 16. viz. "Allaquais, &c. Espèce de soldats, sorte d'aventuriers desquels Brantome, Capitaines Franc. tom. iv. p. 46, dit, Car avant ce nom aventurier pratiqué, aucuns appeloient les soldats lacquais, et plus anciennement allaquais; c'est à dire, gens à pied, allans et marchans près leurs capitaines, comme aujourd'hy nous appelons ceux, qui vont en devant ou après nous, lacquais." An attending servant; a foot-boy.

They would shame to make me

Wait else at door: a fellow counsellor,

'Mong boys, and grooms, and lackeys!

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Though his youthful blood be fir'd with wine, He's cautious to avoid the coach and six, And on the lackeys will not quarrel cry.

Dryden, Juv.

Lackeys were never so saucy and pragmatical as they are now-a-days,

Addison, Spect.

To LA'CKEY. v. a. [from the noun.] To attend servilely. I know not whether Milton has used this word very properly.

This common body,

Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream,

Goes to, and back, lackeying the varying tide,

To rot itself with motion.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

So dear to heaven is saintly chastity,

That when a soul is found sincerely so,

A thousand liveried angels lackey her,

Driving far off each thing of sin and guilt.

Milton, Comus.

To LA'CKEY.† v. n. To act as a foot-boy; to pay servile attendance.

To be made an ordinary process, to lackey up and down for fees.

Bacon, on the Edif. of the Ch. of Engl.

Of have I servants seen on horses ride,

The free and noble lackey by their side.

Sandys.

Our Italian translator of the Æneis is a foot poet: he lackeys by the side of Virgil, but never mounts behind him.

Dryden.

LA'CKLINEN. adj. [lack and linen.] Wanting shirts.

You poor, base, rascally, cheating, lacklinen mate; away, you mouldy rogue, away.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

LACKLU'STRE. adj. [lack and lustre.] Wanting brightness.

And then he drew a dial from his poke,

And looking on it with lacklustre eye,

Says very wisely, It is ten a clock.

Shakspeare.

LACONICAL.* adj. [laconicus, Latin, laconique, Fr. This word is old in our language; but it is not noticed by Dr. Johnson. Laconick he has given with an example only from Pope; but that word was also in use long before Pope wrote. The expression, as Dr. Johnson has observed under laconick, is from Lacones, the Spartans, who used few words. They are said to have answered the letter of Philip, in which he threatened that if he came near their city he would destroy it, with merely the word if. Short; concise; brief; pithy.

The learned Plutarch in his laconical apophthegms tells of a sophister, that made a long and tedious oration in praise of Hercules.

Harrington, Apolog. of Poetrie.

His head had now felt the razor, his back the rod: all that laconical discipline pleased him well; which another, being condemned to, would justly account a torment. Dp. Hall, Epist. D. I. E. 5.

LACONICALLY.† adv. [from laconical.] Briefly; concisely.

Alexander Nequam, a man of great learning, and desirous to enter into religion there, writ to the abbot laconically. Camden, Rem.

Patient meekness takes injuries like pills, not chewing but swallowing them down, laconically suffering and silently passing them over.

Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 12.

LACONICK.† adj. [laconicus, Lat. laconique, Fr.] Short; brief.

They [metaphors] commonly thrive better in the ground of a large and open style than in a laconick and strict one.

Instruct. for Oratory, (Oxford, 1682), p. 56.

His sense was strong, and his style laconick.

Welwood's Mem. p. 83.

I grow laconick even beyond laconicism; for sometimes I return only yes, or no, to questionary or petitionary epistles of half a yard long.

Pope to Swift.

LACONISM.† n. s. [laconisme, Fr. laconismus, Lat.] A concise stile: called by Pope laconicism, in his Letter to Swift, cited under laconick.

The hand of Providence writes often by abbreviations, hieroglyphicks, or short characters, which, like the laconism on the wall [Daniel, iii. 25.] are not to be made out but by a hint or key from that Spirit which indicted them.

Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 25.

As the language of the face is universal, so it is very comprehensive: no laconism can reach it. It is the short-hand of the mind, and crowds a great deal in a little room.

Collier of the Aspect.

LACTAGE.* n. s. [lac, lactis, Lat.] Producing milk from animals yielding milk.

It is thought that the offering of Abel, who sacrificed of his flocks, was only wool, the fruits of his shearing; and milk, or rather cream, a part of his lactage.

Shuckford on the Creation, i. 79.

LACTARY.† adj. [lactarius, Lat.] Milky; full of juice like milk.

From lactary, or milky plants, which have a white and lacteous juice dispersed through every part, there arise flowers blue and yellow.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

LACTARIUM. n. s. [lactarium, Lat.] A dairy house.

LACTATION. n. s. [lacto, Lat.] The act or time of giving suck.

LACTEAL.† adj. [from lac, Lat.] Milky; conveying chyle of the colour of milk.

As the food passes, the chyle, which is the nutritive part, is separated from the excrementitious by the lacteal veins; and from thence conveyed into the blood.

Locke.

LACTEAL. n. s. The vessel that conveys chyle.

The mouths of the lacteals may permit aliment, acrimious or not sufficiently attenuated, to enter in people of lax constitutions, whereas their sphincters will shut against them in such as have strong fibres.

Arbuthnot.

LACTEAN.* adj. [lacteus, Lat.] Milky; having the colour of milk.

This lactean whiteness ariseth from a great number of little stars constricted in that part of heaven, flying so swiftly from the sight of our eyes, that we can perceive nothing but a confused light.

Mason, Astronom. Cards, p. 13.

LACTEUS.† adj. [lacteus, Lat.]

1. Milky.

Though we leave out the lacteous circle, yet are there more by four than Philo mentions.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Lactean; conveying chyle.

The lungs are suitable for respiration, and the lacteous vessels for the reception of the chyle.

Bentley.

LACTESCENCE. n. s. [lactesco, Lat.] Tendency to milk, or milky colour.

This lactescence does commonly ensue, when wine, being impregnated with gums, or other vegetable concretions, that abound with sulphureous corpuscles, fair water is suddenly poured upon the solution.

Boyle on Colours.

LACTESCENT.† adj. [lactescens, Lat.] Producing milk, or a white juice.

Amongst the pot-herbs are some lactescens plants, as lettuce and endive, which contain a wholesome juice.

Arbuthnot.

LACTIFEROUS.† adj. [lac and fero.] What conveys or brings milk.

He makes the breasts to be nothing but glandules, made up of an infinite number of little knots, each whereof hath its excretory vessel, or lactiferous duct.

Ray on the Creation.

LAD. n. s. [leobe, Saxon, which commonly signifies people, but sometimes, says Mr. Lye, a boy.]

1. A boy; a stripling, in familiar language.

We were

Two lads, that thought there was no more behind, But such a day to-morrow as to-day, And to be boy eternal.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

The poor lad who wants knowledge, must set his invention on the rack, to say something where he knows nothing.

Locke.

Too far from the ancient forms of teaching several good grammarians have departed, to the great detriment of such lads as have been removed to other schools.

Watts.

2. A boy; a young man, in pastoral language.

For grief whereof the lad would after joy, But pin'd away in anguish, and self-will'd annoy.

Spenser.

The shepherd lad,

Whose offspring on the throne of Judah sat So many ages.

Milton, P. R.

LAD.* The ancient preterite of lead; now led.

No joy

In all his life, which afterwards he lad, He ever tasted.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. iii. 2.

She departed and went up into a hyghe battilment, and ladde with her xii gentylwomen.

Hist. of K. Arthur, B. xvi. ch. 12.

LADDER.† n. s. [hlebe, Sax. Uethring, Cym. scala, q. d. ledare, a Su. Goth. leda, ducere, to lead: a Celt. Uethr, clivus, Icel. hlidr, latus, unde et Germ. hlettern, klettern, scandere, to mount. Wachter, and Serenius.]

1. A frame made with steps placed between two upright pieces.

Whose compost is rotten, and carried in time, And spread as it should be, thrift's ladder may climb.

Tusser.

Now streets grow throng'd, and busy as by day, Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire; Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play, And some more bold mount ladders to the fire.

Dryden.

Easy in words thy style, in sense sublime; 'Tis like the ladder in the patriarch's dream, Its foot on earth, its height above the skies.

Prior.

I saw a stage erected about a foot and a half from the ground, capable of holding four of the inhabitants with two or three ladders to mount it.

Swift, Gulliver Trav.

2. Any thing by which one climbs.

Then took she help to her of a servant near about her husband, whom she knew to be of a hasty ambition; and such a one, who wanting true sufficiency to raise him, would make a ladder of any mischief.

Sidney.

I must climb her window, The ladder made of cords.

Shakespeare.

Northumberland, thou ladder, by the which My cousin Bolingbroke ascends my throne.

Shakespeare.

Lowliness is young ambition's ladder, Whereto the climber upward turns his face.

Shakespeare.

3. A gradual rise.

Endow'd with all these accomplishments, we leave him in the full career of success, mounting fast towards the top of the ladder ecclesiastical, which he hath a fair probability to reach.

Swift.

LADE. n. s.

Lade is the mouth of a river, and is derived from the Saxon labe, which signifies a purging or discharging; there being a discharge of the waters into the sea, or into some greater river.

Gibson's Camden.

TO LADE. v. a. preter. laded; and part. passive, laded or laden. [from hlaban, Saxon.] It is now commonly written load.

1. To load; to freight; to burthen.

And they laded their asses with corn, and departed thence.

Genesis, xlii. 26.

The experiment which sheweth the weights of several bodies in comparison with water, is of use in lading of ships, and shewing what burthen they will bear.

Bacon.

The vessels, heavy laden, put to sea With prosperous winds; a woman leads the way.

Dryden.

Though the peripatetic doctrine does not satisfy, yet it is as easy to account for the difficulties he charges on it, as for those his own hypothesis is laden with.

Locke.

2. [hlaban, to draw, Saxon.] To heave out; to throw out.

He chides the sea that sunders him from them, Saying, he'll lade it dry to have his way.

Shakespeare.

They never let blood; but say, if the pot boils too fast there is no need of lading out any of the water, but only of taking away the fire; and so they allay all heats of the blood by abstinence, and cooling herbs.

Temple.

If there be springs in the slate marl, there must be help to lade or pump it out.

Mortimer.

TO LADE.* v. n. [hlaban, Sax.] To draw water.

She did not think best to lade at the shallow channel, but runs rather to the well-head, where she may dip and fill the firkins at once with ease.

Dp. Hall, Contempl. B. 2.

TO LADIFY.* v. a. [lady, and fo, Lat.] To make a lady of.

Your fortune,
Or rather your husband's industry, advanc'd you
To the rank of merchant's wife: He made a knight,
And your sweet mistress-ship ladify'd, you wore
Satin on solemn days, a chain of gold,
A velvet hood.

Moslinger, City Madam.

LAD'ING. n. s. [from lade.] Weight; burden.

Some we made prize, while others burnt and rent
With their rich lading to the bottom went. Waller.
The storm grows higher and higher, and threatens the utter loss of the ship: there is but one way to save it, which is, by throwing its rich lading overboard. South.

It happened to be foul weather, so that the mariners cast their whole lading overboard to save themselves. L'Estrange.

Why should he sink where nothing seem'd to press?

His lading little, and his ballast less. Swift.

LAD'KIN.* n. s. [from lad.] A youth.

Tharrhon, that young ladkin light,
He pray'd this aged sire for to reveal
What way — we may escape.

More, Life of the Soul, iii. 31.

LAD'LE. n. s. [hlæble, Sax. from hlaban;
leauh, Erse.]

1. A large spoon; a vessel with a long handle, used in throwing out any liquid from the vessel containing it.

Some stir'd the molten ore with ladles great.

Spenser.

When the materials of glass have been kept long in fusion, the mixture casts up the superfluous salt, which the workmen take off with ladles. Boyle.

A ladle for our silver dish.

Is what I want, is what I wish.

Prior.

2. The receptacles of a mill wheel, into which the water falling turns it.

LAD'LE-FUL. n. s. [ladle and full.]

If a footman be going up with a dish of soup, let the cook with a ladle-ful dribble his livery all the way up stairs. Swift.

LADY.† n. s. [hlæpɪz, hlapɪz, hlapɪa, Saxon; supposed by Verstegan and others to be from hlaf, Sax. hlaf; Goth.
bread, and dian, to serve or distribute;
because the mistress of the family used to distribute the bread to the domesticks and guests; the laford or lord allowing the food, the leafdian or lady seeing that it was duly served. To this Mr. H.
Tooke opposes hlaf as the past participle of hlupan, to raise; and thence pronounces hlapɪb, or lord, a word compounded of hlaf, raised, and opb, origin or birth, meaning therefore "high-born, of an exalted origin;" and hlapɪz, lady, as merely lofty, that is, raised or exalted; her birth being out of the question, as the wife follows the condition of the husband. Serenius, however, notices the Gothick lafda or lafdi,
a mistress, "hera, domina;" and Dr.
Jamieson, from an old Icelandick work,
the following words of the serpent to Eve: "Thu ert lafde myn, en Adam er lavardr min: Thou art my lady, and Adam is my lord." See also LORD.]

1. A woman of high rank: the title of lady properly belongs to the wives of knights, of all degrees above them, and to the daughters of earls, and all of higher ranks.

I am much afraid, my lady, his mother, play'd false with a smith. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

VOL. II.

I would thy husband were dead; I would make thee my lady. — I your lady, Sir John? alas, I should be a pitiful lady.

Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

I am sorry my relation to so deserving a lady,
should be any occasion of her danger and affliction.

King Charles.

2. An illustrious or eminent woman.

O foolish fairy's son, what fury mad
Hath thee incens'd to haste thy doleful fate?

Were it not better I that lady had,

Than that thou hadst repented it too late? Spenser.

Before Homer's time this great lady was scarce heard of. Raleigh.

May every lady an Evadne prove,
That shall divert me from Aspasia's love. Waller.

Shou'd I shun the dangers of the war,
With scorn the Trojans wou'd reward my pains,
And their proud ladies with their sweeping trains.

Dryden.

We find on medals the representations of ladies, that have given occasion to whole volumes on the account only of a face. Addison on Anc. Medals.

3. A word of complaisance used of women.

Say, good Caesar,

That I some lady trifles have reserv'd,
Immortal toys, things of such dignity
As we great modern friends withal.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

I hope I may speak of women without offence to the ladies. Guardian.

4. Mistress, importing power and dominion; as, lady of the manor.

Of all these bounds, even from this line to this,
With shadowy forests, and with champaigns rich'd,
With plenteous rivers, and wide-skirted meads,
We make thee lady. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

5. LADY in the Straw. An expression used to signify the woman who is brought to bed; derived from the circumstance that all beds were anciently stuffed with straw; so that it is synonymous with saying "the lady in bed," or that is confined to her bed. Brand, Popular Antiq. Hence perhaps the name of the herb "lady-bedstraw."

LADY-BEDSTRAW.† n. s. [Gallium.] A plant of the stellate kind. Miller.

Botanists — show a very particular regard to the fair sex — as we may well conclude from so many names they give to plants; ladys fingers, ladys laces, ladys linen, maiden herb, ladys bedstraw, ladys slipper, &c. Stukely, Palæogr. Sacra, p. 25.

LADY-BIRD.† } n. s. A small red insect

LADY-BUG. } n. s. A small red insect

LADY-COW. } n. s. vaginopenneous.

LADY-FLY. }

Fly lady-bird, north, south, or east or west,

Fly where the man is found that I love best. Gay.

This lady-fly I take from off the grass,

Whose spotted back might scarlet red surpass.

Gay.

It is extremely unlucky to kill a cricket, a lady- bug, a swallow, &c. Grose, Popular Superstitions.

LADY-DA'Y. n. s. [lady and day.] The day on which the annunciation of the blessed virgin is celebrated.

LADY-LIKE.† adj. [lady and like.]

1. Soft; delicate; elegant.

With fingers lady-like.

Warner, Albion's Engl. ch. 9.

Her tender constitution did declare,

Too lady-like a long fatigue to bear. Dryden.

2. Affected; effeminate.

Some of these so rigid, yet very spruce and lady-like preachers, think fit to gratify as their own persons, so their kind hearers and spectators.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 179.

LADY-MANTLE. n. s. [Alchimilla.] A plant. Miller.

LADYSHIP.† n. s. [from lady.]

1. Originally, the state of a lady.

I will do thee such ladyship,
Whereof thou shalt for evermo
Be rich. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 6.

2. The title of a lady.

Madam, he sends your ladyship this ring.

Shakspeare.

If they be nothing but mere statesmen,
Your lady-ship shall observe their gravity,
And their reservedness, their many cautions,
Fitting their persons. B. Jonson, Catiline.

I the wronged pen to please,
Make it my humble thanks express
Unto your ladyship in these. Waller.

'Tis Galla; let her ladyship but peep.

Dryden, Juu.

LADY'S-SLIPPER. n. s. [Calceolus.] A plant. Miller.

LADY'S-SMOCK. n. s. [Cardamine.] A plant. Miller.

When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And lady-smocks all silver-white,
Do paint the meadows with delight. Shakspeare.

See here a boy gathering lilies and lady-smocks,
and there a girl cropping culverkeys and cowslips,
all to make garlands. Warton, Angler.

LAG.† adj. [lænɔz, Saxon, long; lagg,
Swedish, the end.]

1. Coming behind; falling short.

I could be well content

To entertain the lag end of my life

With quiet hours. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. 1.

The slowest footed who come lag, supply the show of a rearward. Carew, Survey.

I am some twelve or fourteen moonshines lag of a brother. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. Sluggish; slow; tardy. It is out of use, but retained in Scotland, Dr. Johnson says. It was thus well employed, in his own time, (he might have added to the examples from Shakspeare and Dryden,) by the author of The Grave.
And it is still retained in our colloquial
language.

He, poor man, by your first order died,

And that a winged Mercury did bear;

Some tardy cripple had the countermand,

That came too lag to see him buried.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

We know your thoughts of us, that laymen are lag souls, and rubbish of remaining clay,

Which Heaven, grown weary of more perfect work,

Set upright with a little puff of breath,

And bid us pass for men. Dryden, Don Sebast.

Even the lag flesh

Rests too in hope of meeting once again

Its better half, never to sunder more:

Nor shall it hope in vain. R. Blair, The Grave.

3. Last; long delayed.

Pack to their old play-fellows; there I take

They may, cum privilegio, wear away

The lag end of their lewdness, and be laugh'd at.

Shakspeare.

LAG. n. s.

1. The lowest class; the rump; the lag end.

The rest of your foes, O gods, the senators of Athens, together with the common lag of people, what is amiss in them, make suitable for destruction. Shakspeare.

2. He that comes last, or hangs behind.

The last, the lag of all the race. Dryden, Virg.

What makes my ram the lag of all the flock.

Pope.

To LAG. v. n.

1. To loiter; to move slowly.

She pass'd, with fear and fury wild;
The nurse went lagging after with the child.

Dryden.

The remnant of his days he safely past,
Nor found they lagg'd too slow, nor flow'd too fast.

Prior.

2. To stay behind; not to come in.

Behind her far away a dwarf did lag.

Spenser, F. Q.

I shall not tag behind, nor err

The way, thou leading.

Milton, P. L.

The knight himself did after ride,
Leading Crowdero by his side,
And tow'd him, if he lagg'd behind,
Like boat against the tide and wind.

Hudibras.

If he finds a fairy lag in light,
He drives the witch before, and lashes into night.

Dryden.

She hourly press'd for something new;

Ideas came into her mind

So fast, his lessons logg'd behind.

Swift.

To LAG.* v. a. To slacken; to move slowly.

The hunter with an arrow wounded him in the leg, which made him to halt and lag his flight.

Heywood, Hier. of Angels, (1635), p. 98.

LA'GGARD.* adj. [from lag.] Backward; sluggish; slow.

Thy humblest reed could more prevail,

Had more of strength, diviner rage,

Than all which charms this laggard age.

Coltins, Ode, xii.

LA'GGER. n. s. [from lag.] A loiterer; an idler; one that loiters behind.

LAT'CAL.* adj. [laïque, Fr. laïque, Lat. laicus, Græco-barb. from laos, the people.] Belonging to the laity, or people as distinct from the clergy.

In all ages the clerical will flatter as well as the laical.

Camden.

It is amazing to see the strange absurdities committed by the clergy of the middle ages, in adopting the laical character.

Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 345.

LA'ICK.* n. s. [laïque, Fr.] A layman; one of the people distinct from the clergy.

The words—teach a command for the use of both kinds, as well to laicks as priest.

Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. (1633), p. 184.

LA'ICK.* adj. Belonging to the laity; denoting the people as distinct from the clergy.

It reflects to the disrepute of our ministers also, that—they should be still frequented with such an unprincipled, unedified, and laick rabble.

Milton, Areopagitica.

LAI'D. Preterite participle of lay.

Money laid up for the relief of widows and fatherless children.

2 Mac. iii. 10.

A scheme which was writ some years since, and laid by to be ready on a fit occasion.

Swift.

LA'IDLY.* adj. [laëlic, Sax. laid, Fr. leed, Su. Goth.] Ugly; loathsome; foul.

North of England.

To LAIK.* See To LAKE.

LAIN.* Preterite participle of lie; and formerly written lien.

Mary seeth two angels in white, sitting, the one at the head, and the other at the feet, where the body of Jesus had lain.

St. John, xx. 12.

The parcels had lain by, before they were opened, between four and five years.

Boyle.

LAI'R.* n. s. [lai, in French, signifies a wild sow, or a forest: the derivation is easy in either sense; or from leger,

Dutch. Dr. Johnson.—The Teutonic laegher is the bed of wild beasts; and is to be referred to the Gothic laeger, and ligr, a bed, from ligga, to lie down.]

1. The couch of a boar or wild beast.

Out of the ground uprose,
As from his lair, the wild beast, where he wons
In forest wild, in thicket brake, or den.

Milton, P. L.

But range the forest, by the silver side
Of some cool stream, where nature shall provide
Green grass and fat'ning clover for your fare,
And mossy caverns for your noon-tide lair.

Dryden, Virg.

2. [From lea, Sax. pascuum, campus.] Pasture; the ground.

More hard for hungry steed t' abstain from pleasant lare.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. viii. 29.

This gyant's sonne that lies there on the laire

An headlesse heap.

Ibid. 51.

Have the winters been so set

To raine and snow, [that] they have wet

All his driest laire?

W. Browne.

3. Soil; dung. An Essex and Suffolk word, according to Grose, who writes it laier; a northern word too, in the sense of mire and dirt, and written lair by Mr. Brockett. [leir, Icel. ler, Su. Goth.]

LAIRD. n. s. [hlaford, Saxon.] The lord of a manor in the Scottish dialect; which is the definition of Dr. Johnson. This is its old meaning, Mr. Brockett observes; but it is now a common name in Northumberland and Cumberland for a proprietor of land, without any relation to manorial rights.

Shrive but their title, and their moneys poize,
A laird and twenty pence pronounc'd with noise,
When constru'd but for a plain yeoman go,
And a good sober two pence, and well so.

Cleaveland.

LA'ITER.* } n. s. [legh-tyd, Teut. the time
LA'WTER. } of laying.] The whole quantity of eggs which a hen lays, before she incubates. Craven Dial. Brockett's N. C. Words, and Jennings's W. C. Words. The northern form and pronunciation of the word is lafter, as well as lawter; the western laiter is more correct.

LA'ITY. n. s. [laos.]

1. The people, as distinguished from the clergy.

An humble clergy is a very good one, and an humble laity too, since humility is a virtue that equally adorns every station of life.

Swift.

2. The state of a layman.

The more usual cause of this deprivation is a mere laity, or want of holy orders.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

LAKE.* n. s. [lac, laca, Saxon; lac, Fr. lacus, Lat.]

1. A large diffusion of inland water.

He adds the running springs and standing lakes,
And bounding banks for winding rivers makes.

Dryden.

2. Small plash of water.

3. A middle colour, betwixt ultramarine and vermilion, yet it is rather sweet than harsh. It is made of cochineal. [lacque, French; ruby or rose colour.]

Dryden.

To LAKE.* v. n. [laikan, Gothick and Saxon; and the English word is sometimes written laik. Thus laiker, in the Cumberland dialect, a person engaged in sport. And thus laikings or lakings, playthings for children.] To play. Used in the north of England.

Taller, No. 266.

LA'MBATIVE. n. s. A medicine taken by licking with the tongue.

I stich'd up the wound, and let him blood in the arm, advising a lambative, to be taken as necessity should require.

Wiseman, Surgery.

LA'MKIN. n. s. [from lamb.] A little lamb.

'Twixt them both they not a lambkin left,
And when lambs fail'd, the old sheeps' lives they reft.

Pan, thou god of shepherds all,

Which of our tender lambkins takeest keep.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Clean as young lambkins, or the goose's down,
And like the goldfinch in her Sunday gown.

Gay.

LA'MBLIKE.* adj. [lamb and like.]

1. Mild; innocent as a lamb.

Put lamblike mildness to your lion's strength.

Trag. of Solomon and Perseda, (1599.)

2. Resembling the form of a lamb.

What else doth the beast arising out of the earth portend by his lamblike horns but anticrist?

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, (1616), p. 161.

LAMBES-WOOL.* n. s. [lamb and wool.] Dr. Johnson.—“The first day of November was dedicated to the angel presiding over fruits, seeds, &c. and was therefore named la mas ubhal, that is, the day of the apple fruit; and being pronounced lamasool, the English have corrupted the name to lambswool.” Col. Vallancey, Collect. de Reb. Hibern. iii. 441. Lambswool is said to have been often met with in Ireland. See Brand's Popul. Antiq. i. 312.] Ale mixed with sugar, nutmeg, and the pulp of roasted apples.

Those that commend use of apples in this kind of melancholy; lambswool some call it.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 404.

A cup of lamb's-wool they drank to him there.
Song of the King and the Miller.

LAM'BENT. adj. [lambens, Lat.] Playing about; gliding over without harm.

From young Iulus head
A lambent flame arose, which gently spread
Around his brows, and on his temples fed.

Dryden.

His brows thick fogs, instead of glories, grace,
And lambent dulness played around his face.

Dryden.

LAMDOU'DAL. n. s. [λᾰμδα and ἰδοος]
Having the form of the letter lamda or A.

The course of the longitudinal sinus down through the middle of it, makes it advisable to trepan at the lower part of the os parietale, or at least upon the lamdooldal suture. Sharp, Surgery.

2. Hobbling; not smooth: alluding to the feet of a verse.

Our authors write,
Whether in prose, or verse, 'tis all the same;
The prose is fustian, and the numbers lame.

Dryden.

3. Imperfect; unsatisfactory.

Shrubs are formed into sundry shapes, by moulding them within, and cutting them without; but they are but lame things, being too small to keep figure. Bacon.

Swift, who could neither fly nor hide,
Came sneaking to the chariot side;
And offer'd many a lame excuse,
He never meant the least abuse.

Swift.

TO LAME. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make lame; to cripple.

I never heard of such another encounter, which lames report to follow it, and undoes description to do it. Shakespeare.

The son and heir

Affronted once a cock of noble kind,

And either lami'd his legs, or struck him blind.

Dryden.

If you happen to let the child fall, and lame it, never confess. Swift.

LAM'ELLAR.* adj. [lamella, Lat.] Composed of thin scales or flakes.

Calcareous marl is — sometimes of a compact, sometimes of a lamellar texture; often so thin as to be called paper-marl. Kirwan on Manures, p. 13.

LAM'ELLATED. adj. [lamella, Lat.] Covered with films or plates.

The lamellated antennae of some insects are surprisingly beautiful, when viewed through a microscope. Derham.

LAM'ELY. adv. [from lame.]

1. Like a cripple; without natural force or activity.

Those muscles become callous, and, having yielded to the extension, the patient makes shift to go upon it, though lamely. Wiseman, Surgery.

2. Imperfectly; without a full or complete exhibition of all the parts.

Look not every lineament to see,
Some will be cast in shades, and some will be
So lamely drawn, you scarcely know 'tis she.

Dryden.

3. Weakly; unsteadily; poorly.

LAM'ENESS. n. s. [from lame.]

1. The state of a cripple; loss or inability of limbs.

Let blindness, lameness come; are legs and eyes

Of equal value to so great a prize? Dryden, Jew.

Lameness kept me at home. Digby to Pope.

2. Imperfection; weakness.

If the story move, or the actor help the lameness of it with his performance, either of these are sufficient to effect a present liking.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

TO LAME'NT. v. n. [lamentor, Lat. lamentor, Fr.] To mourn; to wail; to grieve; to express sorrow.

Ye shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice. St. John.

Jeremiah lamented for Josiah, and all the singing-men and women spake of Josiah in their lamentations. 2 Chron.

Far less I now lament for one whole world

Of wicked sons destroy'd, than I rejoice

For one man found so perfect and so just,

That God vouchsafes to raise another world

From him. Milton, P. L.

TO LAME'NT. v. a. To bewail; to mourn; to bemoan; to express sorrow for.

As you are weary of this weight,

Rest you, while I lament king Henry's corse.

Shakespeare.

The pair of sages praise;

One pitied, one condemn'd the woful times,

One laugh'd at follies, one lamented crimes.

Dryden.

LAME'NT. n. s. [lamentum, Lat. from the verb.]

1. Sorrow audibly expressed; lamentation; grief uttered in complaints or cries.

We, long ere our approaching, heard within

Noise, other than the sound of dance, or song!

Torment, and loud lament, and furious rage.

Milton, P. L.

The loud laments arise

Of one distress'd, and mastiffs' mingled cries.

Dryden.

2. Expression of sorrow.

To add to your laments,

Wherewith you now bedew king Henry's hearse,

I must inform you of a dismal fight. Shakespeare.

LAM'ENTABLE. adj. [lamentabilis, Lat. lamentable, Fr. from lame.]

1. To be lamented; causing sorrow.

The lamentable change is from the best;

The worst returns to laughter. Shakespeare.

2. Mournful; sorrowful; expressing sorrow.

That tears my entrails? I'm bewitch'd; seize on her. Massinger, Virg. Martyr.

LAM'INA.† n. s. [Lat.] Thin plate; one coat laid over another.

The head [of the snake] is covered with twelve principal laminae, besides a number of smaller, irregular in shape. — The central lamina between the eyes is the largest. Russell on Indian Serpents.

LAM'INATED. adj. [from lamina.] Plated: used of such bodies whose contexture discovers such a disposition as that of plates lying over one another.

From the apposition of different coloured gravel arises, for the most part, the laminated appearance of a stone. Sharp.

LAM'ISH.* adj. [from lame.] Not quite lame; hobbling.

He did, by a false step, sprain a vein in the inside of his leg, which ever after occasioned him to go lamish.

A. Wood, Ath. Ox. 1st ed. vol. 2. col. 262.

TO LAMM.† v. a. [lamen, Belg. to strike, to beat. Skinner. Icel. lem, to beat.] To beat soundly with a cudgel.

Lamth'd you shall be ere we leave ye: —

You shall be beaten sober.

Beaumont and Fl. Beggars' Bush.

LAM'MAS.† n. s. [This word is said by Bailey, I know not on what authority, to be derived from a custom, by which the tenants of the archbishop of York were obliged, at the time of mass, on the first of August, to bring a lamb to the altar. In Scotland they are said to wean lambs on this day. It may else be corrupted from latermath. Dr. Johnson. — The following is the account which the learned Hammond gives of the word. "Lammas, in the Saxon hlafmass, lafmess, i. e. loaf-mass, or bread-mass, is so named as a feast of thanksgiving to God for the first fruits of the corn, and seems to have been observed with bread of new wheat; and accordingly 'tis an usage, in some places, for tenants to be bound to bring in wheat of that year to their lord, on or before the first of August." Works, vol. i. p. 660. Somner and Blount record the same derivation. In later times it has been well observed, that lammas day, in the Salisbury Manuals, is called benedictio novorum fructuum; in the Red Book of Derby, hlar-mæjre dæg; but in the Sax. Chron. hlam-mæjre; that mass was a word for festival, whence our Christmas, Candlemas, &c.; and that therefore instead of lammas quasi lamb-mass, from the offering of the tenants at York, we may rather suppose the f to have been left out in course of time of general use, and thus la-mas, or hla-mæjre, appears. See Gent. Mag. Jan. 1799. p. 33. See also the etym. of LAMBS-WOOL.] The first of August.

In 1578 was that famous lammas day, which buried the reputation of Don John of Austria.

Bacon.

Even or odd, of all days in the year,
Come lammas eve at night, shall she be fourteen.
Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

LAMP. n. s. [lampe, Fr. lampas, Lat.]

1. A light made with oil and a wick.

O thievish night,

Why should'st thou, but for some, though a felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd thy lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the misled and lonely traveller? Milton, Comus.

In lamp furnaces I used spirit of wine instead of oil, and the same flame has melted foliated gold.
Boyle.

2. Any kind of light, in poetical language, real or metaphorical.

Thy gentle eyes send forth a quickening spirit,
And feed the dying lamp of life within me. Rowe.
Cynthia, fair regent of the night,
O may thy silver lamp from heaven's high bower,
Direct my footsteps in the midnight hour. Gay.

LA'MPASS. n. s. [lampas, Fr.] A lump of flesh, about the bigness of a nut, in the roof of a horse's mouth, which rises above the teeth.

Being overtaken with liquor one Saturday evening, I shaved the priest with Spanish blacking for shoes instead of a wash-ball, and with lampblack powdered his periwig.

Arbutnot and Pope, Mem. of P.P.

LA'MPING.† adj. [lampante, Ital.] Shining; sparkling. Not used.

Happy lines on which with starry light
Those lamping eyes will deign sometimes to look.
Spenser, Sonnet.

LAMPO'ON. n. s. [Bailey derives it from lampoons, a drunken song. It imports, let us drink, from the old French lampier, and was repeated at the end of each couplet at carousals. Trevoux.] A personal satire; abuse; censure written not to reform but to vex.

They say my talent is satire; if so, it is a fruitful age: I have shown the dragon's teeth themselves, and it is but just they should reap each other in lampoons.

Make satire a lampoon.

Dryden.

To LAMPO'ON.† v. a. [from the noun.] To abuse with a personal satire.

To jeer my prince, or to lampoon my miss.

The Image of the Age, (1676.) p. 65.

LAMPO'ONER. n. s. [from lampoon.] A scribbler of personal satire.

We are naturally displeased with an unknown critick, as the ladies are with a lampooner, because we are bitten in the dark.

Dryden.

The squibs are those who are called libellers, lampooners, and pamphleteers.

Tatler.

LA'MPREY.† n. s. [lamproye, Fr.; lampreye, Dutch; lampnæba, Saxon.]

Many fish much like the eel frequent both the sea and fresh rivers; as, the lamprel, lamprey, and lamprene.

Walton.

LA'MPRON. n. s. A kind of sea fish.

These rocks are frequented by lamprons, and greater fishes, that devour the bodies of the drowned.

Broomer on the Odyssey.

LANCE.† n. s. [lance, Fr.; lancea, Lat.] λάνχη, Greek; lanca, Arm. to brandish a spear, to dart.]

1. A long spear, which, in the heroic ages, seems to have been generally thrown from the hand, as by the Indians at this day. In later times, the combatants thrust them against each other on horseback. Spear; javelin.

He carried his lances, which were strong, to give a lanceably blow.

Sidney.

Plate sin with gold,
And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks:
Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it.

Shakespeare.

They shall hold the bow and the lance. Jer. l. 42.
Hector beholds his jav'lin fall in vain,
Nor other lance, nor other hope remain;
He calls Deiphobus, demands a spear
In vain, for no Deiphobus was there.

Pope.

2. Balance. [lance, Italian; "in dubbia lance" Tasso, G. Lib. xx. 50. From the Lat. lanx.] Obsolete.

Need teacheth her this lesson hard and rare,
That fortune all in equal launce doth sway.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. vii. 4.

To LANCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To pierce; to cut.

With his prepared sword he charges home
My unprovided body, lanc'd my arm. Shakespeare.
In their cruel worship they lance themselves with knives.

Glanville, Scepis.

The infernal minister advanc'd,
Seiz'd the due victim, and with fury lanc'd
Her back, and piercing through her inmost heart,
Drew backward.

Dryden.

2. To open chirurgically; to cut in order to a cure.

We do lance

Diseases in our bodies. Shakespeare.
Fell sorrow's tooth doth never rankle more
Than when it bites, but lanceth not the sore. Shaks.
That differs as far from our usual severities, as the lancements of a physician do from the wounds of an adversary.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

Lance the sore,
And cut the head; for till the core is found
The secret vice is fed.

Dryden.

The shepherd stands,
And when the lancing knife requires his hands,
Vain help, with idle pray'rs, from heav'n demands.

Dryden.

LA'NCELY. adj. [from lance.] Suitable to a lance. Not in use.

He carried his lances, which were strong, to give a lanceably blow.

Sidney.

LANCEPESA'DE.† n. s. [lance spezzate, Fr.; Dr. Johnson.—Formerly lancepesado, and by corruption lancepresado. It is originally Italian: lancia spezzata.] The officer under the corporal: not now in use among us, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Cleveland. Perhaps lance-corporal is now the term for such officer. Properly the lancepesade signifies a reduced officer.

Since feathers were cashier'd,
The ribbands have been to some officer rear'd;
'Tis hard to meet a lancepresado, where
Some ells of favour do not straight appear.

J. Hall, Poems, (1646.) p. 10.

The lowest range and meanest officer in an army is called lancepesado or prezado; who is the leader or governor of half a file; and therefore is commonly called a middle man, or captain over four.

The Soldier's Accidence, p. 1.

To th' Indies of her arm he flies,
Fraught both with east and western prize,
Which, when he had in vain essay'd,
Arm'd like a dapper lancepesade,
With Spanish pike, he broach'd a pore.

Cleveland.

LA'NCER.* n. s. [from lance; French, lancier.]

1. One that carries a lance; one armed with a lance.

Each lanceer well his weightie lance did wield.

Mir. for Mag. p. 822.

They passed with all speed through the vaunt-guard of some seven hundred lancers.

Sir R. Williams, Act of the L. Countr. (1618.) p. 21.

Such the bold leaders of these lancers were.

Davenant, Gondibert.

2. A lancet. Not now in use.

They cut themselves, after their manner, with knives and lancers.

1 Kings, xviii. 28.

He provoked Baal's prophets to cut themselves with knives and lancers.

Sheffield's Learned Discourses, p. 265.

LA'NCET.† n. s. [lancette, French.]

1. A small pointed, chirurgical instrument.

I gave vent to it by an apertion with a lancet, and discharged white matter. Wesman, Surgery.
A vein, in an apparent blue runneth along the body, and if dexterously pricked with a lancet, emitteth a red drop.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Hippocrates saith, blood-letting should be done with broad lancets or swords, in order to make a large orifice: the manner of opening a vein then was by stabbing or pertusion, as in horses.

Arbutnot.

2. A pointed window.

Here have been dug up, pieces of the mouldings of lancet windows, and other fragments of antique masonry in stone.

Watson, Hist. of Kiddingington, p. 17.

To LANCH. v. a. [lancer, Fr.] This word is too often written launch; it is only a vocal corruption of lance. See LANCE, and To LAUNCH.] To dart; to cast as a lance; to throw; to let fly.

See whose arm can lanch the surer bolt,
And who's the better Jove.

Dryden and Lee, Œdipus.

Me, only me, the hand of fortune bore,
Unblest to tread that interdicted shore:
When Jove tremendous in the sable deeps,
Launch'd his red light'ning at our scatter'd ships.

Pope.

To LANCH.* v. n. See To LAUNCH.

LANCH.* n. s. See LAUNCH.

To LA'NCINATE.† v. a. [lancino, Lat.] To tear; to rend; to lacerate.

The stitch [is] a sharp lancing pain.

Johnson, in V. Stich.

LANCINA'TION. n. s. [from lancino, Lat.] Tearing; laceration.

LAND.† n. s. [land, Goth. lanô, Saxon; and so all the Teutonick dialects. "Vox antiquissima." Serenius.]

1. A country; a region; distinct from other countries.

The nations of Scythia, like a mountain flood, did overflow all Spain, and quite washed away whatsoever reliques there were left of the land-bred people.

Spenser on Ireland.

Thy ambition,
Of noble Buckingham. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.
What had he done to make him fly the land?

Shakspeare.

The chief men of the land had great authority; though the government was monarchical, it was not despotick.

Broomé on the Odyssey.

2. Earth; distinct from water.

By land they found that huge and mighty country.

Adnot.

Yet, if thou go'st by land, tho' grief possess
My soul ev'n then, my fears would be the less:
But ah! be warn'd to shun the wat'ry way.

Dryden.

They turn their heads to sea, their sterns to land,
And greet with greedy joy the Italian strand.

Dryden.

3. It is often used in composition, as opposed to sea.

The princes delighting their conceits with confirming their knowledge, seeing wherein the sea-discipline differed from the land-service, they had pleasing entertainment.

Sidney.

He to-night hath boarded a land-carrack;
If it prove lawful prize, he's made for ever.

Shakspeare.

With eleven thousand land-soldiers, and twenty-six ships of war, we within two months have won one town.

Bacon.

Necessity makes men ingenious and hardy; and if they have but land-room or sea-room, they find supplies for their hunger.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

I writ not always in the proper terms of navigation, or land-service.

Dryden, Æn.

The French are to pay the same duties at the dry ports through which they pass by land carriage, as we pay upon importation or exportation by sea.

Addison, Freeholder.

The Phœnicians carried on a land-trade to Syria and Mesopotamia, and stopt not short, without pushing their trade to the Indies.

Arbutnot on Coins.

The species brought by land-carriage were much better than those which came to Egypt by sea.

Arbutnot.

4. Ground; surface of the place. Unusual.

Beneath his steely casque he felt the blow,
And roll'd, with limbs relax'd, along the land.

Pope.

5. An estate real and immovable.

To forfeit all your goods, lands, and tenements,
Castles, and goods whatsoever, and to be
Out of the king's protection.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

He kept himself within the bounds of loyalty, and enjoyed certain lands and towns in the borders of Polonia.

Knolles.

This man is freed from servile bands,
Of hope to rise, or fear to fall:
Lord of himself, though not of lands,
And having nothing, yet hath all.

Wotton.

6. Nation; people; the inhabitants of the land.

These answers in the silent night receiv'd,
The king himself divulg'd, the land believ'd.

Dryden.

7. Urine. [lanô, Saxon]

Probably land-damn was a coarse expression in the cant strain, formerly in common use, but since laid aside and forgotten, which meant the taking away a man's life. For land or lant is an old word for urine, and to stop the common passages and functions of nature is to kill.

Hammer.

You are abused, and by some putter on,
That will be damn'd for't; would I knew the villain,

I would land-damn him. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

The preceding example is a very doubtful one of this sense of land; and the passage, in which it occurs, has perplexed all the commentators on the poet. Land or lant is, however, in this sense used in Lancashire.

Editor.

To LAND. v. a. [from the noun.] To set on shore.

The legions, now in Gallia, sooner landed In Britain. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

He who rules the raging wind,
To thee, O sacred ship, be kind,
Thy committed pledge restore,
And land him safely on the shore,

Dryden, Horace.

Another Typhis shall new seas explore,
Another Argo land the chiefs upon th' Iberian shore.

Dryden.

To LAND. v. n. To come to shore.

Let him land,

And solemnly see him set on to London. Shakspeare.
Land ye not, none of you, and provide to be gone from this coast within sixteen days.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

I land, with luckless omens; then adore
Their gods.

Dryden, Æn.

LANDA'U.* n. s. [probably from a vehicle of this kind used in the town of Landau in Bavaria.] A coach, of which the top may be occasionally open.

LAND'ED. adj. [from land.] Having a fortune, not in money but in land; having a real estate.

A landless knight makes thee a landed squire.

Shakspeare, K. John.

Men, whose living lyeth together in one shire, are commonly counted greater landed than those whose livings are dispersed.

Bacon.

Cromwell's officers, who were for levelling lands while they had none, when they grew landed fell to crying up magna charta.

Temple.

A house of commons must consist, for the most part, of landed men.

Addison, Freeholder.

LAND'FALL.† n. s. [land and fall.]

1. A sudden translation of property in land by the death of a rich man.

2. In naval language, the first land discovered after a sea-voyage.

LAND'FLOOD. n. s. [land and flood.] Inundation.

Apprehensions of the affections of Kent, and all other places, looked like a landflood, that might roll they knew not how far.

Clarendon.

LAND-FORCES. n. s. [land and force.]

Warlike powers not naval; soldiers that serve on land.

We behold in France the greatest land-forces that have ever been known under any christian prince.

Temple.

LANDGRAVE. n. s. [land and grave, or graf, a count, German.] A German title of dominion.

LANDHOLDER. n. s. [land and holder.] One who holds lands.

Money, as necessary to trade, may be considered as in his hands that pays the labourer and landholder; and if this man want money, the manufacture is not made, and so the trade is lost.

Locke.

LA'NDING.†
LA'NDING-PLACE. } n. s. [from land.]

1. The top of stairs.

Let the stairs to the upper rooms be upon a fair, open newel, and a fair landing-place at the top.

Bacon.

The landing-place is the uppermost step of a pair of stairs, viz. the floor of the room you ascend upon.

Moxon.

There is a stair-case that strangers are generally carried to see, where the easiness of the ascent, the disposition of the lights, and the convenient landing, are admirably well contrived.

Addison on Italy.

What the Romans called vestibulum was no part of the house, but the court and landing-place between it and the street.

Arbutnot on Coins.

2. The act of coming on shore.

Agricola — sent his navy to hover on the coast, and with sundry and uncertain landings to divert and disunite the Britons. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 2.

LA'NDJOBBER. n. s. [land and job.] One who buys and sells lands for other men.

If your master be a minister of state, let him be at home to none but land-jobbers, or inventors of new funds.

Swift.

LA'NDLADY. n. s. [land and lady.]

1. A woman who has tenants holding from her.

2. The mistress of an inn.

If a soldier drinks his pint, and offers payment in Wood's halfpence, the landlady may be under some difficulty.

Swift.

LA'NDLESS.† adj. [from land, Sax. lanô, leaf.] Without property; without fortune.

Young Fortinbras

Hath in the skirts of Norway, here and there,
Shark'd up a list of landless resolute.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

A landless knight makes thee a landed squire.

Shakspeare, K. John.

LA'NDLOCKED.† adj. [land and lock.] Shut in, or enclosed with land.

The haven before the town is land-locked.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 100.

There are few natural parts better landlocked, and closed on all sides, than this seems to have been.

Addison on Italy.

LA'NDLOPER.† n. s. [land and loopen.] Dutch.] A landman; a term of reproach used by seamen of those who pass their lives on shore.

Such travellers as these may be termed landlopers, as the Dutchman saith, rather than travellers. Howell, Instruct. for Trav. (1642.) p. 187.

LA'NDLORD.† n. s. [land and lord. Sax. lanô, hapôb.]

1. One who owns land or houses, and has tenants under him.

This regard shall be had, that in no place, under any landlord, there shall be many of them placed together, but dispersed. Spenser on Ireland.

It is a generous pleasure in a landlord, to love to see all his tenants look fat, sleek, and contented.

Richardson, Clarissa.

2. The master of an inn.

Upon our arrival at the inn, my companion fetched out the jolly landlord, who knew him by his whistle.

Addison.

LA'NDLORDRY.* n. s. [from landlord.] State of a landlord.

Pillering slips of petty landlordry.

By. Hall, Sat. v. i.

LANDMAN.* n. s. [land and man. Sax. landman.] One who lives or serves on land; opposed to seaman; a countryman.

Soldier. If to-morrow
Our navy thrive, I have an absolute hope
Our landmen will stand up.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.
The ships being so filled with landmen, there was a great want of water.

Burnet, Hist. of his own Time. (an. 1708.)
It often astonishes a landman to observe with what precision a sailor can distinguish, in the offing, not only the appearance of a ship, which is altogether invisible to the landman, but the number of her masts, the direction of her course, and the rate of her sailing.

A. Smith, on the External Senses.

LANDMARK.† n. s. [land and mark. Sax. landmeapc.] Any thing set up to preserve the boundaries of lands.

I' the midst, an altar, as the land-mark, stood,

The land-marks by which places in the church had been known, were removed. Clarendon.

Then land-marks limited to each his right;
For all before was common as the light. Dryden.

Though they are not self-evident principles, yet if they have been made out from them by a wary and unquestionable deduction, they may serve as land-marks, to shew what lies in the direct way of truth, or is quite besides it. Locke.

LANDSCAPE.† n. s. [landscape, Dutch. Dr. Johnson.—Landscape, Saxon; and our old authors write the word landscape; though Dr. Johnson has unjustly exhibited landscape as the form used by Milton. The word has been also written landscape, as if it were from the Greek verb σκέπτομαι (skeptomai), to look over; and in later times, rather affectingly, landscape. It is probably from the Saxon reapian, to shape, and land, q. d. the shape of the land or country. It appears to have been a word newly introduced, when Drayton published his Polyolbion early in the reign of James the first; for, using it in his eighteenth song, p. 284, he has thought it expedient thus to explain his "landscape" in the margin, viz. "the natural expressing of the surface of a country in painting."] 1. A region, the prospect of a country.

The pleasant varieties of these earthly landscapes.
Bp. Hall, Free Prisoner, § 9.

Straight mine eyes hath caught new pleasures,
Whilst the landscape round it measures
Russet lawns and fallows grey,
Where the nibbling flocks do stray. Milton, L' All.
Lovely seem'd,

That landscape; and of pure, now purer air,
Meets his approach. Milton, P. L.

The sun scarce uprisen,
Shot parallel to th' earth his dewy ray,
Discovering in wide landscape all the east
Of paradise, and Eden's happy plains.

Milton, P. L.
We are like men entertained with the view of a spacious landscape, where the eye passes over one pleasing prospect into another. Addison.

2. A picture representing an extent of space, with the various objects in it.

The Jews indeed saw Christ presented in a landscape, and beheld him through the perspective of faith.

Fuller, Sermon of Reformation, (Ox. 1643.) p. 8.

As good a poet as you are, you cannot make finer landscapes than those about the king's house. Addison.

Of in her glass the musing shepherd spies
The watery landscape of the pendant woods,
And absent trees, that tremble in the floods. Pope.
The Seasons of Thomson have been very instrumental in diffusing a general taste for the beauties of nature and landscape.

Bp. Warton, Ess. on Pope.
TO LANDSCAPE.* v. a. To represent in landscape. Not in use.

As weary traveller that climbs a hill,
Looks back, sits down, and oft, if hand have skill,
Landscape the vales with pencil; placing here
Meadow, there arable, &c.

Archd. Holyday, Serv. of the World, 1661, Pref.

LANDSTREIGHT.* n. s. [land and streight. See the substantive STRAIT.] A narrow passage, or slip of land.

A city—seated upon seven hills, at or near unto the sea; indeed in a foreland or landstreight, where two seas meet.

Mountagu, App. to Cass. (1625.) p. 158.

LAND-TAX.* n. s. [land and tax.] Tax laid upon land and houses.

If mortgages were registered, land-taxes might reach the lender to pay his proportion. Locke.

LAND-WAITER. n. s. [land and waiter.] An officer of the customs, who is to watch what goods are landed.

Give a guinea to a knavish land-waiter, and he shall connive at the merchant for cheating the queen of an hundred. Swift, Examiner.

LANDWARD. adv. [from land.] Towards the land.

They are invincible by reason of the overpowering mountains that back the one, and slender fortification of the other to landward.

Sandys, Trav.

LAND-WIND.* n. s. [land and wind.] A gale or wind from the land.

A sudden stiff land-wind in that self hour
To seaward forc'd this bird.

Donne, Poems, p. 304.

LAND-WORKER.* n. s. [land and worker.] One who tills the ground.

The latter state, that of the land-worker, is represented as under a curse, and is made the punishment of his disobeying a positive command.

Pownall on Antig. p. 140.

LANE. n. s. [laen, Dutch; lana, Saxon.] 1. A narrow way between edges.

All flying
Through a straight lane, the enemy full-hearted Struck down some mortally. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.
I know each lane, and every alley green,
Dingle or bushy dell, of this wild wood,
And every bosky bourn. Milton, Comus.

Through a close lane as I pursu'd my journey.

A pack-horse is driven constantly in a narrow lane and dirty road. Locke.

2 A narrow street; an alley.
There is no street, not many lanes, where there does not live one that has relation to the church.

Sprat, Sermon.
3. A passage between men standing on each side.

The earl's servants stood ranged on both sides, and made the king a lane. Bacon, Hen. VII.

LANG.* adj. [lagg, M. Goth. which in the pronunciation is lang; langzum, Saxon. See LONG, and LONGSOME.] Long. Our northern word. Thus also langsome for longsome, tedious; and langsettle for longsettle.

LANGREL Shot.* n. s. A kind of chain-shot.

LANGSETTLE.* n. s. [lang and settle.] A long bench to sit on. Praise of Yorksh. Ale, 1697. Common throughout the north of England.

LANGTERALO'O.* n. s. A game at cards; in some places called lanterloo; and in some langtra; which Pegge takes to be French, viz. langtrois, it being often long, he says, before three cards of one suit come into a hand. But langtra seems to be an abbreviation only of langteraloo; of which name, however, I know not the origin.

An old ninepence bent both ways by Lilly the almanack-maker for luck at langteraloo.

Taiter, No. 245.

LANGUAGE.† n. s. [language, French; lingua, Latin.]

1. Human speech.

We may define language, if we consider it more materially, to be letters, forming and producing words and sentences; but if we consider it according to the design thereof, then language is apt signs for communication of thoughts. Holder.

2. The tongue of one nation as distinct from others.

O! good my lord, no Latin;
I am not such a truant since my coming,
As not to know the language I have liv'd in.

Shakespeare.

He not from Rome alone, but Greece,
Like Jason, brought the golden fleece;
To him that language, though to none
Of th' others, as his own was known.

Denham.

3. Style; manner of expression.
Though his language should not be refin'd,
It must not be obscure and impudent.

Roscommon.

Others for language all their care express,
And value books, as women, men, for dress:
Their praise is still—the style is excellent;
The sense, they humbly take upon content. Pope.

4. A nation distinguished by their language.

To you it is commanded, O people, nations, and languages, that at what time ye hear the sound of the cornet, &c. ye fall down and worship the golden image that Nebuchadnezzar the king hath set up.

Dan. iii. 4, 5.

TO LANGUAGE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To give language to; to express. Not now in use.

A new dispute there lately rose
Betwixt the Greeks and Latines, whose Temples should be bound with glory
In best *language*ing this story. Lovelace, Luc. p. 82.

LANGUAGED.† adj. [from the noun.]

1. Knowing language; using language properly or gracefully.

Not eloquent, nor well-*language*d, [indisertus.] Barret in V. Eloquent.

They are the only knowing men in Europe,
The only language'd men of all the world.

B. Jonson, Fox.

2. Having various languages.

He wand'ring long a wider circle made,
And many language'd nations has survey'd. Pope.

LANGUAGE-MASTER. n. s. [language and master.] One whose profession is to teach languages.

The third is a sort of language-master, who is to instruct them in the style proper for a minister. Spectator.

LANGUET. n. s. [languette, French.] Any thing cut in the form of a tongue.

LA'NGUID. adj. [languidus, Latin.]

1. Faint; weak; feeble.

Whatever renders the motion of the blood languid, dispoth to an acid acrimony; what accelerates the motion of the blood, dispoth to an alkaline acrimony.

Arbutnot.

No space can be assigned so vast, but still a larger may be imagined; no motion so swift or languid, but a greater velocity or slowness may still be conceived.

Bentley.

2. Dull; heartless.

I'll hasten to my troops,
And fire their languid souls with Cato's virtue.

Addison.

LA'NGUIDLY. adv. [from languid.] Weakly; feebly.

The menstruum work'd as languidly upon the coral, as it did before.

Boyle.

LA'NGUIDNESS. † n. s. [from languid.]

Weakness; feebleness; want of strength.

Many sick, and keep up; colds without coughing or running at the nose; only a languidness and faintness. Life of A. Wood, (an 1678,) p. 273.

To LA'NGUISE. † v. n. [languir, French; languere, Latin; from the Greek λαγγεω, to be weary.]

1. To grow feeble; to pine away; to lose strength.

Let her languish

A drop of blood a-day; and, being aged,
Die of this folly.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

We and our fathers do languish of such diseases.

2 Esdr.

2. To be no longer vigorous in motion; not to be vivid in appearance.

3. To sink or pine under sorrow, or any slow passion.

The land shall mourn, and every one that dwelleth therein shall languish.

Hosea, iv. 3.

I have been talking with a sutor here,
A man that languishes in your displeasure.

Shakespeare, Othello.

I was about fifteen when I took the liberty to chuse for myself, and have ever since languished under the displeasure of an inexorable father.

Addison, Spect.

Let Leonora consider, that, at the very time in which she languishes for the loss of her deceased lover, there are persons just perishing in a shipwreck.

Addison, Spect.

4. To look with softness or tenderness.

What poems think you soft, and to be read
With languishing regards, and bending head?

Dryden.

To LA'NGUISE.* v. a. To make feeble; to cause to droop; to depress; to wear out.

What man who knows

What woman is, yea, what she cannot choose
But must be, will his free hours languish out
For assur'd bondage? Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
That he might satisfy, or languish, that burning flame.

Florio, Tr. of Montaigne, (1613,) p. 495.
Cylenius spies

How leaden sleep had seal'd up all his eyes;
Then, silent, with his magick rod he strokes
Their languish'd lights, which sounder sleep provokes.

Sandys, Ovid's Met. B. 1.

The languish'd mother's womb
Was not long a living tomb.

Milton, Epit. March. of Winchester.
Like a neglected rose,

It withers on the stalk with languish'd head.

Milton, Comus.

His words their drooping cheer
Enlighten'd, and their languish'd hope reviv'd.

Milton, P. L.

The troops with hate inspir'd,
Their darts and clamour at a distance drive,
And only keep the languish'd war alive. Dryden.

LA'NGUISE. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Act or state of pining.

One desperate grief cures with another's languish.
Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

2. Soft appearance.

And the blue languish of soft Allia's eye. Pope.

Then forth he walks,

Beneath the trembling languish of her beam,
With soften'd soul. Thomson, Spring.

LA'NGUISHER.* n. s. [from languish.] One who pines or languishes.

These unhappy languishers in obscurity should be furnished with such accounts of the employments of people of the world, as may engage them in their several remote corners to a laudable imitation.

Mrs. E. Carter, in Dr. Johnson's Rambler, No. 100.

LA'NGUISHING.* n. s. [from languish.] Feebleness; loss of strength.

There is a remedy approv'd, set down

To cure the desperate languishings, whereof
The king is render'd lost. Shakespeare, All's Well.
What can we expect, but that her languishings
Should end in death? Decay of Chr. Piety.

LA'NGUISHINGLY.* adv. [from languishing.]

1. Weakly; feebly; with feeble softness.
Leave such to tune their own dull rhimes, and know

What's roundly smooth, or languishingly slow.

Pope.

2. Dully; tediously.

Alas! my Dorus, thou seest how long and languishingly
the weeks are past over since our last talking.

Sidney.

3. With soft appearance.

Not Titian's pencil ere could so array,
So fleecy with clouds the pure ethereal space;
Ne could it e'er such melting forms display,
As loose on flowery beds all languishingly lay.

Thomson, Castle of Indolence, C. 1.

LA'NGUISMENT. n. s. [languissemment, French; from languish.]

1. State of pining.

By that count, which lovers' books invent,
The sphere of Cupid forty years contains;
Which I have wasted in long languishment,
That seem'd the longer for my greater pains.

Spenser.

2. Softness of mien.

Humility it expresses, by the stooping or bending of the head; languishment, when we hang it on one side.

Dryden.

LA'NGUOR.* n. s. [languor, Latin; languor, French. The early use of our word is in the sense of disease. Wiclife renders, what in the present version is "taken with divers diseases and torments," St. Matt. iv. 24. "takum with dyverse languores and turmentis."] 1. Faintness; wearisomeness.

Well hop'd I, and fair beginnings had,
That he my captive languor should redeem.

Spenser.

For these, these tribunes, in the dust I write
My heart's deep languor, and my soul's sad tears.

Shakespeare.

2. Listlessness; inattention.

Academical disputation gives vigour and briskness to the mind thus exercised, and relieves the languor of private study and meditation.

Watts, Impr. of the Mind.

3. Softness; laxity.

To isles of fragrance, lily-silver'd vales
Diffusing languor in the panting gales.

Pope, Dunciad.

4. [In physick.]

Languor and lassitude signifies a faintness, which may arise from want or decay of spirits, through indigestion, or too much exercise; or from an additional weight of fluids, from a diminution of secretion by the common discharges.

Quincey.

LA'NGUOROUS. adj. [languereux, Fr.] Tedious; melancholy. Not in use.

Dear lady, how shall I declare thy case,
Whom late I left in languorous constraint?

Spenser.

To LA'NGURE.* v. n. [from languere, Lat.] To languish. "Languering in care, sorrow, or thought." Huloet. Not now in use.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

LA'NIGEROUS. adj. [laniger, Latin.] Bearing wool.

LANK. adj. [lancke, Dutch.]

1. Loose; not filled up; not stiffened out; not fat; not plump; slender.

The commons hast thou rack'd; the clergy's bags

Are lank and lean with thy extortions. Shakespeare.
Name not Winterface, whose skin's slack;
Lank, as an unthrif's purse.

Donne.

We let down into the receiver a great bladder well tied at the neck, but very lank, as not containing above a pint of air, but capable of containing ten times as much.

Boyle.

Moist earth produces corn and grass, but both
Too rank and too luxuriant in their growth.
Let not my land so large a promise boast,
Lest the lank ears in length of stem be lost.

Dryden.

Now, now my bearded harvest gilds the plain.
Thus dreams the wretch, and vainly thus dreams on,
Till his lank purse declares his money gone.

Dryden.

Meagre and lank with fasting grown,
And nothing left but skin and bone;
They just keep life and soul together.

Swift.

2. Milton seems to use this word for faint; languid.

He piteous of her woes, rear'd her lank head,
And gave her to his daughters to imbathe
In nectar'd lavers strew'd with asphidil.

Milton, Comus.

To LANK.* v. n. [from the adjective.] To become lank; to fall away.

All this
Was borne so like a soldier, that thy cheek
So much as lank'd not. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

LA'NKLY.* adv. [from lank.] Loosely; thinly.

When forty winters more
Have furrow'd deep my pallid brow;
When from my head, a scanty store,
Lankly the wither'd tresses flow. Sir J. Hall, Song.

LA'NKNESS.† n. s. [from lank.] Want of plumpness.

Thou shalt eat, but thou shalt not thrive with it; there shall be a kind of lankness and depression within thy belly for very famine.

Stokes on the Proph. (1659.) p. 329.

LA'NKY.* adj. [from lank.] A vulgar expression to denote a tall thin person.

LA'NNER.† n. s. [lanier, Fr. lannarius, Lat.] A species of hawk.

'Tis well if among them you can clearly make out a lanner, a sparrow-hawk, and a kestrel.

Here are—sundry other birds; as goshawks, lannars, hobbies. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 383.

LA'NNERET.† n. s. A little hawk.

Of lanner, eagle, &c. are formed lanneret, eaglelet. Buller, Eng. Gram. (1633.)

LANT.* n. s.

1. The old name for the game of loo. Still used in the north of England.

2. Urine. See the seventh sense of LAND. Common also in the north. Craven Dial. and Brockett.

LANTERLO.* See LANGTERALOO.

LANSQUENET. n. s. [Fr. from lance and knecht, Dutch.]

1. A common foot-soldier.

2. A game at cards.

LA'NTERN.† n. s. [lanterne, French; laterna, Latin: it is by mistake often written lanthorn. Dr. Johnson.—Lanthorn seems to have been written, from a confused notion that the name had some reference to the thin laminæ of horn of which it is frequently formed; quasi, lamp-horn. This etymology would infallibly be admitted, were the right one less known; and may serve as an instance of the fallacious nature of etymology. What could persuade an etymologist to give up such a derivation? especially if he recollected that a candle and lantern is called by Plautus "Vulcanus in cornu conclusus" Nares, Elem. of Orthoepey, p. 295.]

1. A transparent case for a candle.

God shall be my hope,
My stay, my guide, my lantern to my feet.

Shakespeare.

Thou art our admiral; thou bearest the lantern in the poop, but 'tis in the nose of thee; thou art the knight of the burning lamp.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

A candle lasteth longer in a lanthorn than at large.

Bacon.

Amongst the excellent acts of that king, none hath the pre-eminence, the erection and institution of a society, which we call Solomon's house; the noblest foundation that ever was, and the lanthorn of this kingdom.

Bacon, Atlantis.

O thievish night,
Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lanthorn thus close up the stars,
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil?

Milton, Comus.

Vice is like a dark lanthorn, which turns its bright side only to him that bears it, but looks black and dismal in another's hand.

Gov. of the Tongue.

Judge what a ridiculous thing it were, that the continued shadow of the earth should be broken by sudden miraculous eruptions of light, to prevent the art of the lantern-maker.

More, Divine Dialogues.

Our ideas succeed one another in our minds, not much unlike the images in the inside of a lanthorn, turned round by the heat of a candle.

Locke.

2. A lighthouse; a light hung out to guide ships.

Caprea, where the lanthorn fix'd on high,
Shines like a moon through the benighted sky,
While by its beams the wary sailor steers. Addis.

3. In architecture, a kind of little dome raised over a large one, or over the roof of a building; a sort of turret full of windows, by means of which the building is illuminated. [lanternium, low Latin.]

It [the saint's bell] was usually placed where it might be heard farthest, in a lantern at the springing of the steeple.

Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 8.

LA'NTERN JAW. A term used of a thin visage, such as if a candle were burning in the mouth, might transmit the light.

Being very lucky in a pair of long lanthorn-jaws, he wrung his face into a hideous grimace.

Addison, Spect.

LANUGINOUS. adj. [lanuginosus, Latin.] Downy; covered with soft hair.

LA'NYARDS.* n. s. pl. In naval language, small ropes or short pieces of cord, fastened to several machines in a ship; and serving to secure them in a particular place.

Call all hands to clear the wreck,
Quick the lanyards cut to pieces.

G. A. Stevens, The Storm.

LAP.† n. s. [læppe, lappa, Saxon; lappæ, German; lapp, pannus, Su. Goth.]

1. The loose part of a garment, which may be doubled at pleasure.

He can so lightly catch him in his trappe,
Till that a man be hent right by the lappæ.

Chaucer, Sec. Nonne's Tale.

If a joint of meat falls on the ground, take it up gently, wipe it with the lap of your coat, and then put it into the dish. Swift, Direct. to a Footman.

2. The part of the clothes that is spread horizontally over the knees, as one sits down, so as any thing may lie in it.

It feeds each living plant with liquid sap,
And fills with flowers fair Flora's painted lap.

Spenser.

Upon a day, as love lay sweetly slumbering

All in his mother's lap,

A gentle bee, with his loud trumpet murmuring
About him flew by hap. Spenser.

I'll make my haven in a lady's lap,

And witch sweet ladies with my words and looks. Shakespeare.

She bids you

All on the wanton rushes lay you down,
And rest your gentle head upon her lap,
And she will sing the song that pleaseth you. Shakespeare.

Our stirring

Can from the lap of Egypt's widow pluck
The ne'er-lust-weary'd Antony. Shakespeare.

Heaven's almighty sire,

Melts on the bosom of his love, and pours
Himself into her lap in fruitful showers. Crashaw.

Men expect that religion should cost them no pains, and that happiness should drop into their laps. Tillotson.

He struggles into breath, and cries for aid;
Then, helpless, in his mother's lap is laid.

He creeps, he walks, and issuing into man,
Grudges their life from whence his own began:
Retchless of laws, affects to rule alone,
Anxious to reign, and restless on the throne. Dryden.

TO LAP.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To wrap or twist round any thing.

15

When the body was taken, Joseph lapped it in a clene sanel. Wicliffe, St. Matt. xxvii.

He hath a long tail, which, as he descends from a tree, he laps round about the boughs to keep himself from falling. Grev, Museum.

About the paper, whose two halves were painted with red and blue, and which was stiff like thin pasteboard, I lapped several times a slender thread of very black silk. Newton.

2. To involve in any thing.

As through the flowering forest rash she fled,
In her rude hairs sweet flowers themselves did lap,
And flourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did en-wrap. Spenser.

The thane of Cawder 'gan a dismal conflict,
Till that Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof Confronted him. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

When we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how he did lap me,
Ev'n in his garments, and did give himself,
All thin and naked to the numb cold night. Shakespeare.

Ever against eating cares,

Lap me in soft Lydian airs. Milton, El Pens.
Indulgent fortune does her care employ,
And smiling broods upon the naked boy;
Her garment spreads, and laps him in the folds,
And covers with her wings from nightly colds. Dryden.

Here was the repository of all the wise contentions for power between the nobles and commons, lapt up safely in the bosom of a Nero and a Caligula. Swift.

TO LAP. v. n. To be spread or turned over any thing.

The upper wings are opacous; at their hinder ends, where they lap over, transparent, like the wing of a fly. Grev.

TO LAP. v. n. [lappian, Saxon; lappen, Dutch.] To feed by quick reciprocations of the tongue.

The dogs by the river Nilus' side being thirsty, lap hastily as they run along the shore.

Digby on Bodies.

They had soups served up in broad dishes, and so the fox fell to lapping himself, and had his guests heartily welcome. L'Estrange.

The tongue serves not only for tasting, but for mastication and deglutition, in man, by licking; in the dog and cat kind by lapping.

Ray on Creation.

TO LAP.† v. a. To lick up.

For all the rest

They'll take suggestion as a cat laps milk. Shakespeare.

Every one that lappeth of the water with his tongue, as a dog lappeth, him shalt thou set by himself. Judges, vii. 5.

Upon a bull

Two horrid Lyons rampt, and seiz'd, and tugg'd off, bellowing still,
Both men and dogs came; yet they tore the hide and lapt their fill. Chapman, Iliad.

LA'PD OG. n. s. [lap and dog.] A little dog, fondled by ladies in the lap.

One of them made his court to the lap-dog, to improve his interest with the lady. Collier.
These, if the laws did that exchange afford,
Would save their lap-dog sooner than their lord. Dryden.

Lap-dogs give themselves the rowing shake,
And sleepless lovers just at twelve awake. Pope.

LAPE'L.* n. s. [from lap.] That part of the coat which laps over; the facing. A modern word.

LA'PFUL. n. s. [lap and full.] As much as can be contained in the lap.

One found a wild vine, and gathered thereof
Full gourds his lapful, and shred them into the pot of pottage. 2 Kings.

Will four per cent. increase the number of lenders? if it will not, then all the plenty of money these conjurers bestow upon us, is but like the gold and silver which old women believe other conjurers bestow by whole lappfuls on poor credulous girls.

Locke.

LA'PICIDE. n. s. [lapicida, Latin.] A stonecutter.

Dict.

LA'PIDARY. † n. s. [lapidaire, Fr.] One who deals in stones or gems.

A false diamond is not set in a ring without a subtil foyle, in such wise as the deceit of the deceiver may hardly be discovered without the help of an expert lapidary.

Knight, Trial of Truth, (1580.) fol. 22.

As a cock was turning up a dunghill, he espied a diamond: Well (says he) this sparkling foolery now to a lapidary would have been the making of him; but, as to any use of mine, a barley-corn had been worth forty on't.

L'Esrange.

Of all the many sorts of the gem kind reckoned up by the lapidaries, there are not above three or four that are original.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

LA'PIDARY.* adj. Monumental; inscribed on stone.

See two sermons preached on occasion of bishop Gunning's death, and in Dr. Jenkin's lapidary verses prefixed to those sermons.

Life of Dr. Barwick, (1724.) Note, p. 40. A nobler eulogium than all the lapidary adulation of modern epitaphs.

Connoisseur, No. 131.

To LA'PIDATE. v. a. [lapido, Latin.] To stone; to kill by stoning.

Dict.

LAPIDA'TION. † n. s. [lapidatio, Lat.; lapidation, Fr.] A stoning.

All adulterers should be executed by lapidation: the ancient punishment was burning: death always, though in divers forms.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

LAPI'DEOUS. adj. [lapideus, Lat.] Stony; of the nature of stone.

There might fall down into the lapideous matter before it was concreted into a stone, some small toad, which might remain there imprisoned till the matter about it were condensed.

Ray on the Creation.

LAPIDE'SCENCE. n. s. [lapidesco, Latin.] Stony concretion.

Of lapis ceratæ, or cornu fossile, in subterraneous cavities, there are many to be found in Germany, which are but the lapidescences, and putrefactive mutations of hard bodies.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

LAPIDE'SCENT. † adj. [lapidescens, Latin] Growing or turning to stone.

Hardened by the air, or a certain lapidescent succus or spirit, which it meets with.

Evelyn.

LAPIDEFICA'TION. n. s. [lapidificatio, Fr.] The act of forming stones.

Induration or lapidification of substances more soft is another degree of condensation.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

LAPIDI'FICK. adj. [lapidifique, French.] Forming stones.

The atoms of the lapidifick, as well as saline principle, being regular, do concur in producing regular stones.

Greuv.

LA'PIDIST. n. s. [from lapides, Latin.] A dealer in stones or gems.

Hardness, wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, being exalted to that degree, that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it, the factitious stores of chemists in imitation being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist.

Ray.

LA'PIS. n. s. [Latin.] A stone.

LA'PIS Lazuli. The lapis lazuli, or azure stone, is a copper ore, very compact and hard, so as to take a high polish, and is worked into a great variety of toys. It is found in detached lumps, of an elegant blue colour, variegated with clouds of white, and veins of a shining gold colour; to it the painters are indebted for their beautiful ultra-marine colour, which is only a calcination of lapis lazuli.

Hill.

LA'PLING.* n. s. [from lap.] A term of contempt for one wrapped up in sensual delights.

You must not stream out your youth in wine, and live a lapping to the silk and dainties.

Hewitt, Sermon, (1658,) p. 7.

LA'PPER. n. s. [from lap.]

1. One who wraps up.

They may be lappers of linen, and bailiffs of the manor.

Swift.

2. One who laps or licks.

LA'PPET. n. s. [diminutive of lap.] The parts of a head dress that hang loose.

How naturally do you apply your hands to each others lappets, and ruffles, and mantuas!

Swift.

LAPSE. n. s. [lapsus, Latin.]

1. Flow; fall; glide; smooth course.

Round I saw

Hill, dale, and shady woods, and sunny plains,
And liquid lapse of murmuring streams.

Milton, P. L.

Notions of the mind are preserved in the memory, notwithstanding lapse of time.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. Petty error; small mistake; slight offence; little fault.

These are petty errors and minor lapses, not considerably injurious to truth.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The weakness of human understanding all will confess; yet the confidence of most practically disowns it; and it is easier to persuade them of it from others' lapses than their own.

This scripture may be usefully applied as a caution to guard against those lapses and failings, to which our infirmities daily expose us.

Rogers.

It hath been my constant business to examine whether I could find the smallest lapse in style or propriety through my whole collection, that I might send it abroad as the most finished piece.

Swift.

3. Translation of right from one to another.

In a presentation to a vacant church, a layman ought to present within four months, and a clergyman within six, otherwise a devolution, or lapse of right, happens.

Ayliffe.

To LAPSE. † v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To glide slowly; to fall by degrees.

This disposition to shorten our words, by retrenching the vowels, is nothing else but a tendency to lapse into the barbarity of those northern nations from whom we are descended, and whose languages labour all under the same defect.

Swift, Lett. to the Ld. Treasurer.

2. To fall in any thing; to slip; to commit a fault.

I have ever verified my friends,
Of whom he's chief, with all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer. Shakespeare, Coriol.
To lapse in fulness
Is sorer than to lie for need; and falsehood
Is worse in kings than beggars. Shakespeare, Cymb.

3. To slip as by inadvertency or mistake.

Homer, in his characters of Vulcan and Thersites, has lapsed into the burlesque character, and departed from that serious air essential to an epic poem.

Addison.

4. To fall by the negligence of one proprietor to another.

If the archbishop shall not fill it up within six months ensuing, it lapses to the king.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

5. To fall from perfection, truth or faith.

All publick forms suppose it the most principal, universal, and daily requisite to the lapsing state of human corruption.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

To LAPSE.* v. a.

1. To suffer to slip; to suffer to fall or be vacant.

I returned a present answer — that I would either give, or lapse the benefice, as his majesty's gracious letters required of me.

Abp. Laud, Hist. of his Troub. p. 200.

As an appeal may be deserted by the appellant's lapsing the term of law, so it may also be deserted by a lapse of the term of a judge.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

2. To accuse; to convict of a fault. Dr. Johnson places the following example from Shakespeare under the verb neuter, with the definition of "to lose the proper time," under which definition also he includes the preceding example from Ayliffe: but the verb in both is clearly active, and with different meanings.

The offence is not of such a bloody nature: —

It might have since been answer'd in repaying
What we took from them; which, for traffick's sake,
Most of our city did; only myself stood out;

For which, if I be lapsed in this place

I shall pay dear. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

LA'PSED.* part. adj. [from lapse.]

1. Fallen by event.

If the legatee dies before the testator, the legacy is a lost or lapsed legacy.

Blackstone.

2. Fallen from perfection, truth, or faith; ruined; lost.

Once more I will renew

His lapsed powers, though forfeit, and enthrall'd
By sin to foul exorbitant desires. Milton.

A sprout of that fig tree which was to hide the nakedness of lapsed Adam.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

These were looked on as lapsed persons, and great severities of penance were prescribed them, as appears by the canons of Ancyra.

Stillingfleet.

3. Omitted or let slip by mistake or inadvertency.

Let there be no wilful perversion of another's meaning; no sudden seizure of a lapsed syllable to play upon it.

Watts.

LA'PSTONE.* n. s. A cobbler's stone, on which he hammers his leather. Brockett's N. C. Words.

LA'FWING. † n. s. [lap and wing.] Dr. Johnson. — The word was at first lapwink. So Huloet calls it, in his old dictionary. And so Gower, long before. "A lapwynke made he was." Conf. Am. B. 5. And thus the Saxon lepepine,] A clamorous bird with long wings.

The lapping runs away with the shell on his head.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Ah! but I think him better than I say,
And yet would herein others eyes were worse:

Far from her nest the lapping cries away;
My heart prays for him, though my tongue do curse. Shakespeare.

And how in fields the lapping Tereus reigns,
The warbling nightingale in woods complains.

Dryden.

LA'FWORK. n. s. [lap and work.] Work in which one part is interchangeably wrapped over the other.

A basket made of porcupine quills; the ground is a pack-thread caul woven, into which, by the Indian women, are wrought, by a kind of lap-work, the quills of porcupines, not split, but of the young ones intire; mixed with white and black in even and indented waves.

Greuv, Museum.

LAR.* n. s. [Latin.] An household god.
Nor will she her dear Lar forget,
Victorious by his benefit. Lovace, Luc. Posth. p. 48.
On the holy hearth
The Lars and Lemures moan with midnight plaint.
Milton, Ode Nativ.

LA'BOARD. n. s.

The left hand side of a ship, when you stand with your face to the head: opposed to the starboard. Harris.
Or when Ulysses on the larboard shunn'd
Charybdis, and by the other whirlpool steer'd.
Milton, P. L.

Tack to the larboard, and stand off to sea,
Veer starboard sea and land. Dryden.

LA'RCENY.† n. s. [larcin, Fr.; latrocinium, Lat.]

Theft; robbery: and it is twofold, viz. grand and petit, i. e. great and small; that, when what is stolen exceeds, this, when it exceeds not, twelve pence in in value. Bullok.

Larceny, or theft, is distinguished by the law into two sorts; the one called simple larceny, unaccompanied with any other atrocious circumstance; and mixt or compound larceny, which also includes in it the aggravation of taking from one's house or person. Simple larceny, when it is the stealing of goods above the value of twelve pence is called grand larceny; when of goods to that value, or under, petty larceny. Blackstone.

Those laws would be very unjust, that should chastise murder and petty larceny with the same punishment. Spectator.

LARCH. n. s. [larix, Lat.] A tree.

Some botanical critics tell us, the poets have not rightly followed the traditions of antiquity, in metamorphosing the sisters of Phaëton into poplars, who ought to have been turned into larch trees; for that it is this kind of tree which sheds a gum, and is commonly found on the banks of the Po. Addison on Italy.

LARD.† n. s. [lardum, Lat.; lard, Fr.]1. The grease of swine.

So may thy pastures with their flow'ry feasts,
As suddenly as lard fat thy lean beasts. Donne.
2. Bacon; the flesh of swine; salted pork. Barrett.

By this the boiling kettle had prepar'd,
And to the table sent the smoking lard;
On which with eager appetite they dine,
A savoury bit, that serv'd to relish wine. Dryden, Ovid.

The sacrifice they sped;
Chopp'd off their nervous thighs, and next prepar'd
To involve the lean in cauls, and mend with lard. Dryden.

To LARD.† v. a. [larder, French; from the noun.]1. To stuff with bacon.

The larded thighs on loaded altars laid.
Dryden, Homer.
No man lards salt pork with orange peel,
Or garnishes his lamb with spitch-cock eel. King.

2. To fatten.

And with his nuts larded many swine.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.
Now Falstaff sweats to death,
And lards the lean earth as he walks along. Shakespeare.

Brave soldier, doth he lie
Larding the plain? Shakespeare, Hen. V.
Thirsting to revenge his naval ruins, that have larded our seas. Milton, Of Ref. B. 2.

3. To mix with something else by way of improvement.

An exact command,
Larded with many several sorts of reasons.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Let no alien interpose,
To lard with wit thy hungry Eposom prose. Dryden.
He lards with flourishes his long harangue,
'Tis fine, sayst thou. Dryden.

Swearing by heaven; the poets think this nothing, their plays are so much larded with it.
Collier, View of the Stage.

To LARD.* v. n. To grow fat.

In the furrow by, where Ceres lies much spill'd,
The unwieldy larding swine his maw then having fill'd,
Lies wallowing in the mire. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 14.

LA'RDER. n. s. [lardier, old French; from lard.] The room where meat is kept or salted.

This similitude is not borrowed of the larder house, but out of the school house.

Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Flesh is ill kept in a room that is not cool;
whereas in a cool and wet larder it will keep longer. Bacon.

So have I seen in larder dark,
Of veal a lucid loin. Dorset.

Old age,

Morose, perverse in humour, diffident
The more he still abounds, the less content:
His larder and his kitchen too observes,
And now, lest he should want hereafter, starves. King.

LARUM. n. s. [from alarum or alarm.] 1. Alarm; noise noting danger.

His larum bell might loud and wide be heard,
When cause requir'd, but never out of time.

The peaking cornute, her husband, dwelling in a continual larum of jealousy, comes to me in the instant of our encounter.

How far off lie these armies?
— Within a mile and half.

— Then shall we hear their larum, and they ours.

She is become formidable to all her neighbours,

as she puts every one to stand upon his guard, and have a continual larum bell in his ears.

2. An instrument that makes a noise at a certain hour.

Of this nature was that larum, which, though it were but three inches big, yet would both wake a man, and of itself light a candle for him at any set hour.

I see men as lusty and strong that eat but two meals a day, as others, that have set their stomachs, like larums, to call on them for four or five.

The young Æneas, all at once let down,
Sunn'd with his giddy larum half the town.

LARYNGOTOMY. n. s. [λάρυγξ and τέμνω; laryngotomie, Fr.] An operation where the fore part of the larynx is divided to assist respiration during large tumours upon the upper parts; as in a quinsy.

LARYNX.† n. s. [λάρυγξ.] 1. The upper part of the trachea, which lies below the root of the tongue, before the pharynx.

There are thirteen muscles for the motion of the five cartilages of the larynx.

2. In botany, the larch.

The larynx is as frequent upon the mountains in this country, as the white pine, or common Scotch fir.

LASCAR.* n. s. A native seaman, or a native gunner, of India.

LASCIENCY.* n. s. [from lascivius, Lat.] Wantonness.

Men, by letting themselves loose to all manner of wretchedness and debauchery, through the potent and enormous lascivency of the bodily life, quite lose the relish and grateful sense of true goodness and nobility.

LASCIENT.† adj. [lascivius, Lat.] Frolicsome; wantoning.

The various toys — of the lascivient life.

LASCIVIOUS. adj. [lascivus, Lat.] 1. Lewd; lustful.

In what habit will you go along?
— Not like a woman; for I would prevent

The loose encounters of lascivious men.

Began to cast lascivious eyes; she him As wantonly repaid; in lust they burn.

Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, and those unanswerable difficulties which, over their cups, they pretend to have against christianity; persuade but the covetous man not to defile his money, the lascivious man to throw off his lewd amours, and all their giant-like objections against christianity shall presently vanish.

2. Wanton; soft; luxurious.

Grim-visag'd war hath smooth'd his wrinkl'd front;
And now, instead of mounting barbed steeds,
To fright the souls of fearful adversaries,
He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,
To the lascivious pleasing of a lute.

LASCIVIOUSLY.† adv. [from lascivious.] Lewdly; wantonly; loosely.

Many men are so lasciviously given, either out of a depraved nature, or too much liberty.

Lasciviously decked like a courtesan.

She looked upon him amorously, or rather lasciviously.

LASCIVIOUSNESS. n. s. [from lascivious.] Wantonness; looseness.

The reason pretended by Augustus was the lasciviousness of his elegies, and his art of love.

LASH.† n. s. [The most probable etymology of this word seems to be that of Skinner, from schlagen, Dutch, to strike; whence slash and lash. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. H. Tooke gives a very different and forced etymon, to which few will subscribe: he calls a lash, Fr. lasche, that part of a whip which is let loose, let go, cast out, thrown out; the past participle of Fr. lascher, Ital. lasciare. Divers. of Purley, ii. 32. — It is the German laschen, to lash; lasche, is a flap, a bit of leather, a leash.]

1. A stroke with any thing pliant and tough.

From hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains Of sounding lashes, and of dragging chains.

Rous'd by the lash of his own stubborn tail,
Our lion now will foreign foes assail.

2. The thong or point of the whip which gives the cut or blow.

Her whip of cricket's bone, her lash of flim,
Her waggoner a small grey-coated gnat.

I observed that your whip wanted a lash to it.

3. A leash or string in which an animal is held; a snare; out of use.

The farmer they leave in the lash,
With losses on every side.

4. A stroke of satire; a sarcasm.

The moral is a lash at the vanity of arrogating that to ourselves which succeeds well.

To LASH. v. a. [from the noun.] 1. To strike with any thing pliant; to scourge.

Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again,
Lash hence these over-weening rags of France.

He charg'd the flames, and those that disobey'd
He lash'd to duty with his sword of light.

And limping death, lash'd on by fate,
Comes up to shorten half our date.

We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward.

Leaning on his lance, he mounts his car,
His fiery coursers lashing through the air.

2. To move with a sudden spring or jerk.

The club hung round his ears, and batter'd brows;
He falls; and lashing up his heels, his rider throws.

3. To beat; to strike with a sharp sound.

The winds grow high,
Impending tempests charge the sky;
The lightning flies, the thunder roars,
And big waves lash the frighted shores.

4. To scourge with satire.

Could pension'd Boileau lash in honest strain,
Flatt'ers and bigots ev'n in Louis' reign.

To LASH.† v. n. To ply the whip, or any weapon held in the hand,

He through long sufferance growing now more great,
Rose in his strength, and gan her fresh assayle,
Heaping huge strokes as thicke as showre of hayle,
And lashing dreadfully at ev'ry part,
As if he thought her soul to disentrayle.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. vi. 16.

They lash aloud, each other they provoke,
And lend their little souls at ev'ry stroke.

Dryden, Æn.

Gentle or sharp, according to thy choice,
To laugh at follies, or to lash at vice. Dryd. Pers.
Let men out of their way lash on ever so fast,
They are not at all the nearer their journey's end.

South.

Wheels clash with wheels, and bar the narrow street;

The lashing whip resounds: Gay, Trivia.
LASH-FREE* adj. [lash and free.] Free from the stroke of satire.

I with this whip you see

Do lash the time, and am myself lash-free.

B. Jonson, Masques.

To LASH out v. n. [perhaps from the Goth. lausjan, to let loose.] To break out; to be extravagant; to become unruly. Our old lexicographers, Huloet and Barret, give the word with out; but it is also used in this sense by itself.

We know not what rich joys we lose, when first we lash into a new offence. Feltham, Res. ii. 40.

A pious education may lay such strong fetters, such powerful restrictions upon the heart, that it shall not be able to lash out into those excesses and enormities, which the more licentious and debauched part of the world wallow in.

South, Serm. x. 347.

LA'SHER* n. s. [from lash.]
1. One that whips or lashes. Sherwood.
2. A great quantity of water thrown forcibly. A colloquial word. In Scotland lash is the same. See Dr. Jamieson's Suppl. in voce.

The lashings out of his luxury.

South, Serm. ix. 72.

LASK* n. s. [from laxus, Lat.] A looseness; a lax, as our old dictionaries call it; a flux. It is still spoken of cattle.

A grave and learned minister, was one day, as he walked in the fields for his recreation, suddenly taken with a lask of looseness.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 99.

LASS n. s. [from lad is formed laddess, by contraction lass. Hickes.] A girl; a maid; a young woman: used now only of mean girls.

Now was the time for vigorous lads to show
What love or honour could invite them to;
A goodly theatre, where rocks are round
With reverend age, and lovely lasses crown'd.

Waller.

A girl was worth forty of our widows; and an honest, down-right, plain-dealing lass it was.

L'Estrange.

They sometimes an hasty kiss
Steal from unwary lasses; they with scorn,
And neck reclin'd, resent. Philips.

LA'SSITUDE* n. s. [lassitudo, Latin; lassitude, French. This word seems to have been established about 1540. Sir T. Elyot, speaking of "two dyscrasies of the body, crudity and lassitude," says, "which although they be wordes made of Latyne, havyng none apte Englyshe wordes therefore, yet by the definitions and more ample declaration of them they shall be understood sufficiently, and from henceforth used for Englishe." Castel of Health, 1541, fol. 74. b.]

1. Weariness; fatigue; the pain arising from hard labour.

Lassitude is remedied by bathing, or anointing with oil and warm water; for all lassitude is a kind of contusion and compression of the parts; and bathing and anointing give a relaxation or emolliation.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Assiduity in cogitation is more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude or distemper.

Glanville, Sceptis.

She lives and breeds in air; the largeness and lightness of her wings and tail sustain her without lassitude.

More, Antid. against Atheism.
Do not over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and thereby be tempted to nauseate, and grow tired.

Watts, Impr. of the Mind.

From mouth and nose the briny torrent ran,
And lost in lassitude lay all the man.

Pope, Odys.

2. [In physick.]

Lassitude generally expresses that weariness which proceeds from a dis-temper'd state, and not from exercise, which wants no remedy but rest: it proceeds from an increase of bulk, from a diminution of proper evacuation, or from too great a consumption of the fluid necessary to maintain the spring of the solids, as in fevers; or from a vitiated secretion of that juice, whereby the fibres are not supplied.

Quincy.

LA'SSLORN n. s. [lass and lorn.] Forsaken by his mistress. Not used.

Broom groves,

Whose shadow the dismissed batchelor loves,
Where lasslorn. Shakspeare, Tempest.

LAST adj. [læst, lart, Saxon; laetst, Dutch.]

1. Latest; that which follows all the rest in time.

Why are ye the last to bring the king back?

2 Sam. xix. 11.

O, may some spark of your celestial fire,
The last, the meanest of your sons inspire! Pope.

2. Hindmost; which follows in order of place.

Merion pursued at greater distance still,
Last came Admetus, thy unhappy son. Pope.

3. Beyond which there is no more.

I will slay the last of them with the sword.

Amos, ix. 1.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Unhappy to the last the kind releasing knell.

Cowley.

The swans, that on Cayster often tried
Their tuneful songs, now sung their last,
and died. Addison.

O! may fam'd Brunswick be the last,
The last, the happiest British king,
Whom thou shalt paint, or I shall sing. Addison.

But while I take my last adieu,
Heave thou no sigh, nor shed a tear. Prior.

Here, last of Britons, let your names be read.

Pope.

Wit not alone has shone on ages past,
But lights the present, and shall warm the last.

Pope.

4. The lowest; the meanest.

Antilochus

Takes the last prize, and takes it with a jest.

Pope.

5. Next before the present; as, last week.

6. Utmost.

Fools ambitiously contend
For wit and power; their last endeavors bend
To outshine each other. Dryden, Lucret.

7. At LAST. In conclusion; at the end.
Ad a troop shall overcome him; but she shall overcome at the last. Gen. xlix. 19.

Thus weather-cocks, that for a while
Have turn'd about with every blast,
Grown old and destitute of oil,
Rust to a point, and fix at last. Freind.

8. The LAST; the end.
All politicians chew on wisdom past,
And blunder on in business to the last. Pope.

LAST adv.

1. The last time; the time next before the present.

How long is't now since last yourself and I
Were in a mask? Shakspeare.

When last I died, and, dear! I die
As often as from thee I go,
I can remember yet that I
Something did say, and something did bestow. Donne.

2. In conclusion.

Pleas'd with his idol, he commends, admires,
Adores; and, last, the thing ador'd desires. Dryden.

To LAST v. n. [lajtan, Saxon.] To endure; to continue; to persevere.

All more lasting than beautiful. Sidney.

I thought it agreeable to my affection to your grace to prefix your name before the essays: for the Latin volume of them, being in the universal language, may last as long as books last. Bacon.

With several degrees of lasting, ideas are imprinted on the memory. Locke.

These are standing marks of facts delivered by those who are eye-witnesses to them, and which were contrived with great wisdom to last till time should be no more. Addison.

LAST† n. s. [læste, lært, Sax. the mould for a shoe-maker to work on; laist, Germ. the form or shape of the foot, from the old word leissen, to imitate. Wachter; or from the Goth. laistjan, to follow.]

1. The mould on which shoes are formed. The cobbler is not to go beyond his last.

L'Estrange.

A cobbler produced several new grins, having been used to cut faces over his last.

Addison, Spect.

Should the big last extend the shoe too wide,
Each stone would wrench th' unwary step aside. Gay.

2. A load; a certain weight or measure; a measure of corn, consisting of ten quarters. This usage is common in our eastern counties, and is also found in the north; [hlæft, Sax. last, German.]

LA'STERY n. s. A red colour.
The bashful blood her snowy cheeks did spread,
That her became as polish'd ivory,
Which cunning craftsman's hand hath overlaid,
With fair vermilion, or pure lastery. Spenser.

LASTAGE† n. s. [lestage, Fr. lastagie, Dutch, hlæft, Sax. a load.]

1. Custom paid for freightage.

2. Ballast for a ship. Huloet.

LA'STAGED* adj. [from the noun.] Ballasted. Huloet.

LA'STING participial adj. [from last.]

1. Continuing; durable.

Every violence offered weakens and impairs,
and renders the body less durable and lasting.

Ray on the Creation.

2. Of long continuance; perpetual.

White parents may have black children, as negroes sometimes have lasting white ones.

Boyle on Colours.

The grateful work is done,
The seeds of discord sow'd, the war begun:
Frauds, fears, and fury, have possess'd the state,
And fix'd the causes of a lasting hate.

Dryden, Æn.

A sinew cracked seldom recovers its former strength, and the memory of it leaves a lasting caution in the man, not to put the part quickly again to any robust employment.

Locke.

LA'STINGLY.† adv. [from lasting.] Perpetually; durably.

It is an art now lately studied by some so to incorporate wine and oil, that they may lastingly hold together.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 15.

LA'STINGNESS. n. s. [from lasting.] Durableness; continuance.

All more lasting than beautiful, but that the consideration of the exceeding lastingness made the eye believe it was exceeding beautiful. Sidney.
Consider the lastingness of the motions excited in the bottom of the eye by light. Newton, Opticks.

LA'STLY. adv. [from last.]

1. In the last place.

I will justify the quarrel; secondly, balance the forces; and, lastly, propound variety of designs for choice, but not advise the choice.

Bacon, War with Spain.

2. In the conclusion; at last; finally.

LATCH.† n. s. [letse, Teut. laccio, Italian.]

Dr. Johnson.—The past participle of the Sax. læccan, to lay hold of, to catch. Mr. H. Tooke.] A catch of a door moved by a string, or a handle.

The latch mov'd up. Gay, Pastorals.
Then comes rosy health from her cottage of thatch,

Where never physician had lifted the latch. Smart.

To LATCH.† v. a.

1. To catch. [læccan, Sax.] It is thus used in the north of England.

Pumy stones I hastily hent,
And threw; but nought availed:
He was so wimble and so wight,
From bough to bough he leaped light,
And oft the pumies latched.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. March.

It is we that should have been smitten with these sorrows by the fierce wrath of God, had not he stepped between the blow and us, and latched it in his own body and soul, even the dint of the fierceness of the wrath of God.

Bp. Andrews, Serm. on the Passion.

I have words,
That would be howl'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not latch them.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Of a man that latches the weapon in his own body to save his prince.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. ii. 10.

2. To fasten; to fasten with a latch.

St. Mark, i. 7.

LATE.† adj. [lax, læx, late, Saxon; latr, Icel. lata, M. Goth. lat, Su. Goth. laet, Dutch; in the comparative latter for later, in the superlative latest or last. Last is absolute and definite, more than latest.]

1. Contrary to early; slow; tardy; long delayed.

My hasting days flie on with full career,
But my late spring no bud nor blossom sheweth.

Milton, Sonnet.

Just was the vengeance, and to latest days
Shall long posterity resound thy praise.

Pope, Odys.

2. Last in any place, office, or character.

All the difference between the late servants, and those who staid in the family, was, that those latter were finer gentlemen.

Addison, Spect.

3. Last in time; as, of late days, of late years.

4. The deceased; within a moderate period. Thus Dr. Johnson illustrates it by "the works of the late Mr. Pope," and we may say, "the works of the late Dr. Johnson."

5. Far in the day or night.

LATE. adv.

1. After long delays; after a long time. It is used often with too, when the proper time is past.

O boy! thy father gave thee life too soon,
And hath bereft thee of thy life too late.

Shakspeare.

A second Silvius after these appears,
Silvius Æneas, for thy name he bears;
For arms and justice equally renown'd,
Who late restor'd in Alba shall be crown'd.

Dryden, Æn.

He laughs at all the giddy turns of state,
When mortals search too soon, and fear too late.

Dryden.

The later it is before any one comes to have these ideas, the later also will it be before he comes to those maxims.

I might have spared his life,

But now it is too late.

Philips, Distr. Mother.

2. In a later season.

To make roses, or other flowers, come late, is an experiment of pleasure; for the antients esteemed much of the rosa sera.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

There be some flowers which come more early, and others which come more late, in the year.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. Lately; not long ago.

They arrived in that pleasant isle,

Where, sleeping late, she left her other knight.

I will not fail to give ye, readers, a present taste of him from his title, hung out like a tolling signpost to call passengers, not simply a confutation, but "a modest confutation," with a laudatory of itself obtruded in the very first word.

Milton, Apol. for Smectymnus.

LAUDER.* n. s. [from laud.] A praiser; a commender. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

TO LAVE.† v. a. [lavo, Latin, from the Gr. λᾶω, contracted from λᾶω, to wash; with the Eolick digamma, γῶλῶ, changing o into a. So the Latins say lavare and lavere, perf. lavi, sup. lavatum and lotum. Morin, Dict. Etym. Fr. and Gr.]

1. To wash; to bathe.

Unsafe, that we must leave our honours
In these so flat'ring streams, Shakespeare, Macbeth.
But as I rose out of the laving stream,
Heaven open'd her eternal doors, from whence
The spirit descended on me like a dove.

With roomy decks, her guns of mighty strength,
Whose low-laid mouths each mounting billow
laves,
Deep in her draught, and warlike in her length,
She seems a sea-wasp flying on the waves. Dryden.

2. [Lever, Fr.] To throw up; to lade; to draw out.

Though hills were set on hills,
And seas met seas to guard thee, I would through:
I'd plough up rocks, steep as the Alps, in dust,
And lave the Tyrrhene waters into clouds,
But I would reach thy head. B. Jonson, Catiline.
Some stow their oars, or stop the leaky sides,
Another bolder yet the yard bestrides,
And folds the sails; a fourth with labour laves
Th' intruding seas, and waves ejects on waves.

Dryden.

1. To make that noise which sudden merriment excites.

You saw my master wink and laugh upon you.

Shakespeare.

There's one did laugh in's sleep, and one cried,

Murther!

They wak'd each other. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

At this fusty stuff,

The large Achilles on his press bed lolling,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause.

Shakespeare.

Laughing causeth a continual expulsion of the breath with the loud noise, which maketh the interjection of laughings, shaking of the breast and sides, running of the eyes with water, if it be violent.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. [In poetry.] To appear gay, favourable, pleasant, or fertile.

Entreat her not the worse, in that I pray
You use her well: the world may laugh again,
And I may live to do you kindness, if
You do it her. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The vallies shall stand so thick with corn, that they shall laugh and sing. Ps. lxx. 14.

Then laughs the childish year with flow'rets crown'd.

The plenteous board, high heap'd with cates divine,

And o'er the foaming bowl the laughing wine.

Pope.

TO LAUGH.† v. a.

1. To deride; to scorn.

Be bloody, bold, and resolute; laugh to scorn
The pow'r of man. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

A wicked soul shall make him to be laughed to scorn of his enemies. Ecclesi. vi. 4.

2. TO LAUGH at. To treat with contempt; to ridicule. Dr. Johnson places this improperly as a verb neuter.

Presently prepare thy grave;
Lie where the light foam of the sea might beat
Thy grave-stone daily: make thine epitaph,
That death in thee at others lives may laugh.

Shakespeare.

'Twere better for you, if 'twere not known in council; you'll be laugh'd at. Shakespeare.

The dissolute and abandoned, before they are aware of it, are betrayed to laugh at themselves, and upon reflection find, that they are merry at their own expense. Addison.

No wit to flatter left of all his store;
No fool to laugh at, which he valu'd more. Pope.

LAUGH. n. s. [from the verb.] The convulsion caused by merriment; an inarticulate expression of sudden merriment.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain;
Then hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh, to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found.

Pope, Spring.

LAUGH-WORTHY.* adj. Deserving to be laughed at.

They laugh'd at his laugh-worthy fate.

B. Jonson, Epigrams.

LAUGH AND LAY DOWN.* A game at cards.

Eye on this winning away,
Now nothing but pay, pay,
With laugh and lay down,
Borough, citie, and towne. Skelton, Poems, p. 168.

LAUGHABLE. adj. [from laugh.] Such as may properly excite laughter.

Nature hath fram'd strange fellows in her time:
Some that will evermore peep through their eye,
And laugh like parrots at a bagpiper;
And others of such vinegar aspect,
That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile,
Though Nestor swear the jest be laughable.

Shakespeare.

Casaubon confesses Persius was not good at turning things into a pleasant ridicule; or, in other words, that he was not a laughable writer.

Dryden, Juv.

LAUGH'ER n. s. [from laugh.] A man fond of merriment.

I am a common laugh'er. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.
Some sober men cannot be of the general opinion, but the laughers are much the majority. Pope.

LAUGHINGLY.† adv. [from laughing.] In a merry way; merrily.

He tolde maister Bradford, that he had made the Bishop of London afraid: for, saith he laughingly, his chaplaine gave him counsell not to strike me with his crosier staffe, for that I would strike again; and by my troth, said he, rubbing his hands, I made him believe I would do so indeed.

Fox, Acts and Mon. of Dr. R. Taylor.

LAUGHINGSTOCK. n. s. [laugh and stock.]

A butt; an object of ridicule.

The forlorn maiden, whom your eyes have seen
The laughingstock of fortune's mocker. Spenser.
Pray you let us not be laughingstocks to other men's humours. Shakespeare.

Supine credulous frailty exposes a man to be both a prey and laughingstock at once. L'Estrange.

LAUGHTER. n. s. [from laugh.] Convulsive merriment; an inarticulate expression of sudden merriment.

To be worst,

The lowest, most dejected thing of fortune;
Stands still in esperance; lives not in fear,
The lamentable change is from the best,
The worst returns to laughter.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

The act of laughter, which is a sweet contraction of the muscles of the face, and a pleasant agitation of the vocal organs, is not merely voluntary, or totally within the jurisdiction of ourselves.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

We find not that the laughter-loving dame

Mourn'd for Anchises. Waller.

Pain or pleasure, grief or laughter. Prior.

LA'VISH. adj. [Of this word I have been able to find no satisfactory etymology. It may be plausibly derived from to lave, to throw out; as profundere opes is to be lavish.]

1. Prodigal; wasteful; indiscreetly liberal,
His jolly brother, opposite in sense,
Laughs at his thrift; and lavish of expence,
Quaffs, crams, and guttles in his own defence.

Dryden.

The dame has been too lavish of her feast,
And fed him till he loaths. Rowe, Jane Shore.

2. Scattered in waste; profuse: as, the cost was lavish.

3. Wild; unrestrained.

Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof,
Confronted him, curbing his lavish spirit.

Shakespeare.

To LA'VISH. v. a. [from the adjective.] To scatter with profusion; to waste; to squander.

Should we thus lead them to a field of slaughter,
Might not the impartial world with reason say,
We lavish'd at our death the blood of thousands.

Addison.

LA'VISHES. n. s. [from lavish.] A prodigal; a profuse man.

Tertullian very truly observeth, God is not a lavisher, but a dispenser, of his blessings.

Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 189.

Let those lavishes, that made the covetous their volders, live so thriftily as to pay their debts in their life-time; so may they deprive their executors of a trouble.

Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1634,) p. 209.

LA'VISHLY. adv. [from lavish.] Profusely; prodigally.

My father's purposes have been mistook;

And some about him have too lavishly

Wrested his meaning and authority.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Then laughs the childish year with flowrets crown'd,
And lavishly perfumes the fields around. Dryden.
Praise to a wit is like rain to a tender flower;
if it be moderately bestowed, it cheers and revives;
but if too lavishly, overcharges and depresses him.

Pope.

LA'VISHMENT. † n. s. [from lavish.] PRO-
LA'VISHMENT. † digality; profusion.

First got with guile, and then preserv'd with dread,

And after spent with pride and lavishment.

Spenser, F. Q.

They are given to lavishment of their gettings.
Lord's Hist. of the Banians, (1630,) p. 44.

VOL. II.

There seems to be a profusion and lavishness of the particles in some places of the noblest classics.
Blackwall, Sac. Class. i. 225.

LAUNCE.* See LANCE.

To LAUNCH. † v. n. [It is derived by Skinner from lance, because a ship is pushed into water with great force. See To LANCH.]

1. To force a vessel into the sea.

Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught. St. Luke, v. 4.

So short a stay prevails;

He soon equips the ship, supplies the sails,

And gives the word to launch. Dryden.

For general history Raleigh and Howel are to be had. He who would launch farther into the ocean, may consult Whear. Locke.

2. To rove at large; to expatiate; to make excursions.

From hence that gen'ral care and study springs,
That launching and progression of the mind.

Davies.

Whoever pursues his own thoughts, will find them launch out beyond the extent of body into the infinity of space. Locke.

Spenser has not contented himself with submissive imitation: he launches out into very flowery paths, which still conduct him into one great road.

Prior, Pref. to Solomon.

He had not acted in the character of a suppliant, if he had launched out into a long oration.

Broom on the Odyssey.

I have launched out of my subject on this article. Arbutnot.

3. To plunge into: as, the man launched into an expensive way of living.

To LAUNCH. v. a.

1. To push to sea.

All art is used to sink episcopacy, and launch presbytery, in England. King Charles.

With stays and cordage last he rigg'd the ship,
And roll'd on leavers, launch'd her in the deep.

Pope.

2. To dart from the hand. This perhaps, for distinction sake, might better be written lanch or lance.

The King of Heav'n, obscure on high,
Bar'd his red arm, and launching from the sky
His withen bolt, not shaking empty smoke,
Down to the deep abyss the flaming fellow strook.

Dryden.

LAUNCH.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of putting a ship out of the dock, and launching her into the water. A particular kind of long-boat.

LAUND. † n. s. [lande, French; landa, Spanish; Dan. llan, Welsh.] Lawn; a plain extended between woods. Originally, a plain not ploughed. The old form of writing lawn.

There was the hart ywont to have his flight:—
This duke will have a cours at him or tway

With houndes, &c.

And when this duke was comen to the launde, &c.

Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

Under this thick-grown brake we'll shroud ourselves,
For through this laund anon the deer will come;

And in this covert will we make our stand. Shakespeare.

About the lawnds and wastes, both far and near.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

That grove for ever green, that conscious laund.
Dryden, Pal. and Arcite.

LAUNDER.* n. s. [lavandiere, French, a laundress; and thus Chaucer calls Envy a lavender, in his Rom. of the Rose. The same word is applied to women in Arnold's Chronicle, fol. 193. Thus also our old lexicography calls "a launder, a woman-washer." Huloet. Skinner's supposition, therefore, that our laundress may be formed from such a French word as lavandresse, is needless. Laundress is, no doubt, from this hitherto unnoticed word launder.] A woman whose employment is to wash clothes.

This effeminate love of a woman doth so womanize a man, that, if he yield to it, it will not only make him an Amazon, but a launder, a distaff-spinner, or whatsoever other vile occupation their idle heads can imagine, and their weak hands perform. Sidney, Arcad. b. 1.

To LA'UNDER.* v. a. [from the noun.] To wash; to wet.

Oft did she heave her napkin to her eye,
Which on it had conceited characters,
Laundering the silken figures in the brine
That season'd woe had pelleted in tears.

Shakespeare, Lov. Complaint.

If 'twere prun'd, and starch'd, and launder'd,
And cut square by the Russian standard.

Hudibras, ii. 1.

LA'UNDERER.* n. s. [from launder.] A man that follows the business of washing.

He is a launderer of souls, and tries them, as men do witches, by water. Butler, Rem. ii. 586.

LA'UNDRESS. † n. s. [lavandiere, French: Skinner imagines that lavandresse may have been the old word. Dr. Johnson. — It will be rather admitted that laundress is from launder. See LAUNDER.] A woman whose employment is to wash clothes.

The countess of Richmond would often say, on condition the princes of Christendom would march against the Turks, she would willingly attend them, and be their laundress. Candem.
Take up these clothes here quickly; carry them to the laundress in Datchet mead. Shakespeare.

The laundress must be sure to tear her smocks in the washing, and yet wash them but half Swift.

To LA'UNDRESS.* v. n. To do the work of a laundress. Not in use.

Their wives are used to dress their meat, to laundress. Blount, Voy. to the Levant, (1650,) p. 26.

LA'UNDRY. n. s. [as if lavanderie.]

1. The room in which clothes are washed.

The affairs of the family ought to be consulted, whether they concern the stable, dairy, the pantry, or laundry. Swift.

2. The act or state of washing.

Chalky water is too fretting, as appeareth in laundry of clothes, which wear out apace.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

LAVO'LTA. † n. s. [la volte, French. Dr. Johnson. — Rather the Italian la volta, being brought, with other feats of capering, from Italy. It means literally the turn. It is written also lavolto and lavolt.] An old dance in which was much turning and much capering.

Hammer.

I cannot sing,
Nor heel the high lavolt; nor sweeten talk;
Nor play at subtle games. Shakespeare.

They bid us — to the English dancing schools,
And teach lavoltas high, and swift corantos.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Ixon is — turned dancer, and leads lavoltas with the Lamie. B. Jonson, Masques.

A homely Venus attired like a Bacchanal, attended by many morris-dancers, began to caper and frisk their best volantes, so as every limb strove to exceed each other.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 118.

To LAUREATE.* v. a. [laureatus, Lat. from laureo.] To crown with laurel.

Cockeram.

Skelton was laureated at Oxford, and in the year 1493 was permitted to wear his laurel at Cambridge.

Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 130.

LAUREATE.† adj. [laureatus, Lat.] Decked or invested with a laurel.

To Rome again repairth Julius
With his triumph laureat full hie.

Chaucer, Monk's Tale.

Then is he decked as poete laureate.

Barklay, Eglog. iv. (1570.)

Bid amaranthus all his beauty shed,
And daffodills fill their cups with tears,
To strew the laureat hearse where Lydick lies.

Milton, Lycidas.

From the laureat fraternity of poets, ripe years and the ceaseless round of study and reading led me to the shady spaces of philosophy.

Milton, Apol. for Smectymnus.

Soft on her lap her laureate son reclines. Pope.

LAUREATE.* n. s. One crowned with laurel. In King Edward the Fourth's time it was the appellation of the king's poet, who was then first so called; and the laureate still continues to be the title of his successors. At "the degrees in grammar, which included rhetoric and versification, anciently taken in our universities, particularly at Oxford; a wreath of laurel was presented to the new graduate, who was afterwards usually styled poeta laureatus." Warton, Hist. Eng. Poetry, vol. ii. p. 129.

The full sense of a learned laureate.

Cleveland, Poems, p. 66.

The flourishing wreaths by laureats worn.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 526.

Few verses touch their nicer ear,

They scarce can bear their laureate twice a year.

Pope, Hor. Sat. i.

Nor yet the laureat's crown

In thought exclude him! Shenstone, Econ. P. iii.

LAUREATION.† n. s. [from laureate.] It denotes, in the Scottish universities, the act or state of having degrees conferred, as they have in some of them a flowery crown, in imitation of laurel among the ancients. Dr. Johnson.—It is so used, in reference to the degrees conferred by our own universities.

The scholastic laureations seem to have given rise to the appellation in question. I will give some instances at Oxford.

Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 129.

LAUREL. n. s. [laurus, Lat. laurier, French.] A tree, called also the cherry bay.

The laurus or laurel of the ancients is affirmed by naturalists to be what we call the bay tree.

Ainsworth.

The laurel, meed of mighty conquerors,

And poets sage. Spenser, F. Q.

The laurel or cherry-bay, by cutting away the side branches, will rise to a large tree.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

LAURELLED.† adj. [from laurel.] Crowned or decorated with laurel; laureate.

Upon your sword

Sits laurel'd victory. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

That true enthusiasm which transports and elevates the souls of poets above the middle region of vulgar conceptions, and makes them soar up to heaven to touch the stars with their laurelled heads.

Howell, Lett. i. v. 16.

Hear'st thou the news? my friend! the express is come

With laurel'd letters from the camp to Rome.

Dryden.

Then future ages with delight shall see

How Plato's, Bacon's, Newton's, looks agree;

Or in fair series laurel'd bards be shown

A Virgil there, and here an Addison.

Pope.

LAURUSTINE.*] n. s. [laurustinus, Lat.] LAURUSTINUS.} An evergreen shrub, which flowers about Michaelmas, and holds its flowers through the winter.

A laurustine bear in blossom, with a juniper hunter in berries. Guardian, No. 173.

The dusky bay, and laurustinus bright.

Anonymous.

LAW.† n. s. [laga, Saxon; loi, French; lawgh, Erse. Dr. Johnson.—Dr. Johnson might have added the Saxon form of lah; the Swedish lag; the Icelandic lag, lag, log; the Dan. low; and the old Fr. ley. Mr. H. Tooke deduces this word from the Goth. and Sax. lagjan, and lecjan, ponere, to lay down, to deliver, to decree; a derivation which indeed had been made half a century before the Divisions of Purley were given to the world. See Wachter in

V. LAGE: where this word is found in its several northern forms, and with this remark, which Mr. Tooke has imitated: "quibus sono et significatu convenit Lat. lex. Cuncta à legen, ponere, statuere, constituere, iudice Stiernhielmio in Gloss. Ulph. Goth. p. 104. Quid enim est lex, nisi statutum vel constitutio, sive ipsius Dei et naturæ, sive populi seipsum obligantis, sive principis populum moderantis?"

1. A rule of action.

That which doth assign unto each thing the kind, that which doth moderate the force and power, that which doth appoint the form and measure of working; the same we term a law.

Hooker, i. § 2.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws
Of nature, pleading in his children's cause.

Dryden.

2. A decree, edict, statute, or custom, publicly established as a rule of justice.

Ordain them laws, part such as appertain

To civil justice, part religious rites. Milton, P. L.

Our nation would not give laws to the Irish, therefore now the Irish gave laws to them.

Davies on Ireland.

3. A decree authoritatively annexing rewards or punishments to certain actions.

So many laws argue so many sins. Milton, P. L.

Laws politique among men presuming man to be rebellious.

Hooker.

4. Judicial process.

When every case in law is right. Shakespeare.

He hath resisted law,

And therefore law shall scorn him further trial

Than the severity of public power. Shakespeare.

Tom Touchy is a fellow famous for taking the law of every body: there is not one in the town where he lives that he has not sued at a quarter-sessions.

Addison, Spect.

5. A distinct edict or rule.

One law is split into two. Baker on Learning.

6. Conformity to law; any thing lawful.

19

In a rebellion,

When what's not meet, but what must be, was law,

Then were they chosen.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

7. The rules or axioms of science; as, the laws of mechanicks.

8. An established and constant mode or process; a fixed correspondence of cause and effect: as, the laws of magnetism.

Natural agents have their law.

Hooker.

I dy'd, whilst in the womb he stay'd,

Attending Nature's law.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

9. The Mosaic institution: distinguished from the gospel.

Law can discover sin, but not remove,

Save by these shadowy expiations.

Milton.

10. The books in which the Jewish religion is delivered: distinguished from the prophets.

Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets.

St. Matt. vii. 12.

11. A particular form or mode of trying and judging; as, law martial, law mercantile: the ecclesiastical law whereby we are governed.

12. Jurisprudence; the study of law: as, a doctor of law.

LAWBREAKER.* n. s. [law and breaker; Sax. lahbpeca.] One who violates a law.

Thou art a robber,

A lawbreaker, a villain. Shakespeare, Cymb.

In this chapter he shews, how they were the lawbreakers.

Milton, Tetrachordon.

LA'WDAY.* n. s. A day of open court; a solemn court of a county or hundred.

Keep leets and lawdays, and in sessions sit.

Shakespeare, Othello.

LA'WFUL. adj. [law and full.] Agreeable to law; conformable to law; allowed by law; legitimate; legal.

It is not lawful for thee to have her.

St. Matt. xiv. 4.

Gloster's bastard son was kinder to his father, than my daughters got 'tween the lawful sheets.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

LA'WFULLY. adv. [from lawful.] Legally; agreeably to law.

This bond is forfeit;

And lawfully by this the Jew may claim

A pound of flesh. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Though it be not against strict justice for a man to do those things which he might otherwise lawfully do, albeit his neighbour doth take occasion from thence to conceive in his mind a false belief, yet Christian charity will, in many cases, restrain a man.

South.

I may be allowed to tell your lordship, the king of poets, what an extent of power you have, and how lawfully you may exercise it.

Dryden, Decl. to Juvenal.

LA'WFULNESS. n. s. [from lawful.] Legality; allowance of law.

It were an error to speak further, till I may see some sound foundation laid of the lawfulness of the action.

Bacon.

LA'WGIVER. n. s. [law and giver.] Legislator; one that makes laws.

Solomon we esteem as the lawgiver of our nation.

Bacon.

A law may be very reasonable in itself, although one does not know the reason of the lawgivers.

Swift.

LA'WGIVING.† adj. [law and giving.] Legislative.

The indiminishable majesty of our highest court,
the lawgiving and sacred parliament.

Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.
Lawgiving heroes, fam'd for taming brutes,
And raising cities with their charming lutes.

Waller.

LA'WLESS. adj. [from law.]

1. Unrestrained by any law; not subject to law.

The necessity of war, which among human actions is the most lawless, hath some kind of affinity with the necessity of law.

Raleigh, Essays.

The lawless tyrant, who denies
To know their God, or message to regard,

Must be compell'd.

Milton, P. L.

Orpheus did not, as poets feign, tame savage
beasts,

But men as lawless, and as wild as they.

Roscom.

Not the gods, nor angry Jove will bear
Thy lawless wandering walks in open air.

Dryden, Æn.

Blind as the Cyclops, and as blind as he,
They own'd a lawless savage liberty,

Like that our painted ancestors so priz'd,
Ere empire's arts their breasts had civiliz'd.

Dryd.

He meteor-like, flames lawless through the void,
Destroying others, by himself destroy'd.

Pope.

2. Contrary to law; illegal.

Take not the quarrel from his powerful arms,
He needs no indirect nor lawless course

To cut off those that have offended him.

Shakspeare.

We cite our faults,
That they may hold excus'd our lawless lives.

Shakspeare.

Thou the first, lay down thy lawless claim;
Thou of my blood who bear'st the Julian name.

Dryden.

LA'WLESSLY. adv. [from lawless.] In a manner contrary to law.

Fear not, he bears an honourable mind,
And will not use a woman lawlessly.

Shakspeare.

LA'WLESSNESS. n. s. [from lawless.] Disorder; disobedience to law.

Gluttony, malice, pride, and covetise,
And lawlessness reigning with riotise.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

LA'WMAKER. n. s. [law and maker.] Legislator; one who makes laws; a law-giver.

Their judgement is, that the church of Christ should admit no lawmakers but the evangelists.

Hooker.

LA'WMONGER. n. s. A word of contempt for a smatterer in law, a low dealer in law.

Though this chattering lawmonger be bold to call it wicked.

Milton, Colasterion.

LAWN. † n. s. [lande, Fr. landa, Span. land, Dan. lan, Welsh.]

1. An open space between woods; originally, a plain not ploughed. See Chaucer under LAUND.

Betwixt them lawns, or level downs, and flocks,
Grazing the tender herb, were interpos'd.

Milton, P. L.

His mountains were shaded with young trees, that gradually shot up into groves, woods, and forests, intermixed with walks, and lawns, and gardens.

Addison.

Stern beasts in trains that by his truncheon fell,
Now gristly forms shoot o'er the lawns of hell.

Pope.

Interspers'd in lawns and opening glades,
Thin trees arise that shun each other's shades.

Pope.

2. [Linon, French.] Fine linen, remarkable for being used in the sleeves of bishops.

Should'st thou bleed,
To stop the wounds my finest lawn I'd tear,
Wash them with tears, and wipe them with my hair.

Prior.

From high life high characters are drawn,
A saint in crape is twice a saint in lawn.

Pope.

What awe did the slow solemn knell inspire;
The duties by the lawn rob'd prelate pay'd,

And the last words, that dust to dust convey'd!

Tickell.

LAWN.  adj.* Made of lawn: resembling lawn.

Look on those lips,
Those now lawn pillows, on whose tender softness
Chaste modest speech, stealing from out his breast,
Had wont to rest itself.

Marston, Antonio's Revenge.

The chimere or upper robe, to which the lawn
sleeves are generally sewed.

Wheatly on the Com. Prayer.

LA'WNY.  adj.* [from lawn.]

1. Having lawns; interspersed with lawns.

Through forests, mountains, or the lawny grounds.

W. Browne.

Stupendous rocks,
That from the sun-redoubling valley lift,
Cool to the middle air, their lawny tops.

Thomson, Summer.

Musing through the lawny vale.

Warton, Ode 10.

2. Made of lawn, or fine linen.

When a plum'd fan may shade thy chalked face,
And lawny strips thy naked bosom grace.

By. Hall, Sat. iv. 4.

LA'WSUIT, n. s. [law and suit.] A process in law; a litigation.

The giving the priest a right to the tithes would produce lawsuits and wrangles; his attendance on the courts of justice would leave his people without a spiritual guide.

Swift.

LA'WYER. † n. s. [from law. Dr. Johnson.] — It must be added, that our old word was not lawyer, but lawer. Thus Huloet, in his old dictionary: "Lawer, or man of law, causidicus." And thus Bale, in Leland's Newe Year's Gift. "To Locke up the gates of true knowledge, from them that affectuously seketh it to the glory of God, is a property belongyng only to the hypocrytysh Pharisees and false lawers." Thus the Sax. lahman.]

Professor of law; advocate; pleader.

It is like the breath of an unflee'd lawyer, you gave me nothing for it.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Is the law evil, because some lawyers in their office swerve from it?

Whitgift.

I have entered into a work touching laws, in a middle term, between the speculative and reverend discourses of philosophers, and the writings of lawyers.

Bacon, Holy War.

The nymphs with scorn beheld their foes,
When the defendant's council rose;

And, what no lawyer ever lack'd,
With impudence own'd all the fact.

Swift.

LA'WYERLY.  adj.* [from lawyer.] Judicial.

The more lawyerly mooting of this point.

Milton, Eiconoclastes, ch. 5.

LAX. adj. [laxus, Latin.]

1. Loose; not confined.

Inhabit lax, ye powers of heaven! Milton, P. L.

2. Disunited; not strongly combined.

In mines, those parts of the earth which abound with strata of stone, suffer much more than those which consist of gravel, and the like laxer matter, which more easily give way.

Woodward.

3. Vague; not rigidly exact.

Dialogues were only lax and moral discourses.

Baker.

4. Loose in body, so as to go frequently to stool; laxative medicines are such as promote that disposition.

Quincy.

5. Slack; not tense.

By a branch of the auditory nerve that goes between the ear and the palate, they can hear themselves, though their outward ear be stop'd by the lax membrane to all sounds that come that way.

Holder, Elem. of Speech.

LAX. † n. s.

1. A looseness; a diarrhoea. The same as laske. See LASKE.

2. A kind of salmon. [læx, Saxon.]

LAXA'TION. n. s. [laxatio, Latin.]

To force a passage through his side. Hudibras.

Answer, or answer not, 'tis all the same,
He lays me on, and makes me bear the blame. Dryden.

7. To LAY on. To act with vehemence: used of expences.
My father has made her mistress
Of the feast, and she lays it on. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

8. To LAY out. To take measures.
I made strict enquiry wherever I came, and laid out for intelligence of all places, where the trails of the earth were laid open. Woodward.

9. To LAY upon. To importune; to request with earnestness and incessantly. Obsolete.
All the people laid so earnestly upon him to take that war in hand, that they said they would never bear arms more against the Turks, if he omitted that occasion. Knolles.

LAY, v. n. [from the verb.]
1. A row; a stratum; a layer; one rank in a series, reckoned upwards.
A viol should have a lay of wire-strings below, as close to the belly as the lute, and then the strings of guts mounted upon a bridge as in ordinary viols, that the upper strings stricken might make the lower resound. Bacon.

Upon this they lay a layer of stone, and upon that a lay of wood. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. A wager.
My fortunes against any lay worth naming, this crack of your love shall grow stronger than this be before. Shakespeare, Othello.

It is thy just grief, that thou missest of the hearing of many good words: It is thy happiness, that thou art freed from the hearing of many evil. It is an even lay betwixt the benefit of hearing good, and the torment of hearing evil. Ep. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

It is esteemed an even lay whether any man lives ten years longer: I suppose it is the same, that one of any ten might die within one year. Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

3. Station; rank. Not in use.
Welcome unto thee, renowned Turk,
Not for thy lay, but for thy worth in arms. Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

LAY, n. s. [ley, leag, Saxon; ley, Scottish.]
Grassy ground; meadow; ground unplowed, and kept for cattle; more frequently, and more properly written lea.

A tuft of daisies on a flow'ry lay
They saw. Dryden, Flower and Leaf.

The plowing of layes is the first plowing up of grass ground for corn. Mortimer, Husbandry.

LAY, v. n. s. [lay, French.] It is said originally to signify sorrow or complaint, and then to have been transferred to poems written to express sorrow. It is derived by the French from lessus, Latin, a funeral song; but it is found likewise in the Teutonick dialect: ley, leod, Saxon; leey, Danish. Dr. Johnson. — "Les premieres chansons Françoises furent nommées des lais," says M. de la Ravaliere, Poes. du Roi de Nav. tom. i. p. 215. And so far I believe he is right. But I see no foundation for supposing with him, that the lay was "une sorte d'ele-gie," and that it was derived "du mot Latin lessus, qui signifie des plaintes;" or that it was "la chanson la plus majestueuse et la plus grave." It seems more probable that lai in French was anciently a generic term, answering to song in English. The passage which M. de la Raviere has quoted from Le Brut, "Molt sot de lais, molt sot de notes," is thus rendered by our Layamon: "Ne cuthe na mon swa muchel of song." The same word is used by Peirol d'Alverna, MS. Crofts, fol. lxxxv. to denote the songs of birds, certainly not of the plaintive kind. For my own part I am inclined to believe, that liod, Icel. lied, Teuton. leoð, Sax. and lai, French, are all to be deduced from the same Gothic original. Tyrwhitt, Introd. Disc. to Chaucer's Canterb. Tales, § xxvi. Liuthon is, in old Gothick, to sing. A song; a poem. It is scarcely used but in poetry.

To the maiden's sounding timbrel sung,
In well attuned notes, a joyous lay.

Spenser, F. Q.
Soon he slumber'd, fearing not be harm'd,
The whiles with a loud lay, she thus him sweetly charm'd.
Spenser, F. Q.

This is a most majestic vision, and Harmonious charming lays. Shakspeare, Tempest.
Nor then the solemn nightingale
Ceas'd warbling, but all night tun'd her soft lays.
Milton, P. L.

If Jove's will
Have link'd that amorous power to thy soft lay,
Now timely sing. Milton, Sonnet.
He reach'd the nymph with his harmonious lays,
Whom all his charms could not incline to stay.
Waller.

On Ceres let him call, and Ceres praise,
With uncouth dances, and with country lays.
Dryden, Virg.

Ev'n gods incline their ravish'd ears,
And tune their own harmonious spheres
To his immortal lays. Dennis.

LAY. adj. [laicus, Latin; λαϊκος.] Not clerical; regarding or belonging to the people as distinct from the clergy.

All this they had by law, and none repin'd,
The preference was but due to Levi's kind:
But when some lay preferment fell by chance,
The Gourmands made it their inheritance.

Dryden.
Lay persons, married or unmarried, being doctors of the civil law, may be cancellors, officials, &c.
Ayliffe, Peregrin.

It might well staltle
Our lay unlearned faith. Rowe.

LAY'ER, n. s. [from lay.]

1. A stratum, or row; a bed; one body spread over another.

A layer of rich mould beneath, and about this natural earth to nourish the fibres.

Evelyn, Kalendar.
The terrestrial matter is disposed into strata or layers, placed one upon another, in like manner as any earthy sediment, settling down from a flood in great quantity, will naturally be.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. A sprig of a plant.

Many trees may be propagated by layers: this is to be performed by slitting the branches a little way, and laying them under the mould about half a foot; the ground should be first made very light, and, after they are laid, they should have a little water given them: if they do not comply well in the laying of them down, they must be pegged down with a hook or two; and if they have taken sufficient root by the next winter, they must be cut off from the main plants, and planted in the nursery: some twist the branch, or bare the rind; and if it be out of the reach of the ground, they fasten a tub or basket near the branch, which they fill with good mould, and lay the branch in it. Miller.

Transplant also carnation seedlings, give your layers fresh earth, and set them in the shade for a week. Evelyn.

3. A hen that lays eggs.

The oldest are always reckoned the best sitters, and the youngest the best layers. Mortimer.

LAYER Out. n. s.* [from To lay out.]
One who expends money; a steward.

Huloet.

LAYER Up. n. s.* [from To lay up.] One who repositos for future use; a treasurer.

Old age that ill layer up of beauty, can do no more spoil upon my face. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

LAY-LAND.* n. s. Fallow ground which lies untill'd. More properly ley-land, or lea-land. But see LAY. In the north, ley-lands are lands in a common field laid down, which under that circumstance are said to lie ley.

He shall have my broad lay-lands.

Sir Cauline, Percy's Rel. i. i. 4.

Land,

Lie lay, till I return.

Beaumont, and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage.

LAY'MAN, n. s. [lay and man.]

1. One of the people distinct from the clergy.

Laymen will neither admonish one another themselves, nor suffer ministers to do it.

Gov. of the Tongue.

Since a trust must be, she thought it best
To put it out of laymen's pow'r at least,
And for their solemn vows prepar'd a priest.

Dryden.

Where can be the grievance, that an ecclesiastical landlord should expect a third part value for his lands, his title as antient, and as legal, as that of a layman, who is seldom guilty of giving such beneficial bargains? Swift.

2. An image used by painters in contriving attitudes.

You are to have a layman almost as big as the life for every figure in particular, besides the natural figure before you. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

LAYSTALL.† n. s. [from lay and stal, Sax. stabulum, a dunghill on which they lay what is swept out of stalls or stables. Skinner. By others from stale, urine. Sometimes written leastall, or leystall.] An heap of dung.

Scarce could he footing find in that foul way,
For many courses, like a great lay-stall,
Of murdered men, which therein strowed lay.

Spenser, F. Q.

Near the common lay-stall of a city.

Drayton, Pref. to Polyolbion.

If he will live abroad with his companions,
In dung and keystals, it is worth a fear.

B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

LAZAR.† n. s. [from Lazarus in the Gospel. Very old in our language: "A lazar or a beggere." Chaucer, C. T. Prol. Lazare is also old in the French.]

One deformed and nauseous with filthy and pestilential diseases.

They ever after in most wretched case,
Like loathsome lazars, by the hedges lay.

Spenser, F. Q.

I'll be sworn, and sworn upon't, she never shrouded any but lazars. Shakspeare.

I am weary with drawing the deformities of life, and lazars of the people, where every figure of imperfection more resembles me. Dryden.

Life he labours to refine
Daily, nor of his little stock denies Fit aims to lazars merciful and meek. Philips.

LA'ZAR-HOUSE.† n. s. [lazaret, French; LA'ZARET. } lazzaretto, Ital.; from LA'ZARETTO. } lazar.] A house for the reception of the diseased in hospital.

A place

Before his eyes appear'd, sad, noisome, dark,
A lazar-house it seem'd, where were laid
Numbers of all diseases'd. Milton, P. L.

My genius prompts me, that I was born under a planet, not to die in a lazaretto.

Howell, Lett. i. vi. 60.

The same penalty attends persons escaping from the lazaret. Blackstone.

LA'ZARLIKE.* adj. [from lazar.] Full of LA'ZARLY.† adj. sores, leprous.

A most instant tetter bark'd about;
Most lazarlike, with vile and loathsome crust,
All my smooth body. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Those five leprous and lazarly orders.

Bp. Hall, Contemp. B. 4.

LA'ZARWORT. n. s. [Laserpitium.] A plant.

To LAZE.* v. n. [See the etymology of LAZY.] To live idly; to be idle; to slug. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

Up, and laze not:

Hadst thou my business, thou couldst ne'er sit so.

Middleton's Witch.

The hands and the feet mutinied against the belly: they knew no reason, why the one should be lazing, and pampering itself with the fruit of the other's labour. L'Estrange.

The sot cried, Utinam hoc esset lazareum, while he lay lazing and lolling upon his couch. South.

To LAZE.* v. a. To waste in laziness; to stupify by sloth.

He that takes liberty to laze himself, and dull his spirits for lack of use, shall find the more he sleeps, the more he shall be drowsy; till he becomes a very slave to his bed, and makes sleep his master. Whately, Redemp. of Times, (1634,) p. 23.

LA'ZILY. adv. [from lazy.] Idly; sluggishly; heavily.

Watch him at play, when following his own inclinations; and see whether he be stirring and active, or whether he lazily and listlessly dreams away his time. Locke.

The eastern nations view the rising fires,
Whilst night shades us, and lazily retires. Creech.

LA'ZINESS. n. s. [from lazy.] Idleness; sluggishness; listlessness; heaviness in action; tardiness.

That instance of fraud and laziness, the unjust steward, who pleaded that he could neither dig nor beg, would quickly have been brought both to dig and to beg too, rather than starve. South.

My fortune you have rescued, not only from the power of others, but from my own modesty and laziness. Dryden.

LA'ZULI. n. s.

The ground of this stone is blue, veined and spotted with white, and a glistering or metallic yellow: it appears to be composed of, first, a white sparry, or crystalline matter; secondly, flakes of the golden or yellow talc; thirdly, a shining yellow substance; this fumes off in the calcination of the stone, and casts a sulphureous smell; fourthly, a bright blue substance, of great use among the painters, under the name of ultramarine; and when rich, is found, upon trial, to yield about one-sixth of copper, with a very little silver. Woodward.

LA'ZY.† adj. [This word is derived by a correspondent, with great probability, from à l'aise, French; but it is however Teutonic; lajser in Danish, and lousigh in Dutch, have the same meaning; and Spelman gives this account of the word: "Dividebantur antiqui Saxones, ut testatur Nithardus, in tres ordines; Edhilingos, Frilingos, & Lazzos; hoc est nobiles, ingenuos & serviles; quam & nos distinctionem diu retinimus. Sub Ricardo autem secundo pars servorum maxima se in libertatem vindicavit; sic ut hodie apud Anglos rarior veniatur servus, qui mancipium dicitur. Restat nihilominus antiquæ appellationis commemoratio. Ignavos enim hodie lazie dicimus." Dr. Johnson.—Schilter notices also the Teut. lass, laz, slow, tardy. It may be observed, that our old word is laesie and laesie: "Thou'st but a laesie lord." Spenser, Shep Cal.]

1. Idle; sluggish; unwilling to work.

Our soldiers like the night-owl's lazy flight,
Or like a lazy thrasher with a flail,
Fall gently down, as if they struck their friends. Shakespeare.

Wicked condemned men will ever live like rogues, and not fall to work, but be lazy and spend victuals. Bacon.

Whose lazy waters without motion lay. Roscommon.

The lazy glutton safe at home will keep,
Indulge his sloth, and batten with his sleep. Dryden.

Like eastern kings a lazy state they keep,
And close confin'd in their own palace sleep. Pope.
Or lazy larks unconscious of a flood,
Whose dull brown Naiads ever sleep in mud. Farnel.

What amazing stupidity is it, for men to be negligent of salvation themselves! to sit down lazy and unactive. Rogers.

2. Slow; tedious.

The ordinary method for recruiting their armies, was now too dull and lazy an expedient to resist this torrent. Clarendon.

LD. is a contraction of lord.

LEA.† n. s. [ley, Saxon, a fallow; leay, Saxon, a pasture, a plain.] Ground enclosed, not open. Dr. Johnson. — Rather an extensive plain.

As when two warlike brigantines at sea,
With murr'ous weapons arm'd to cruell fight,
Doe meet together on the watry lea. Spenser, F. Q. iv. ii. 16.

Greatly agast with his pitiuous plea;
Him rested the good man on the lea. Spenser.
Ceres, most bounteous lady, thy rich leas,
Of wheat, rye, barley, fetches, oats, and peas. Shakespeare.

Her fallow leas
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory
Doth root upon. Shakespeare, Hen. V.
Dry up thy barrow'd veins, and plough torn leas,
Whereof ingrateful man with lickerish draughts,
And morsels unctuous, greases his pure mind. Shakespeare.

He furrow'd many a churlish sea;
The viny Rhene, and Volgha's self did pass,
Who siedo doth suffer on his watery lea. P. Fletcher, Pisc. Ecl. ii. 13.
Such court guise,
As Mercury did first devise,
With the mincing Dryades,
On the lawns, and on the leas. Milton, Comus.
The lowing herd winds slowly o'er the lea. Gray.

LEACH.* See LEECH.

LEAD. n. s. [læb, Saxon.]

1. Lead is the heaviest metal except gold and quicksilver. Lead is the softest of all the metals, and very ductile, though less so than gold: it is very little subject to rust, and the least sonorous of all the metals except gold. The specific gravity of lead is to that of water as 11322 to 1000. Lead when kept in fusion over a common fire, throws up all other bodies, except gold, that are mixed, all others being lighter, except mercury, which will not bear that degree of heat: it afterwards vitrifies with the baser metals, and carries them off, in form of scorize, to the sides of the vessel. The weakest acids are the best solvents for lead: it dissolves very readily in aqua fortis diluted with water, as also in vinegar. The smoke of lead works is a prodigious annoyance, and subjects both the workmen, and the cattle that graze about them, to a mortal disease. Hill.

Thou art a soul in bliss, but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire; that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Of lead, some I can shew you so like steel, and so unlike common lead ore, that the workmen call it steel ore. Boyle.

Lead is employed for the refining of gold and silver by the cupel; hereof is made common ceruss with vinegar; of ceruss, red lead; of plumbum ustum, the best yellow ochre; of lead, and half as much tin, solder for lead. Grew.

2. [In the plural.] Flat roof to walk on; because houses are covered with lead.

Stalls, bulks, windows,
Are smother'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges hors'd
With variable complexions; all agreeing
In earnestness to see him. Shakespeare, Coriol.

I would have the tower two stories, and goodly leads upon the top, raised with statues interposed. Bacon.

To LEAD. v. a. [from the noun.] To fit with lead in any manner.

He fashioneth the clay with his arm, he applieth himself to lead it over; and he is diligent to make clean the furnace. Ecclus. xxxviii. 30.

There is a traverse placed in a loft, at the right hand of the chair, with a privy door, and a carved window of glass *lead*ed with gold and blue, where the mother sitteth. Bacon.

To LEAD. v. a. preter. I led; part. led. [læban, Saxon; leiden, Dutch.]

1. To guide by the hand.

Doth not each on the sabbath loose his ox or his ass from the stall, and lead him away to watering? St. Luke, xii. 15.

They thrust him out of the city, and led him unto the brow of the hill. St. Luke, iv. 29.

2. To conduct to any place.

Save to every man his wife and children, that they may lead them away, and depart. 1 Sam. xxx. 22.

Then brought he me out of the way, and led me about the way without unto the utter gate. Ezek. xlvii. 2.

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he *lead*eth me beside the still waters. Psal. xxiii. 2.

3. To conduct as head or commander.

Would you lead forth your army against the enemy, and seek him where he is to fight? Spenser on Ireland.

He turns head against the lion's armed jaws; And being no more in debt to years than thou, Leads antient lords, and rev'rend bishops, on To bloody battles. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

He led me on to mightiest deeds,
Above the nerve of mortal arm,
Against the uncircumcised, our enemies:
But now hath cast me off. Milton, S. A.

Christ took not upon him flesh and blood, that he might conquer and rule nations, lead armies, or possess places. South.

He might muster his family up, and lead them out against the Indians, to seek reparation upon any injury. Locke.

4. To introduce by going first.

Which may go out before them, and which may go in before them, and which may lead them out, and which may bring them in. Numb. xxvii. 17.

His guide, as faithful from that day,
As Hesperus that leads the sun his way. Fairfax.

5. To guide; to shew the method of attaining.

Human testimony is not so proper to lead us into the knowledge of the essence of things, as to acquaint us with the existence of things. Watts, Logick.

6. To draw; to entice; to allure.

Appoint him a meeting, give him a shew of comfort, and lead him on with a fine baited lead. Shakespeare.

The lord Cottington, being a master of temper, knew how to lead him into a mistake, and then drive him into choler, and then expose him. Clarendon.

7. To induce; to prevail on by pleasing motives.

What I did, I did in honour,
Led by th' impartial conduct of my soul. Shakesp.
He was driven by the necessities of the times, more than led by his own disposition, to any rigorous of actions. King Charles.

What I say will have little influence on those whose ends lead them to wish the continuance of the war. Swift.

8. To pass; to spend in any certain manner.

The sweet woman leads an ill life with him. Shakespeare.

So sla't thou lead
Safest thy life, and best prepar'd endure
Thy mortal passage when it comes. Milton, P. L.
Him, fair Lavinia, thy surviving wife
Shall breed in groves, to lead a solitary life. Dryden.

Luther's life was led up to the doctrines he preached, and his death was the death of the righteous. Fr. Atterbury.

Celibacy, as then practised in the church of Rome, was commonly forced, taken up under a bold vow, and led in all uncleanness. Fr. Atterbury.

This seditary is most incited to such as lead a desperate life. Arbutnot on Aliments.

To LEAD.† v. n.

1. To go first, and shew the way.

I will lead you on softly, according as the cattle that goeth before me, and the children be able to endure. Gen. xxxiii.

2. To conduct as a commander.

3. To shew the way, by going first.

He left his mother a countess by patent, which was a new leading example, grown before some what rare.

The way of maturing of tobacco must be from the heat of the earth or sun; we see some leading of this in musk-melons sown upon a hot-bed dugged below.

The vessels heavy-laden put to sea
With prosperous gales, a woman leads the way.

Dryden.

4. To exercise dominion.

For shepherds, said he, there doen lead
As lords doe otherwise.

Spenser, July.

5. To lead off. To begin.

Her social powers were brilliant, but not uniform; for, on some occasions, she would persist in a determined taciturnity, to the regret of the company present; and, at other times, would lead off in her best manner, when perhaps none were present, who could taste the spirit and amenity of her humour.

Cumberland, Memoirs of Himself.

LEAD.† n. s. [from the verb.] Guidance; first place: a low despicable word. Dr. Johnson.—Bolingbroke, however, somewhere uses it; and a most eminent writer in our own time farther warrants the usage of it.

Yorkshire takes the lead of the other counties.

Herring.

At the time I speak of having a momentary lead, I am sure I did my country important service.

Burke, Lett. p. 17.

LE'ADEN.† adj. [leaben, Saxon.]

1. Made of lead.

This tiger-footed rane, when it shall find
The harm of unskann'd swiftness, will, too late,
Tie leaden pounds to 's heels.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

O murth'rous slumber!

Lay'st thou the leaden mace upon my boy,

That plays thee musick?

A leaden bullet shot from one of these guns

Against a stone wall, the space of twenty-four paces from it, will be beaten into a thin plate.

Wilkins, Mathem. Magic.

2. Heavy; unwilling; motionless.

If thou dost find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons:

If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,

Be thou so too.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

3. Heavy; dull.

I'll strive with troubled thoughts to take a nap;

Lest leaden slumber poize me down to morrow,

When I should mount with wings of victory.

Shakespeare.

4. Stupid; absurd.

What is so leaden or blockishe, which these doltish papists will not avouch for the maintenance of their trompory?

Fulke, Retentive, &c. (1590), p. 43.

LE'ADEN-HEARTED.* adj. [leaden and heart.] Having an unfeeling, stupid heart.

O leaden-hearted men, to be in love with death!

Thomson, Castle of Indolence, C. 2.

Ford, Love's Labyrinth, (1661), p. 53.

LE'ADEN-STEPPING.* adj. [leaden and step.]

Slowly moving.

Call on the lazy leaden-stepping hours,

Whose speed is but the heavy plummet's pace.

Milton.

LE'ADER. n. s. [from lead.]

1. One that leads, or conducts.

2. Captain; commander.

In my tent

I'll draw the form and model of our battle,

Limit each leader to his several charge,

And part in just proportion our small strength.

Shakespeare.

I have given him for a leader and commander to the people.

Isaiah, lv. 4.

Those escaped by flight, not without a sharp jest against their leaders affirming, that, as they had followed them into the field, so it was good reason they should follow them out.

Hayward.

When our Lycians see

Our brave examples, they admiring say,

Behold our gallant leaders.

Denham.

The brave leader of the Lycian crew.

Dryden.

3. One who goes first.

Nay, keep your way, little gallant; you were wont to be a follower, now you are a leader.

Shakespeare.

4. One at the head of any party or faction: as the detestable Wharton was the leader of the whigs.

The understandings of a senate are enslaved by three or four leaders, set to get or to keep employments.

Swift.

LEADING. participial adj. Principal; chief; capital.

In organized bodies, which are propagated by seed, the shape is the leading quality, and most characteristic part that determines the species.

Locke.

Mistakes arise from the influence of private persons upon great numbers stiled leading men and parties.

Swift.

LEADING.* n. s. [from lead.]

1. Guidance; conduct by the hand.

There is a cliff, whose high and bending head
Looks fearfully in the confined deep:

Bring me but to the very brim of it,

And I'll repair the misery thou dost bear

With something rich about me: from that place

I shall no leading need.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

2. Conduct of a commander.

Lords have had the leading of their own followers to the general hostings.

Spenser on Ireland.

If thou wilt have

The leading of thy own revenges, take

One half of my commission, and set down

As best thou art experience'd.

Cyrus was beaten and slain under the leading of a woman, whose wit and conduct made a great figure.

Temple.

LEADING-STRINGS. n. s. [lead and string.]

Strings by which children, when they learn to walk, are held from falling.

Sound may serve such, ere they to sense are grown,

Like leading-strings, till they can walk alone.

Dryden.

Was he ever able to walk without leading-strings, or swim without bladders, without being discovered by his hobbling and his sinking?

Swift.

LE'ADMAN. n. s. [lead and man.] One who begins or leads a dance.

Such a light and mettled dance

Saw you never,

And by leadmen for the nonce,

That turn round like grindle-stones.

B. Jonson.

LE'ADWORT. n. s. [lead and wort; plumbago.] A plant.

LE'ADY.* adj. [from lead.] Of the colour of lead.

Hulot.

His ruddy lips [were] wan, and his eyes leady and hollow.

Sir T. Elgot, Gov. fol. 124.

LEAF.† n. s. leaves, plural. [leaf, Saxon; leaf, Dutch; lauf, Goth. "vox antiquiss. multisque linguis communis." Serenius.]

1. The green deciduous parts of plants and flowers.

This is the state of man; to-day he puts forth

The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms.

Shakespeare.

A man shall seldom fail of having cherries borne by his graft the same year in which his incision is made, if his graft have blossom buds; whereas if it were only leaf buds, it will not bear fruit till the second season.

Boyle.

Those things which are removed to a distant view, ought to make but one mass; as the leaves on the trees, and the billows in the sea.

Dryden, DuFremoy.

2. A part of a book, containing two pages.

Happy ye leaves, when as those lily hands

Shall handle you.

Spenser.

Peruse my leaves through every part,

And think thou seest my owner's heart

Scrawl'd o'er with trifles.

Swift.

3. One side of a double door.

The two leaves of the one door were folding.

1 Kings.

4. Any thing foliated, or thinly beaten.

Hulot.

LE'AFLESS. adj. [from leaf.] Naked of leaves.

Bare honesty without some other adornment, being looked on as a leafless tree, nobody will take himself to its shelter.

Gov. of the Tongue.

Where doves in flocks, the leafless trees o'er-shade,

And lonely woodcocks haunt the wat'ry glade.

Pope.

LE'AFY. adj. [from leaf.] Full of leaves.

The frauds of men were ever so,

Since summer was first leafy.

Shakespeare.

What chance, good lady, hath bereft you thus?

—Dim darkness, and this leafy labyrinth.

Milton, Comus.

O'er barren mountains, o'er the flow'ry plain,

The leafy forest, and the liquid main,

Extends thy uncontrou'd and boundless reign.

Dryden.

Her leafy arms with such extent were spread,

That hosts of birds, that wing the liquid air,

Perch'd in the boughs.

Dryden, Flo. and Leof.

So when some swelt'ring travellers retire

To leafy shades, near the cool unseen verge

Of Paraba, Brazilian stream; her tail

A gristly hydra suddenly shoots forth.

Philips.

LEAGUE. n. s. [lique, French; ligo, Lat. to bind together.] A confederacy;

A combination either of interest or friendship.

You peers, continue this united league:

I every day expect an embassy

From my Redeemer, to redeem me hence.

And now in peace my soul shall part to heaven,

Since I have made my friends at peace on earth.

Shakespeare.

We come to be informed by yourselves,

What the conditions of that league must be.

Shakespeare.

Thou shalt be in league with the stones of the field; and the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee.

Job.

Go break thy league with Baasha, that he may depart from me.

2 Chron. xvi. 3.

It is a great error, and a narrowness of mind, to think, that nations have nothing to do one with another, except there be either an union in sovereignty, or a conjunction in pacts or leagues; there are other bands of society and implicit confederations.

Bacon, Holy War.
I, a private person, whom my country
As a league-breaker gave up bound, presum'd
Single rebellion, and did hostile acts.

Milton, S. A.
Oh, Tyrians, with immortal hate
Pursue this hated race; and let there be
'Twixt us and them no league nor amity.

Denham.

To LEAGUE. v. n. To unite on certain terms; to confederate.

Where fraud and falsehood invade society, the band presently breaks, and men are put to a loss where to league and to fasten their dependences.

South.

LEAGUE. n. s. [lieue, Fr. leuca, Latin; from lech, Welsh, a stone that was used to be erected at the end of every league. Camden.] A measure of length, containing three miles.

Ere the ships could meet by twice five leagues,
We were encount'ed by a mighty rock.

Shakespeare.

Ev'n Italy, though many a league remote,
In distant echoes answer'd.

Addison.

LE'AGUED. adj. [from league.] Confederated.

And now thus leagu'd by an eternal bond,
What shall retard the Britons bold designs?

Philips.

LE'AGUER.† n. s. [Dutch, or Flemish. "They will not vouchsafe in their speeches or writings to use our termes belonging to matters of warre, but doo call a campe by the Dutch name of legar; nor will not afford to say that such a towne or such a fort is besieged, but that it is belegard."] Sir J. Smythe, Certain Disc. 1590, fol. 2.]

1. Camp; not siege, as Dr. Johnson has hastily asserted.

We will bind and hoodwink him so, that he shall suppose no other but that he is carried into the league of the adversaries, when we bring him to our tents.

Shakespeare, All's Well.

They played their cannon day and night into the enemy's leaguers and quarters.—They shot into the league at Hedinghorth, and there killed Lieutenant Colonel Cotsworth.

A. Wood, Annals Univ. Ox. (an. 1646.)

2. One united in a confederacy. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

The divisions are so many, and so intricate, of protestants and catholics, royalists and leaguers.

Bacon, Observ. on a Libel, (1592.)

Are you leaguers, or covenanters, or associators?

Dryden, Vindict. of the Duke of Guise.

LEAK.† n. s. [lek, leke, Dutch; hlece, Sax. leaky; leka, Su. Goth. to flow or run.] A breach or hole which lets in water.

There will be always evils, which no art of man can cure; breaches and leaks more than man's wit hath hands to stop.

Hooker.

The water rushes in, as it doth usually in the leak of a ship.

Wilkins.

Whether she sprung a leak I cannot find,
Or whether she was overset with wind,
Or that some rock below her bottom rent,
But down at once with all her crew she went.

Dryden.

LEAK.* adj. [hlece, Sax. hlece reip, a leaky ship. Lye.] Leaky.

And fifty sisters water in leaks vessels draw.

Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 55.

Yet is the bottle leaky, and bag so torn,
That all which I put in falls out anon.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 24.

To LEAK. v. n.

1. To let water in or out.

They will allow us ne'er a jordan, and then we leak in your chimney.

Shakespeare.

His feet should be washed every day in cold water; and have his shoes so thin, that they might leak and let in water.

Locke.

2. To drop through a breach, or discontinuity.

The water, which will perhaps by degrees leak into several parts, may be emptied out again.

Willkins.

Golden stars hung o'er their heads,
And seem'd so crowded, that they burst upon 'em,
And dart at once their baleful influence

In leaking fire.

Dryden and Lee.

To LEAK.* v. a. To let out.

It would be next to impossible to make pipes to hold so perfectly as not to leak air in some parts.

Mr. Hooke, in Hist. R. Soc. iv. 548.

LE'AKAGE.† n. s. [from leak.]

1. State of a vessel that leaks.

They weaken themselves by too great a leakage of their power.

Bp. Parker, Repr. Reh. Transp. p. 11.

2. Allowance made for accidental loss in liquid measures.

LE'AKY. adj. [from leak.]

1. Battered or pierced, so as to let water in or out.

Thou'rt so leaky,
That we must leave thee to thy sinking; for Thy dearest quit thee.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

If you have not enjoy'd what youth could give,
But life sunk through you like a leaky sieve,
Accuse yourself, you liv'd not while you might.

Dryden.

2. Loquacious; not close.

Women are so leaky, that I have hardly met with one that could not hold her breath longer than she could keep a secret.

L'Estrange.

LEAM.* See LEME.

To LEAN.† v. n. preter. leaned or leant. [hlunan, Saxon; lenen, Dutch.]

1. To incline against; to rest against.

Security is expressed among the medals of Gordianus, by a lady leaning against a pillar, a sceptre in her hand, before an altar.

Peacham on Drawing.

The columns may be allowed somewhat above their ordinary length, because they lean unto us good supporters.

Wotton.

Upon his ivory sceptre first he leant,

Then shook his head, that shook the firmament.

Dryden.

If God be angry, all our other dependencies will profit us nothing; every other support will fail under us when we come to lean upon it, and deceive us in the day when we want it most.

Rogers.

Then leaning o'er the rails he musing stood.

Gay.

'Mid the central depth of black'ning woods,
High rais'd in solemn theatre around
Leans the huge elephant.

Thomson.

2. To propend; to tend towards.

They delight rather to lean to their old customs, though they be more unjust and more inconvenient.

Spenser.

Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding.

Prov. iii. 5.

A desire leaning to either side, biasses the judgment strangely.

Watts.

3. To be in a bending posture.

She leans me out at her mistress's chamber window, bids me a thousand times good night.

Shakespeare.

Wearied with length of ways, and worn with toil,
She laid her down, and leaning on her knees,
Invok'd the cause of all her miseries.

Dryden.

The gods came downwards to behold the wars,
Sharp'ning their sights, and leaning from their stars.

Dryden.

4. To bend; to waver; to totter.

What shalt thou expect,
To be dependor on a thing that leans?

Shakespeare, Cymb.

To LEAN.* v. a.

1. To incline; to cause to lean.

Lean thine aged back against mine arm,
And in that case I'll tell thee my disease.

Shakespeare.

Oppress'd with anguish, panting and o'erspent,
His fainting limbs against an oak he leant.

Dryden.

2. [Icel. leina.] To conceal. North of Eng. Ray, and Grose. "They will give a thing no leaning," i. e. they will not suffer the least connivance. Lye.

LEAN.† adj. [hlæne, læne, Sax. læning, slender.]

1. Not fat; meagre; wanting flesh; bare-boned.

As lene was his horse as is a rake.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire.

Shakespeare.

Lean raw-bon'd rascals, who would e'er suppose,

They had such courage and audacity!

Lean-look'd prophets whisper fearful change.

Shakespeare.

I would invent as bitter searching terms,
With full as many signs of deadly hate,
As lean-fac'd envy in a loathsome cave.

Shaksp.

Seven other kine came up out of the river, ill-favoured and lean-fleshed.

Gen. xli. 3.

Let a physician beware how he purge after hard frosty weather, and in a lean body, without preparation.

Bacon.

And fetch their precepts from the Cynick tub,
Praising the lean, and sallow, abstinence.

Milton, Comus.

Swear that Adrastus, and the lean-look'd prophet,

Are joint conspirators.

Dryden and Lee.

Lean people often suffer for want of fat, as fat people may by obstruction of the vessels.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

No laughing graces wanton in my eyes;
But haggard grief, lean-looking, sallow care,
Dwell on my brow.

Rowe, Jane Shore.

2. Not unctuous; thin; hungry.

There are two chief kinds of terrestrial liquors, those that are fat and light, and those that are lean and more earthy, like common water.

Burnet, Theory.

3. Low; poor: in opposition to great or rich.

That which combin'd us was most great, and let not
A leaner action rend us.

Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

4. Jeune; not comprehensive; not embellished: as, a lean dissertation.

The case is quite different in our author's low and lean performance.

Waterland, Script. Vindic. P. ii. p. 7.

5. Shallow; dull.

A lunatick lean-witted fool,
Presuming on an ague's privilege.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

LEAN. n. s. That part of flesh which consists of the muscle without the fat.

With razors keen we cut our passage clean
Through rills of fat, and deluges of lean.
Farquhar.

LE'ANLY.† adv. [from lean.] Meagrely;
without plumpness. Sherwood.

LE'ANNESS. n. s. [from lean.]

1. Extenuation of body; want of flesh; meagreness.

If thy leanness loves such food,
There are those, that, for thy sake,
Do enough. B. Jonson.

The symptoms of too great fluidity are excess of universal secretions, as of perspiration, sweat, urine, liquid dejectures, leanness, and weakness.
Arbutnot.

2. Want of matter; thinness; poverty.

The poor king Reignier, whose large style
Agrees not with the leanness of his purse.
Shakspeare.

LE'ANY.* adj. [leen-man, Teut. a servant.]
Alert; active. Grose notices this word, but does not mention in what place it is used.

Fat kernes, and leany knaves.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

TO LEAP.† v. n. [hlæpan, Sax. hlæpan;
Goth. to dance; hlepja, Icel. to run;
leap, Scottish, to jump.]

1. To jump; to move upward or progressively without change of the feet.

If I could win a lady at leap-frog, or by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on, I should quickly leap into a wife. Shaksp. Hen. V.

A man leapeth better with weights in his hands than without; for that the weight, if it be proportionable, strengtheneth the sinews by contracting them. In leaping with weights the arms are first cast backwards, and then forwards with so much the greater force, for the hands go backward before they take their rise. Bacon. Nat. Hist.

In a narrow pit,
He saw a lion, and leap'd down to it.

Thrice from the ground she leap'd, was seen to wield
Her brandish'd lance. Dryden, Æn.

2. To rush with vehemence.

God changed the spirit of the king into mild-ness, who in a fear leaped from his throne, and took her in his arms, till she came to herself again.
Esth. xv. 8.

After he went into the tent, and found her not,
he leaped out to the people. Judith, xiv. 7.

He ruin upon ruin heaps,
And on me, like a furious giant, leaps. Sandys.
Strait leaping from his horse he rais'd me up.
Rowe.

3. To bound; to spring.

Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy.
St. Luke, vi. 23.

I am warm'd, my heart
Leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory.
Addison.

4. To fly; to start.

He parted frowning from me, as if ruin
Leap'd from his eyes: so looks the chafed lion
Upon the daring huntsman that has gall'd him;
Then makes him nothing. Shaksp. Hen. VIII.
Out of his mouth go burning lamps, and sparks of fire leap out. Job, xli. 19.

TO LEAP. v. a.

1. To pass over, or into, by leaping.

Every man is not of a constitution to leap a gulf for the saving of his country. L'Estrange.

As one condemn'd to leap a precipice,
Who sees before his eyes the depth below,
Stops short. Dryden, Span. Friar.

She dares pursue, if they dare lead:

As their example still prevails:

She tempts the stream or leaps the pales. Prior.

2. To compress, as beasts.

Too soon they must not feel the sting of love:
Let him not leap the cow. Dryden, Georg.

LEAP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Bound; jump; act of leaping.

2. Space passed by leaping.

After they have carried their riders safe over all leaps, and through all dangers, what comes of them in the end but to be broken-winded?
L'Estrange.

3. Sudden transition.

Wickedness comes on by degrees, as well as virtue; and sudden leaps from one extreme to another are unnatural. L'Estrange.

The commons wrested even the power of chusing a king intirely out of the hands of the nobles;
which was so great a leap, and caused such a convulsion in the state, that the constitution could not bear. Swift.

4. An assault of an animal of prey.

The cat made a leap at the mouse. L'Estrange.

5. Embrace of animals.

How she cheats her bellowing lovers' eyes;
The rushing leap, the doubtful progeny.
Dryden, Æn.

6. Hazard or effect of leaping.

Mathinks, it were an easy leap
To pluck bright honour from the pale-fac'd moon.
Shakspeare.

You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And woo your own destruction. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Behold that dreadful downfall of a rock,
Where yon old fisher views the waves from high!
'Tis the convenient leap I mean to try.
Dryden, Theocritus.

LEAP.* n. s. [læp, Saxon; jæb-læp, a basket to carry corn in while sowing.]

1. A basket.

Neither of seven looves into four thousand of men, and how many leaps, ye token?
Wicliffe, St. Matt. xvi. 9.

2. A weel for fish.

LEAP-FROG. n. s. [leap and frog.] A play of children, in which they imitate the jump of frogs.

If I could win a lady at leap-frog, I should quickly leap into a wife. Shaksp. Hen. V.

LEAP-YEAR. n. s.

Leap-year or bissextile is every fourth year, and so called from its leaping a day more that year than in a common year: so that the common year has 365 days, but the leap-year 366; and then February hath 29 days, which in common years hath but 28. To find the leap-year you have this rule:

Divide by 4; what's left shall be

For leap-year 0; for past, 1, 2, 3.

Harris.

The reason of the name of leap-year is, that a day of the week is missed; as, if on one year the first of March be on Monday, it will on the next year be on Tuesday, but on leap-year it will leap to Wednesday.

That the year consisteth of 365 days and almost six hours, wanting eleven minutes; which six hours omitted will, in process of time, largely de-prave the compute; and this is the occasion of the bissextile or leap-year. Brown.

LE'APER.* n. s. [from leap; Sax. hleapepe,
a dancer.]

1. One who leaps or capers.

2. Spoken of a horse, which passes over hedge and ditch by leaping.

LE'APINGLY.* adv. [from the part. leaping.] By leaps. Hulot.

LEAR.* See LERE.

TO LEARN.† v. a. [leopnian, Saxon; leren,
Germ. to learn and to teach; læpan,
Sax. to teach; læpe, learning, skill.
See LERE.]

1. To gain the knowledge or skill of.

Learn a parable of the fig-tree.

St. Matt. xxiv. 32.

He, in a shorter time than was thought possible, learned both to speak and write the Arabian tongue. Knolles.

Learn, wretches, learn the motions of the mind,
And the great moral end of humankind.
Dryden, Pers.

You may rely upon my tender care,
To keep him far from perils of ambition,
All he can learn of me will be to weep!
A. Philips.

2. To teach. [It is observable, that in many of the European languages the same word signifies to learn and to teach; to gain or impart knowledge.]
This sense is now perhaps obsolete. It is retained in the present version of the Psalms in our Common Prayer Book.

He would learn

The lion stoop to him in lowly wise,
A lesson hard. Spenser, F. Q.

You taught me language, and my profit on't
Is, I know not how to curse: the red plague rid you,
For learning me your language.

A thousand more mischances than this one,
Have learn'd me how to brook this patiently.
Shakspeare.

Hast thou not learn'd me how
To make perfumes? Shakspeare, Cymb.
My testimonies that I shall learn them.
Ps. cxxxii. 13.

TO LEARN. v. n. To take part with;
of.

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for
I am meek and lowly. St. Matt. xi. 29.

In imitation of sounds, that man should be the teacher is no part of the matter; for birds will learn one of another. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

LE'ARNED.† adj. [from learn.]

1. Versed in science and literature.

It is indifferent to the matter in hand, which way the learned shall determine of it. Locke.

Some by old words to fame have made pretence:
Such labour'd notions, in so strange a style,
Amaze th' unlearn'd, and make the learned smile.
Pope.

The learned met with free approach,
Although they came not in a coach. Swift.

The best account is given of them by their own authors: but I trust more to the table of the learned bishop of Bath. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. Skilled; skilful; knowing; with in.

Though train'd in arms, and learn'd in martial arts,
Thou chusest not to conquer men but hearts.
Granville.

3. Skilled in scholastick, as distinct from other knowledge.

Till a man can judge whether they be truths or no, his understanding is but little improved: and thus men of much reading are greatly learned, but may be little knowing. Locke.

4. Wise.

Those needful jealousies of state, that warn wiser princes hourly to provide for their safety;

and to teach them how learned a thing it is to beware of the humblest enemy. B. Jonson, Sejanus.
LEARNEDLY. adv. [from learned.] With knowledge; with skill.
The apostle seemed in his eyes but learnedly
mad. Hooker.

Much
He spoke, and learnedly, for life; but all
Was either pitied in him, or forgotten. Shakspeare.
Ev'ry coxcomb swears as learnedly as they. Swift.

LEARNEDNESS.* n.s. [from learned.] State of being learned.
The learnedness of the age.

Abp. Laud's Remains, p. 158.
LEARNER.† n.s. [from learn, Sax. leop-nepe.] One who is yet in his rudiments;
one who is acquiring some new art or knowledge.

The late learners cannot so well take the ply, except it be in some minds that have not suffered themselves to fix. Bacon.
Nor can a learner work so cheap as a skilful practised artist can. Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

LEARNING.† n.s. [from learn; Sax. leopnung.] Rarely used in the plural number.]

1. Literature; skill in languages or sciences; generally scholastick knowledge.
Learning hath its infancy, when it is almost childish; then its youth, when luxuriant and juvenile; then its strength of years, when solid;
and, lastly, its old age, when dry and exhaust.

Bacon.
The king, he takes the babe
To his protection; calls him Posthumus; —
Puts him to all the learnings that his time
Could make him the receiver of.

Shakspeare, Cymbeline.
To tongue or pudding thou hast no pretence,
Learning thy talent is, but mine is sense. Prior.
As Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, so it is manifest from this chapter, that St. Paul was a great master in all the learning of the Greeks. Bentley.

2. Skill in any thing good or bad.
An art of contradiction by way of scorn, a learning wherewith we were long since forewarned, that the miserable times whereunto we are fallen should abate. Hooker.

LEASABLE.* adj. [from lease.] Capable of being let by lease. Sherwood.

LEASE.† n.s. [laisser, French; Spelman :
lassen, Germ. Serenius.]

1. A contract by which, in consideration of some payment, a temporary possession is granted of houses or lands.

Why, cousin, we'r't thou regent of the world,
It were a shame to let this land by lease. Shakspeare.
Lords of the world have but for life their lease,
And that too, if the lessor please, must cease.

Denham.
I have heard a man talk with contempt of bishops' leases, as on a worse foot than the rest of his estate. Swift.

2. Any tenure.
Our high-plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature. Shakspeare.
Thou to give the world increase,
Short'n'd hast thy own life's lease.
Milton, El. M. of Winchester.

TO LEASE. v. a. [from the noun.] To let by lease.

Where the vicar leases his glebe, the tenant must pay the great tithes to the rector or impropriator, and the small tithes to the vicar.
Ayliffe, Parergon.

TO LEASE.† v. n. [lesen, Dutch. Dr.
Johnson. — It is the Saxon lejan, and ljan, to gather, to collect; lian, Goth.

and lesa, Icel. the same. This word, therefore, might justly be distinguished,
in its spelling, from the former lease, and the subsequent leasing, by being written lese.] To glean; to gather what the harvest men leave.

She in harvest us'd to lease;
But harvest done, to chare-work did aspire,
Meat, drink, and two-pence, was her daily hire.
Dryden.

LEASER.† n.s. [from lease.]

1. Gleaner; gatherer after the reaper.
There was no office which a man from England might not have; and I looked upon all who were born here as only in the condition of leasers and gleaners. Swift.

2. A liar. See LEASING.
Those idle words — we answer with silence and scorn. Let leasers have leave to talk.
Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Cler. p. 339.

LEASEHOLD.* adj. [lease and hold.]
Holden by lease; as, a leasehold tenement.

LEASH.† n.s. [lesse, French; letse, Teut.; lascia, Italian. Dr. Johnson. — Germ.
lasche, a bit of leather, a flap. Sere-nius.]

1. A leather thong, by which a falconer holds his hawk; or a coursor leads his greyhound. Hammer.
Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will. Shakspeare.

What I was, I am;
More straining on, for plucking back; not following
My leash unwillingly. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

2. A tierce; three.
I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers, and can call them all by their christian names.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Some thought when he did gabble
Th'ad heard three labourers of Babel,
Or Cerberus himself pronounce
A leash of languages at once. Hudibras.
Thou art a living comedy; they are a leash of dull devils. Dennis, Letters.

3. A band wherewith to tie any thing in general.

The ravished soul being shewn such game,
would break those leashes that tie her to the body.
Boyle.

TO LEASH.† v. a. [from the noun.] To bind; to hold in a string.

Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,
Assume the port of Mars; and, at his heels, Leasht in like hounds, should famine, sword, and fire,
Crouch for employment. Shakspeare, Hen. V.
Cerberus, from below,
Must, leasht to himself, with him a hunting go.
Lovelace, Luc. Posth. p. 33.

LEASING.† n.s. [leazunge, Saxon; leysing,
Icel. perfdy. Wicliffe calls liars "leasing-mongers," dealers in lying.] Lies;
falsehood.

O ye sons of men, how long will ye have such pleasure in vanity, and seek after leasing.
Psal. iv. 2.

He 'mongst ladies would their fortunes read
Out of their hands, and merry leasings tell.
Spenser, Hub. Tale.

He hates foul leasings and vile flattery,
Two filthy bluffs in noble gentery.
Spenser, Hub. Tale.

That false pilgrim which that leasht told,
Being indeed old Archimago. Spenser, F. Q.

I have ever verified my friends
With all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,
Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground
I've tumbld' past the throw; and in his praise
Have almost stamp'd the leasing. Shakspeare, Coriol.
As folks, quoth Richard, prone to leasing,
Say things at first, because they're pleasing;
Then prove what they have once asserted;
Nor care to have their lie deserted:
Till their own dreams at length deceive them,
And oft repeating they believe them. Prior.
Trading free shall thrive again,
Nor leasings lewd affright the swain.

Gay, Pastorals.

LEASOW.* n.s. [leype, leeppe, Saxon.] A pasture. This word is very old in our language; but has escaped notice, notwithstanding the modern application of it by Shenstone to his celebrated residence, the Leasowes. Kelham notices also the Norm. Fr. leswes, or lesues, as used for pasture-ground.
He schal go yn, and schal go out; and he schal fynde lewis, [in the present version, pasture.]
Wicliffe, St. John, x. 9.

They arrived at a little grove of trees in a close of Mr. Whitgreave's, called the pit-leasow.
Boswell, &c. (1651), reprint. 1822, p. 65.

LEAST. adj. the superlative of little. [læst, Saxon. This word Wallis would persuade us to write lest, that it may be analogous to less; but surely the profit is not worth the change.] Little beyond others; smallest.

I am not worthy of the least of all the mercies shewed to thy servant. Gen. xxxii. 10.
A man can no more have a positive idea of the greatest than he has of the least space. Locke.

LEAST. adv. In the lowest degree; in a degree below others; less than any other way.

He resolv'd to wave his suit,
Or for a while play least in sight. Hudibras.
Ev'n that avert; I chuse it not;
But taste it as the least unhappy lot.

Dryden, Kn. Tale.
No man more truly knows to place a right value on your friendship, than he who least deserves it on all other accounts than his due sense of it.
Pope, Letters.

At LEAST. }
At the LEAST. }
At LEASTWISE. }

1. To say no more; to not to demand; or affirm more than is barely sufficient; at the lowest degree.

He who attempts, though in vain, at least asperses

The tempted with dishonour. Milton, P. L.
He from my side subducing, took perhaps
More than enough; at least on her bestowed
Too much of ornament, in outward show
Elaborate, of inward less exact. Milton, P. L.
Upon the mast they saw a young man, at least
if he were a man, who sat as on horseback. Sidney.

Every effect doth after a sort contain, at least- wise resemble the cause for which it proceedeth.
Hooker.

Honour and fame at least thund'r'er ow'd,
And ill he pays the promise of a God. Pope.

The remedies, if any, are to be proposed from a constant course of the milken diet, continued at least a year. Temple.

A fiend may deceive a creature of more excellency than himself, at least by the tacit permission of the omniscient Being. Dryden, Ded. to Juvenal.

2. It has a sense implying doubt; to say no more; to say the least; not to say all that might be said.

Whether such virtue spent now fail'd
New angels to create, if they at least
Are his created.

Milton, P. L.

Let useful observations be at least some part of the subject of your conversation.

Watts, Impr. of the Mind.

LE'ASY. adj. [This word seems formed from the same root with loisir, French, or loose.] Flimsy; of weak texture. Not in use.

He never leaveth, while the sense itself be left loose and leasy.

Ascham, Schoolmaster.

LEAT.* n. s. [læt, Sax. third pers. sing. pret. from læban, to lead, to conduct.] A trench to convey water to or from a mill. Mentioned in the Stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 19.

1. Dressed hides of animals.

He was a hairy man, and girt with a girdle of leather about his loins.

2 Kings, i. 8.

And if two boots keep out the weather,
What need you have two hides of leather?

Prior.

2. Skin; ironically.

Returning sound in limb and wind,
Except some leather lost behind.

Swift.

3. It is often used in composition for leather.

The shepherd's homely curds,
His cold thin drink out of his leather bottle;
Is far beyond a prince's delicates.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

To LE'ATHER.* v. a. To beat; to lash as with a thong of leather. A low expression; used also in Scotland. See Dr. Jamieson's Dict. "I'll leather you heartily." North of England. Grose.

To LE'ATHER, or LE'THER.* v. n. [hleodþan, Sax. to thunder, to make a great noise; spoken of running horses, Ray says; as, they lether it away; which, in some places, is, they thunder it along.] To proceed with noise or violence; to push forward eagerly. A common but low expression.

Grew, Museum.

LEAVE. n. s. [leape, Saxon; from lypan, to grant.]

1. Grant of liberty; permission; allowance.

By your leave, Ireneus, notwithstanding all this your careful foresight, methinks I see an evil
lurk unspied.

Spenser on Ireland.

When him his dearest Una did behold,
Disdaining life, desiring leave to dye.

Spenser, F. Q.

I make bold to press upon you.

— You're welcome; give us leave, drawer.

Shakespeare.

The days

Of Sylla's sway, when the free sword took leave
To act all that it would.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

Thrice happy snake! that in her sleeve
May boldly creep, we dare not give

Our thoughts so unconfin'd a leave.

Waller.

No friend has leave to bear away the dead.

Dryden.

Offended that we fought without his leave,
He takes this time his secret hate to shew.

Dryd.

One thing more I crave leave to offer about syllogism, before I leave it.

Locke.

I must have leave to be grateful to any who serves me, let him be never so obnoxious to any party; nor did the tory party put me to the hardship of asking this leave.

Pope.

2. Farewell; adieu. In this sense leave is permission to depart.

Take leave and part, for you must part forthwith.

Shakespeare.

Evils that take leave,

On their departure, most of all shew evil.

Shaks.

There is further compliment of leave taking between France and him.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Here my father comes;

A double blessing is a double grace;

Occasion smiles upon a second leave.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

But my dear nothings, take your leave,

No longer must you me deceive.

Suckling.

Many stars may be visible in our hemisphere, that are not so at present; and many shall take leave of our horizon, and appear unto southern habitations.

Brown.

To LEAVE.† v. a. pret. I left; I have left. [Of the derivation of this word the etymologists give no satisfactory account. Dr. Johnson. — It is the Saxon læpan, leopan, to leave, to relinquish; leifa, Icel. the same.]

1. To quit; to forsake.

A man shall leave his father and his mother,
and cleave to his wife.

Gen. ii. 24.

If they love lees, and leave the lusty wine,

Envy them not their palates with the swine.

B. Jonson.

2. To desert; to abandon.

He that is of an unthankful mind, will leave him in danger that delivered him.

Eccles. xxix. 17.

3. To depart from, without action; as, I left things as I found them.

When they were departed from him, they left him in great diseases.

2 Chron. xxiv. 25.

4. To have remaining at death.

There be of them that have left a name behind them.

Eccles. xlv. 8.

5. Not to deprive of.

They still have left me the providence of God,
and all the promises of the gospel, and my charity to them too.

Bp. Taylor.

6. To suffer to remain.

If it be done without order, the mind compre-hendeth less that which is set down; and besides, it leaveth a suspicion, as if more might be said
than is expressed.

Bacon.

These things must be left uncertain to farther discoveries in future ages.

Abbott, Descr. of the World.

Who those are, to whom this right by descent belongs, he leaves out of the reach of any one to discover from his writings.

Locke.

7. Not to carry away.

They encamped against them, and destroyed the increase of the earth, and left no sustenance for Israel.

Judg. vi. 4.

He shall eat the fruit of thy cattle; which also shall not leave thee either corn, wine, or oil.

Deut. xxviii. 48.

Vastius gave strict commandment, that they should leave behind them unnecessary baggage.

Knolles, Hist.

8. To reject; not to choose.

In all the common incidents of life,

I am superior, I can take or leave.

Steele.

9. To fix as a token or remembrance.

This I leave with my reader, as an occasion for him to consider, how much he may be beholden to experience.

Locke.

10. To bequeath; to give as inheritance.

That peace thou leav'st to thy imperial line,
That peace, Oh happy shade, be ever thine.

Dryden.

11. To give up; to resign; to part with.

Thou shalt not glean thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger.

Lev. xix. 10.

Such black and grained spots

As will not leave their tinct.

Shaks. Hamlet.

If a wise man were left to himself, and his own choice, to wish the greatest good to himself he could devise; the sum of all his wishes would be this, That there were just such a being as God is.

Tillotson.

12. To permit without interposition.

Whether Esau were a vassal, I leave the reader to judge.

Locke.

13. To cease to do; to desist from.

Let us return, lest my father leave caring for the asses, and take thought for us.

1 Sam. ix. 5.

14. To LEAVE off. To desist from; to forbear.

If, upon any occasion, you bid him leave off the doing of any thing, you must be sure to carry the point.

Locke.

In proportion as old age came on, he left off fox-hunting.

Addison, Spect.

15. To LEAVE off. To forsake.

He began to leave off some of his old acquaintance, his roaring and bullying about the streets;
he put on a serious air.

Arbutnot, John Bull.

16. To LEAVE out. To omit; to neglect.

I am so fraught with curious business, that
I leave out ceremony.

Shaks. Wint. Tale.

You may partake: I have told 'em who you are.

— I should be loth to be left out, and here too.

B. Jonson.

What is set down by order and division doth demonstrate, that nothing is left out or omitted, but all is there.

Bacon.

Befriend till utmost end
Of all thy dues be done, and none left out,
Ere the nice morn on the Indian steep
From her cabin'd loop-hole peep. Milt. Comus.
We ask, if those subvert
Reason's establish'd maxims, who assert
That we the world's existence may conceive,
Though we one atom out of matter leave?

Blackmore.
I always thought this passage left out with a great deal of judgement, by Tucca and Varius, as it seems to contradict a part in the sixth Æneid.
Addison on Italy.

TO LEAVE. v. n.

1. To cease; to desist.

She is my essence, and I leave to be,
If I be not by her fair influence
Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive. Shaksp.
And since this business so far fair is done,
Let us not leave till all our own be won. Shaksp.
He began at the eldest, and left at the youngest.
Genesis.

2. To LEAVE off. To desist.

Grittus, hoping that they in the castle would not hold out, left off to batter or undermine it, wherewith he perceived he little prevailed.
Knolles, Hist.

But when you find that vigorous heat abate,
Leave off, and for another summons wait.
Roscommon.

3. To LEAVE off. To stop.

Wrongs do not leave off there where they begin,
But still beget new mischiefs in their course.
Daniel.

TO LEAVE. v. a. [from levy, lever, Fr.]
To levy; to raise: a corrupt word, made, I believe, by Spenser, for a rhime.

An army strong she leav'd,
To war on those which him had of his realm bereav'd. Spenser, F. Q.

LE'AVED.† adj. [from leaves, of leaf]

1. Furnished with foliage.
These tamarisks with thick-leav'd box are found,
And cytisus and garden-pinks abound.
Congreve, Transl. of Ovid.

2. Made with leaves or folds.

I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two leaved gates. Isa. xiv. 1.

LE'AVELESS.* adj. [from leaf and less.]
Having no leaves. Leafless is more
used.

Then I no more shall court the verdant bay,
But the dry leafless trunk on Golgotha.
Carew, Verses pref. to Sandy's Psalms.

LE'AVEN.† n. s. [from levain, Fr. from lever, to lift up; levare, Lat. Our word should be written leven. "The sour coagulated milk of Syria is called leven." Wither-ing's Eng. Botany, ii. 324.]

1. Ferment mixed with any body to make it light; particularly used of sour dough mixed in a mass of bread.

It shall not be baked with leven. Lev. vi. 17.
All fermented meats and drinks are easiest digested; and those unfermented, by barm or leven, are hardly digested. Floyer.

2. Any mixture which makes a general change in the mass, it generally means something that depraves or corrupts that with which it is mixed.

Many of their propositions savour very strong of the old leven of innovations. K. Charles.

TO LE'AVEN.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To ferment by something mixed.
Whosoever eateth leavened bread, that soul shall be cut off. Exod. xii. 17.

2. To taint; to imbue.

They yet so watch over their hearts, as not to suffer any outward momentary adornings whatsoever to leaven them with any thing of pride or sinful vanity. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 187.

That cruel something unposses,
Corrodes and leavens all the rest. Prior.

3. To imbue: in a good sense.

A few fishermen leavened the world with a doctrine quite against the grain of it; and naked truth prevailed against authority, art, and interest, in conjunction. Goodman, Wink. Ev. Conf. P. ii.

LE'AVENING.* n. s. [from leaven.] Ferment mixed with any substance to make it light.

Breads we have of several grains, with divers kinds of leavenings and seasonings; so that some do extremely move appetites. Bacon.

LE'AVENOUS.* adj. [from leaven.] Containing leaven; tainted.

Whose unsincere and leavenous doctrine, corrupting the people, first taught them looseness, then bondage. Milton, Eiconoclast. ch. 9.

LE'AVER. n. s. [from leave.] One who deserts or forsakes.

Let the world rank me in register
A master-leaver and a fugitive. Shakspere.

LEAVES. n. s. The plural of leaf.

Parts fit for the nourishment of man in plants are, seeds, roots, and fruits; for leaves they give no nourishment at all. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

LE'AVINESS.* n. s. [from leavy.] State of being full of leaves; accumulation of leaves. Leafiness would be better.

Sherwood.

LE'AVINGS. n. s. pl. [from leave.] Remnant; relics; offal; refuse: it has no singular.

My father has this morning call'd together,
To this poor hall, his little Roman senate,
The leavings of Pharsalia. Addison, Cato.
Then who can think we'll quit the place,
Or stop and light at Cloe's head,
With scraps and leavings to be fed? Swift.

LE'AVY. adj. [from leaf.] Full of leaves;
covered with leaves; leafy is more used.

Strephon, with leavy twigs of laurel tree,
A garland made on temples for to wear,
For he then chosen was the dignity
Of village lord that Whitsontide to bear. Sidney.
Now, near enough; your leavy screens throw down,

And show like those you are. Shaksp. Macbeth.

TO LECH.† v. a. [lecher, French. This is merely another term for the verb latch, already noticed; which Hamner explains by leech. But this is the commentary, made, in an unguarded moment, by the rash pen of Mr. Mason:
"Hast thou yet lech'd the Athenian's eyes, &c." See TO LATCH. "This," Mr. Mason says, "is a strong specimen of Johnson's inconsistency. Under the verb latch, this passage is given for an example of it, the word being silently altered to latched. Such wilful impositions on the public would be enough to ruin any literary character whatsoever."

—Now silent alteration is quite out of the question; latch is the reading of the poet, retained by Mr. Steevens; and is one of our northern words unknown to Mr. Mason. Johnson gives lech, or, as Hamner reads it, leech, merely, perhaps, as the proposed alteration of that critick; and accordingly so cited the passage.

LE'CHER.† n. s. [Derived by Skinner from luxure, old French: luxuria is used in the middle ages in the same sense.
Dr. Johnson.—The old French language has lecheur, "galant, libertin, débauché, friand, gourmand, qui s'adonne aux
plaisirs, soit de la table ou de l'amour."
Roquefort. — Lezeppce, Saxon, is
"concupiscit illicitus, fornicatio, adulte-rium. Hinc nostra, lecher, lecherous, lechery." Lye, edit. Manning.—It is probably from the German laichen, to be lascivious, to play the whore.] A whoremaster.

I will now take the lecher; he's at my house;
he cannot 'scape me.

Shakspere, M. Wives of Windsor.
You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins
Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors. Shaksp.
The lecher soon transforms his mistress; now
In Io's place appears a lovely cow. Dryden.
The sleepy lecher shuts his little eyes,
About his churning chaps the frothy bubbles rise.
Dryden.

She yields her charms
To that fair lecher, the strong God of arms.
Pope, Odyssey.

TO LE'CHER. v. n. [from the noun.] To
whore.

Die for adultery? no.
The wren goes to't, and the small gilded fly
Does lech in my sight. Shaksp. K. Lear.
Gut eats all day, and *lech*ers all the night.
B. Jonson.

LE'CHEROUS.† adj. [from lecher.]

1. Provoking lust.
A lecherous thing is wine, and drunkenness
Is full of striving and of wretchedness.
Chaucer, Pard. Tale.

2. Lewd; lustful.
The sapphire should grow foul, and lose its beauty, when worn by one that is lecherous;
the emerald should fly to pieces, if it touch the skin of any unchaste person. Derham.

LE'CHEROUSLY. adv. [from lecherous.]
Lewdly; lustfully.

Ther he wasted his goods, in living lecherously.
Wicliffe, St. Luke, xv. 13.

LE'CHEROUSNESS.† n. s. [from lecherous.]
Lewdness.

LE'CHERY.† n. s. [from lecher; old Fr.
lecherie. See LECHER.] Lewdness; lust.
The rest welter with as little shame in open lechery, as swine do in the common mire.
Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Against such lewdsters and their lechery,
Those that betray them do no treachery. Shaksp.

LE'CTION.† n. s. [lectio, Lat.]

1. A reading; a variety in copies.
I have perused those various lections.

Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 27.
Every critic has his own hypothesis: if the common text be not favourable to his opinion, a various lection shall be made authentic.

2. A lesson, or portion of scripture, read in divine service.

To this last described Jewish order of morning prayers so far did the ancient Christian agree, as to begin likewise with lections and psalmody.
Hooper on Lent, p. 355.

LE'CTIONARY.* n. s. [low Lat. lection-arium.] A book containing parts of scripture, which were read in churches.

The lectionary contained all the lessons, whether from scripture, or other books, which were directed to be read in the course of the year.

Warton, Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 337.
Mabillon found at Lisieux, and published a Gallic lectionary, which is reputed to be now about 1200 years old, and contains the entire epistle of John, except the three heavenly witnesses.

Porson, Lett. to Travis, p. 153.

LECTURE. n. s. [lecture, French.]

1. A discourse pronounced upon any subject.

Mark him, while Dametas reads his rustick lecture unto him, how to feed his beasts before noon, and where to shade them in the extreme heat.

Sidney.

Wrangling pedant,
When in musick we have spent an hour,
Your lecture shall have leisure for as much.

Shakspeare.

When letters from Cæsar were given to Rusticus, he refused to open them till the philosopher had done his lectures. Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

Virtue is the solid good, which tutors should not only read lectures and talk of, but the labour and art of education should furnish the mind with, and fasten there.

Locke.

2. The act or practice of reading; perusal.

In the lecture of holy scripture, their apprehensions are commonly confined unto the literal sense of the text.

Brown.

3. A magisterial reprimand; a pedantic discourse.

Numidia will be blest by Cato's lectures.

Addison.

To LECTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To instruct formally.

2. To instruct insolently and dogmatically.

To LECTURE. v. n. To read in publick; to instruct an audience by a formal explanation or discourse; as, Wallis lectured on geometry.

LECTURER. n. s. [from lecture.]

1. An instructor; a teacher by way of lecture.

2. A preacher in a church hired by the parish to assist the rector or vicar.

If any minister refused to admit into his church a lecturer recommended by them, and there was not one orthodox or learned man recommended, he was presently required to attend upon the committee.

Clarendon.

LECTURESHIP. n. s. [from lecture.] The office of a lecturer.

He got a lectureship in town of sixty pounds a year, where he preached constantly in person.

Swift.

LECTURN.* n. s. [lectrin, old Fr.; lectrinum, low Lat. from lectus, of lego, to read.] A reading desk. Obsolete.

Huloet.

The second lesson Robin Redebreste sang —
And to the lectorne amorily he sprang.

Chaucer, Court of Love.

LED. part. pret. of lead.

Then shall they know that I am the Lord your God, which caused them to be led into captivity among the heathen.

Ezek. xxxix. 28.

The leaders of this people caused them to err, and they that are led of them are destroyed.

Isa. ix. 16.

As in vegetables and animals, so in most other bodies, not propagated by seed, it is the colour we most fix on, and are most led by.

Locke.

LEDDEN.* n. s. [lyben, Sax. the Latin language, and language in general; læben, the Latin only. Dante, Mr. Tyrwhitt has observed, uses latino in the general sense of lyben. Our old word is sometimes lede, or leid, for language; which, as well as ledden, are now obsolete.]

1. Language.

She understood wel every thing

That any foule may in his leden sein,

And coude answer him in his leden again.

Chaucer, Squ. Tale.

Thereto he was expert in prophecies,

And coude the ledden of the gods unfold,

Spenser, F. Q. iv. xi. 19.

Her ledden was like human language true.

Fairfax, Tasso, xvi. 13.

2. True meaning.

And those that do to Cynthia expound

The ledden of strange languages in charge.

Spenser, Colin Clout.

LEDCA'PTAIN.* n. s. [led and captain.]

An humble attendant; a favourite that follows as if led by a string.

Mr. Pope, and Mr. Gay, were then favourites of Mrs. Howard; especially Gay, who was then of her ledcaptains.

Swift to Lady B. Germaine, (1732.)

They will never want some creditable ledcaptain to attend them, at a minute's warning, to operas, plays, Ranelagh, and Vauxhall. Ld. Chesterfield.

LEDGE.† n. s. [leggen, Dutch, to lie.]

1. A row; layer; stratum.

The lowest ledge or row should be merely of stone, closely laid, without mortar: a general caution for all parts in building contiguous to board.

Watson on Architecture.

2. A ridge rising above the rest; or projecting beyond the rest.

We are like some fond spectators, that when they see the puppets acting upon the ledge, think they move alone; not knowing that there is an hand behind their curtain that stirs all their wires.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 77.

The four parallel sticks rising above five inches higher than the handkerchief, served as ledges on each side.

Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

3. Any prominence or rising part.

Beneath a ledge of rocks his feet he hides,

The bending brow above, a safe retreat provides.

Dryden.

LEDGER.* n. s. In the sense of an account-book, this orthography is settled by long custom. In any other sense it is perfectly obsolete, so that no advantage can arise from altering the spelling.

As a further confirmation of ledger, we have ledge derived from the same Dutch word which is the original of ledger, namely, leggen, to lie. Nares, Elem. of Orthoepey, p. 297. See LEGER.

LEDHORSE. n. s. [led and horse.] A sumpter horse.

LEE.† n. s. [lie, French.]

1. Dregs; sediment; refuse; commonly lees.

My cloaths, my sex, exchange'd for thee,
I'll mingle with the people's wretched lee. Prior.

2. [Sea term; supposed by Skinner from leau, French, the water, Dr. Johnson.

—We have here a vestige of the old Icelandic word lae, laa, the sea. This seems to give us the true origin of the English lee, which has been strangely derived by Skinner from leau. Others have traced it to le, as denoting shelter: [lee, Goth. "locus tempestatibus subductus." Ihre.] But a lee shore is that, towards which the winds blow, and, of consequence, the waves are driven. From the lee side of the ship being understood to denote that which is not directly exposed to the wind, it seems to have been oddly inferred, that the term lee, as thus used, signifies calm, tranquil. Dr. Jamieson, in V. LE.] It is generally that side which is opposite to the wind, as the lee shore is that the wind blows on. To be under the lee of the shore, is to be close under the weather shore. A leeward ship is one that is not fast by a wind, to make her way so good as she might. To lay a ship by the lee, is to bring her so that all her sails may lie against the masts and shrouds flat, and the wind to come right on her broadside, so that she will make little or no way.

Dict.

If we, in the bay of Biscay, had had a port under our lee, that we might have kept our transporting ships with our men of war, we had taken the Indian fleet.

Ralegh.

The Hollanders were before Dunkirk with the wind at north west, making a lee shore in all weathers.

Ralegh.

Unprovided of tackling and victualling, they are forced to sea by a storm; yet better do so than venture splitting and sinking on a lee shore.

King Charles.

Him, haply slumbering on the Norway foam,
The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff,
Deeming some island, oft, as seamen tell,
With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side under the lee, while night
Invests the sea.

Milton, P. L.

Batter'd by his lee they lay,
The passing winds through their torn canvas play.

Dryden.

To LEE.* v. n. [leogan, Sax.] To utter a falsehood; to lie. Chaucer uses lee for a lie. "Thou lees" is thou tellest a lie, in our northern dialect.]

LEECH.† n. s. [læc, Saxon; lek, lekeis Gothick. Wicliffe, Gower, and Chaucer use this word.]

1. A physician; a professor of the art of healing: whence we still use cowleech.

A leech, the which had great insight
In that disease of griev'd conscience,
And well could cure the same; his name was Patience.

Spenser, F. Q.

Her words prevail'd, and then the learned leech
His cunning hand gan to his wounds to lay,
And all things else the which his art did teach.

Spenser, F. Q.

Physick is their bane.

The learned leeches in despair depart,
And shake their heads, desponding of their art.

Dryden.

Wise leeches will not vain receipts obtrude;
Deaf to complaints they wait upon the ill,
Till some safe crisis.

Dryden.

The hoary wrinkled leech has watch'd and told it,
Tried every health-restoring herb and gum,
And wearied out his painful skill in vain.

Rowe.

A skilful leech,

They say, had wrought this blessed deed;
This leech Arbutnot was yclept. Gay, Pastorals.

2. A kind of small water serpent, which fastens on animals, and sucks the blood: it is used to draw blood where the lancet is less safe, whence perhaps the name.

I drew blood by leeches behind his ear.

Wiseman.

Sticking like leeches, till they burst with blood,
Without remorse insatiably.

Roscommon.

To LEECH.† v. a. [læcniān, Sax. leikīnōn, Gothick.] To treat with medicament; to heal.

Fully avised him to leche.

Chaucer's Dream, ver. 852.

LEECHCRAFT. n. s. [leech and craft.] The art of healing.

We study speech, but others we persuade:
We leechcraft learn, but others cure with it.

Davies.

LEECH-WAY.* n. s. [from the Gothick leik, flesh, and also a corpse.] The path in which the dead are carried to be buried. Exmore Dialect. That, is the way of all flesh. See also LICH.

LEEF† adj. [leor, Saxon, dear, loved; lieve, leve, Dutch, the same. See also LIEF.]

1. Agreeable; pleasing; grateful; dear. Mine owne dear brother, and my lefist lord.

Chaucer, Merch. Tale.

Whilome all these were low and liefe,

And loved their flocks to feed;

They never stroven to be chiefe,

And simple was their weede. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

My little flock that was to me most liefe.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

For love of that is to thee most liefe.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

2. Willing; as, "leef or loth;" common in Gower.

All were they liefe or loth. Spenser, F. Q.

LEEF.* adv. [from the adjective.] Soon; willingly; readily. "I would as leef not go." Common, as a vulgar expression, in many parts of England. See also LEVER.

LEEK. n. s. [leac, Saxon; loock, Dutch; leechk, Erse, porrum, Latin.] A plant.

Know'st thou Fluellen? — Yes.

— Tell him I'll knock his leek about his pate,

Upon St. David's day. Shakespeare.

Leek to the Welsh, to Dutchmen butter's dear.

Gay.

We use acrid plants inwardly and outwardly in gangrenes; in the scurvy, water-cresses, horse-radish, garlick, or leek-potage.

Floyer on Humours.

LE'ENY.* adj. See LEANY.

LEER† n. s. [hleape, Sax. frons, facies, gena.]

1. Complexion; hue; face.

He hath a Rosalind of a better leer than you.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

2. An oblique view.

I spy entertainment in her; she gives the leer of invitation. Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

Aside the devil turn'd

For envy, yet with jealous leer malign

3. A labour'd cast of countenance.

Damn'd faint praise, assent with civil leer.

Pope.

I place a statesman full before my sight;

A bloated monster in all his gear,

With shameless visage, and perfidious leer. Swift.

4. Formerly, the cheek; agreeably to the Saxon usage of it.

No, ladie, quoth the earle with a lowde voyce,
and the teares trilling down his leeres, sayt so.

Holingshed, Hist. of Irel. fol. 114. b.

LEER.* adj. [zelæp, Sax. vacuus.]

1. Empty. This expression, in colloquial language, is yet spoken, in some places, of the stomach: a leer stomach. In Wiltshire, a leer waggon is an empty waggon: in the Exmore dialect, the word is leery.

2. Empty; frivolous; foolish; without understanding.

The author doth promise a strutting horse-courser, with a leer drunkard, two or three to attend him in as good equipage as you would wish.

B. Jonson, Induct. Barth. Fair.

Laugh on, sir; I'll to bed and sleep,
And dream away the vapour of love, if th' house
And your leer drunkards let me.

B. Jonson, New Inn.

He had rather have words bear two senses impertinently, than one to the purpose; and never speaks without a lere sense. Buller, Charact. Rem.

To LEER.† v. n. [from the noun; so leer, Dan. to smile; loeren, Dutch, to look askance.] To look obliquely; to look archly.

I will leer upon him as he comes by; and do but mark the countenance that he will give me.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

O yes! O yes! if any maid

Whom leering Cupid has betray'd

To frowns of spite, to eyes of scorn,

And would in madness now see torn

The boy in pieces; let her come

Hither, and lay on him her doom. Lily's Galathea.

I wonder whether you taste the pleasure of independency, or whether you do not sometimes leer upon the court. Swift.

To LEER.* v. a. To draw on with smiles; to beguile with leering.

Bertran has been taught the arts of courts,

To gild a face with smiles, and leer a man to judge.

Dryden.

LE'ERINGLY.* adv. [from the part. leering.] With a kind of arch smile, or sneer.

He leeringly produces a passage, wherein I maintain that the convocations were heretofore frequently inhibited.

Bp. Nicholson to Dr. Kennet, Ep. Corr. i. 236.

LEES. n. s. pl. [lie, French.] Dregs; sediment: it has seldom a singular. But see LEE.

The memory of king Richard was so strong, that it lay like lees at the bottom of men's hearts; and if the vessel was but stirred, it would come up.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

If they love lees, and leave the lusty wine,
Envy them not their palates with the swine.

B. Jonson.

Those lees that trouble it, refine

The agitated soul of generous wine. Dryden.

To LEESE.† v. a. [leorān, Sax. to lose; lesen, Dutch.]

1. To lose: an old word.

Then sell to thy profit both butter and cheese,
Who buieth it sooner the more he shall leese.

Tusser.

Peradventure we may find grass to save the horses and mules alive, that we leese not all the beasts.

1 Kings, xviii. 5.

No cause nor client fat, will Chev'ril leese,
But as they come on both sides he takes fees;
And pleaseth both: for while he melts his grease
For this, that wins for whom he holds his peace.

B. Jonson.

How in the port our fleet dear time did leese,
Withering like prisoners, which lie but for fees.

Donne.

2. To hurt; to destroy. [læsus, Lat. from ledo, to hurt.]

A nyght thief cometh not, but that he steale, sle, and leese.

Wicliffe, St. John, x. 10.

LEET.† n. s.

Leete, or leta, is otherwise called a law-day. The word seemeth to have grown from the Saxon leðe, which was a court of jurisdiction above the wapentake or hundred, comprehending three or four of them, otherwise called thrashing, and contained the third part of a province or shire: these jurisdictions, one and other, be now abolished, and swallowed up in the county court. Cowel. [The word is probably from the Goth. and Icel. leta, to enquire.]

Who has a breast so pure,

But some uncleanly apprehensions

Keep lets and law-days, and in sessions sit

With meditations lawful? Shakespeare, Othello.

You would present her at the leet,

Because she brought stone jugs, and no seal'd quarts. Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

LEET-ALE.* n. s. A feast or merry-making at the time of the leet.

Leet-ale, in some parts of England, signifies the dinner at a court-leet of a manor for the jury and customary tenants. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 329.

LEET.* adj. Our northern word for light; and thus leetsome for lightsome.

LE'EWARD.† adj. [lee and peap, Saxon.] Under the wind; on the side opposite to that from which the wind blows. See LEE.

The classice were called long ships, the one-rare round because of their figure approaching towards circular: this figure, though proper for the stowage of goods, was not the fittest for sailing, because of the great quantity of leeward way, except when they sailed full before the wind.

Arbuthnot.

Let no statesman dare,

A kingdom to a ship compare;

Lest he should call our commonweal

A vessel with a double keel;

Which just like ours, new rigg'd and mann'd,

And got about a league from land,

By change of wind to leeward side,

The pilot knew not how to guide. Swift.

LEEF.* See LEEF, and LEVER.

LEFT. participle preter. of leave.

Alas, poor lady! desolate and left;

I weep myself to think upon thy words. Shaksp.

Had such a river as this been left to itself, to have found its way out from among the Alps, whatever windings it had made, it must have formed several little seas. Addison.

Were I left to myself, I would rather aim at instructing than diverting; but if we will be useful to the world, we must take it as we find it.

Addison, Spect.

LEFT. adj. [lyfte, Dutch; lævus, Latin.] Sinistrous: not right.

That there is also in men a natural prepotency in the right, we cannot with constancy affirm, if we make observation in children, who, permitted the freedom of both hands, do oftentimes confine it unto the left, and are not without great difficulty restrained from it. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The right to Pluto's golden palace guides,
The left to that unhappy region tends,
Which to the depth of Tartarus descends. Dryden.

The gods of greater nations dwell around,
And, on the right and left, the palace bound;
The commons where they can. Dryden.

A raven from a wither'd oak,
Left of their lodging was oblig'd to croak:

That omen lik'd him not. Dryden.

The left foot naked when they march to fight,
But in a bull's raw hide they sheathe the right.

Dryden.

The man who struggles in the fight,
Fatigues left arm as well as right. Prior.

LEFT-HANDED.† adj. [left and hand.]

1. Using the left-hand rather than right.

The limbs are used most on the right-side, whereby custom helpeth; for we see, that some are left-handed, which are such as have used the left-hand most. Bacon.

For the seat of the heart and liver on one side, whereby men become left-handed, it happeneth too rarely to countenance an effect so common: for the seat of the liver on the left-side is very monstrous. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Unlucky; inauspicious; unreasonable.
[A Latinism.]

That would not be put off with left-handed cries. B. Jonson, Epicene.

They are close hypocrites, and walk in a left-handed policy.

Sir G. Paul, Life of Abp. Whilgift, p. 58.

LEFT-HANDEDNESS. n. s. [from left-handed cries.]

Be ungracious; yet we cannot want that hand. Donne, Poems, p. 153.

LEFT-HANDINESS.* n. s. [from left hand.]
Awkward manner.

An awkward address, ungraceful attitudes, and actions, and a certain left-handedness (if I may use the expression) proclaim low education.

Ld. Chesterfield.

LEG.† n. s. [leg, Danish; leggur, Icelandic.]

1. The limb by which we walk; particularly that part between the knee and the foot.

They haste; and what their tardy feet denied,
The trusty staff, their better leg, supplied. Dryden.
Purging comfits, and aunts' eggs,
Had almost brought him off his legs. Hudibras.
Such intrigues people cannot meet with, who have nothing but legs to carry them. Addison, Guardian.

2. An act of obeisance; a bow with the leg drawn back: usually, but not always, with the verb to make. Hence, in our old dictionaries, "to make a leg;" and all the examples, given by Dr. Johnson under the present meaning, are accompanied with this verb. There are now examples without it.

At court, he that cannot make a leg, put off his cap, kiss his hand, and say nothing, has neither leg, hands, lip, nor cap. Shakespeare, All's well.

Their horses never give a blow,
But when they make a leg, and bow. Hudibras.
He was a quarter of an hour in his legs, and reverences, to the company.

L'Estrange, Tr. of Quevedo.

Nor enjoin them a leg, a cringe, or a bow.
Mr. Barker, Repr. of Rehearsal Transp. p. 508.
If the boy should not put off his hat, nor make legs very gracefully, a dancing-master will cure that defect. Locke.

He made his leg, and went away. Swift.

3. To stand on his own LEGS. To support himself.

Persons of their fortune and quality could well have stood upon their own legs, and needed not to lay in for countenance and support.

Collier of Friendship.

4. That by which any thing is supported on the ground: as, the leg of a table.

LEGACY. n. s. [legatum, Latin.]

Legacy is a particular thing given by last will and testament. Cowell.

If there be no such thing apparent upon record, they do as if one should demand a legacy by force and virtue of some written testament, wherein there being no such thing specified, he pleads that there it must needs be, and bringeth arguments from the love or good-will which always the testator bore him; imagining, that these, or the like proofs, will convict a testament to have that in it, which other men can nowhere by reading find. Hooker.

Fetch the will hither, and we shall determine How to cut off some charge in legacies.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

Good counsel is the best legacy a father can leave a child. L'Estrange.

When he thought you gone

To augment the number of the bless'd above,
He deem'd 'em legacies of royal love;
Nor arm'd his brothers' portions to invade,
But to defend the present you had made. Dryden.

When the heir of this vast treasure knew,
How large a legacy was left to you,
He wisely ty'd it to the crown again. Dryden.
Leave to thy children tumult, strife, and war,
Portions of toil, and legacies of care. Prior.

LEGACY-HUNTER.* n. s. A word of contempt for persons, who by flattery or presents endeavour to obtain the good opinion of others, in order to be remembered in their wills by a legacy.

The legacy-hunters, the hæredipetæ, were a more common character among the ancients than with us. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

I am, Mr. Rambler, a legacy-hunter; and, as every man is willing to think well of the tribe in which his name is registered, you will forgive my vanity, if I remind you that the legacy-hunter, however degraded by an ill-compounded appellation in our barbarous language, was known, as I am told, in antient Rome, by the sonorous titles of "captator" and "hæredipetæ!"

Johnson, Rambler, No. 197.

LEGAL.† adj. [legal, French; leges, Latin.]

1. Done or conceived according to law.

Whatever was before Richard I. was before time of memory; and what is since is, in a legal sense, within the time of memory. Hale, Hist. of the Com. Law.

2. Lawful; not contrary to law.

Assigning to every thing capable of ownership a legal and determinate owner. Blackstone.

3. According to the law of the old dispensation.

His merits

To save them, not their own, though legal, works. Milton, P. L.

LEGALITY. n. s. [légalité, French.] Lawfulness.

To LEGALIZE.† v. a. [légaliser, French; from legal.] To authorize; to make lawful.

If any thing can legalize revenge, it should be injury from an extremely obdurate person: but revenge is so absolutely the peculiar of Heaven, that no consideration can impower, even the best men, to assume the execution of it. South.

A market-overt for legalizing a base traffick of votes and pensions.

Burke, Lett. to T. Burgh, Esq.

LEGALLY. adv. [from legal.] Lawfully; according to law.

A prince may not, much less may inferior judges, deny justice, when it is legally and competently demanded. By. Taylor.

LEGATARY. n. s. [legataire, French; from legatum, Latin.] One who has a legacy left.

An executor shall exhibit a true inventory of goods, taken in the presence of fit persons, as creditors and legataries are, unto the ordinary. Ayliffe.

LEGATE. n. s. [legatus, Latin; legat, French; legato, Italian.]

1. A deputy; an ambassador.

The legates from the Ætolian prince return: Sad news they bring, that after all the cost, And care employ'd, their embassy is lost. Dryden, Æn.

2. A kind of spiritual ambassador from the pope; a commissioner deputed by the pope for ecclesiastical affairs.

Look where the holy legate comes apace,
To give us warrant from the hand of Heaven. Shakespeare.

Upon the legate's summons, he submitted himself to an examination, and appeared before it. Atterbury.

LEGATE. n. s. [from legatum, Latin.]

One who has a legacy left him.

If he chance to 'scape this dismal bout,
The former legates are blotted out. Dryden, Jew.

My will is, that if any of the above-named legates should die before me, that then the respective legates shall revert to myself. Swift.

LEGATESHIP.* n. s. [from legate.] Office of a legate. Sherwood.

He put them in a box called "the box of the ambassador and legateship."

Notstock, Confutation of the Alcoran, (1652), p. 27.

LEGATINE.† adj. [from legate.] Some write this word, improperly, legantine. Even Milton has so used it: "A kind of legantine power." Animadv. on the Rem. Defence. "Matters of embassies, and legantine affairs." Howell, Pref. to Finet's Philoxenis.

1. Made by a legate.

When any one is absolved from excommunication, it is provided by a legatine constitution, that some one shall publish such absolution. Ayliffe, Parergon.

2. Belonging to a legate of the Roman see.

All those you have done of late,
By your power legatine within this kingdom,
Fall in the compass of a premunire. Shakespeare.

LEGATION. n. s. [legatio, Latin.] Deputation; commission; embassy.

After a legation ad res repetendas, and a refusal, and a denunciation or indiction of a war, the war is no more confined to the place of quarrel, but is left at large. Bacon.

In attiring, the duke had a fine and unaffected politeness, and upon occasion costly, as in his legations. Wotton.

LEGATOR. n. s. [from lego, Latin.] One who makes a will, and leaves legacies.

Suppose debate

Between pretenders to a fair estate

Bequeath'd by some legator's last intent. Dryden, Hind and Panther.

To LEGE.* v. a. [allego, Lat.]
1. To allege; to assert.

To reason faste, and ledge authority.

Chaucer, Court of Love, v. 1065.

Not only he legeth his mercy to bind his reason, but also his wysdome. By. Fisher, Fr. 15.

2. To lighten; to ease. [alleger, French.]
Written also allege, or allege. In both senses obsolete.

To leggin her of her doloure.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 5016.

LEGEND. n. s. [legenda, Lat.]

1. A chronicle or register of the lives of saints.

Legends being grown in a manner to be nothing else but heaps of frivolous and scandalous vanities, they have been even with disdain thrown out, the very nests which breed them abhorring them. Hooker.

There are in Rome two sets of antiquities, the christian and the heathen; the former, though of a fresher date, are so embroiled with fable and legend, that one receives but little satisfaction.

Addison on Italy.

2. Any memorial or relation.

And in this legend all that glorious deed
Read, whilst thou arm you; arm you narrative read. Fairfax.

3. An incredible unauthentic narrative.

Who can shew the legends, that record
More idle tales, or fables so absurd? Blackmore.
It is the way of attaining to heaven, that makes profane scorners so willingly let go the expectation of it. It is not the articles of the creed, but the duty to God and their neighbour, that is such an inconsistent incredible legend. Bentley.

4. Any inscription; particularly on medals or coins.

Compare the beauty and comprehensiveness of legends on ancient coins. Addison on Medals.

TO LEGEND.* v. a. [from the noun.] To detail as in a legend.

Nor ladie's wanton love nor wandering knight,
Legend I out in riches all richly dight.

Bp. Hall, Sat. i. 1.

LEGENDARY.* adj. [from legend.] Fabulous; romantick; partaking of the nature of a legend.

Those legendary writers — ascribe it to them that brought the reliques of St. Andrew.

Bp. Lloyd, Hist. Ch. Gov. in Brit. (1684), p. 29.
Much more credible authors than a thousand of their legendary writers.

Fleetwood, Ess. on Miracles, p. 260.
Legendary stories of nurses and old women.

Bourne, Antiq. of the Com. People, p. 41.

LEGENDARY.* n. s.

1. A book of old histories.

Cockeram.

2. A relater of legends.

Mendacious and counterfeit miracles related by the legends of their church.

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, (1616), p. 245.

Going with his nurse's sons into the field to fetch home the cows, saith his famous legendary,
Abunazar, the angel Gabriel came unto him.

L. Addison, Life of Mahomet, p. 18.

The legends own, that St. Catharine was slandered as a fond and light woman.

Bp. Lavington, Enth. of Meth. and Papists, i. 59.

LEGER.* n. s. [from legger, Dutch, to lie or remain in a place.] Any thing that lies in a place; as, a leger ambassador; a resident; one that continues at the court to which he is sent: a leger-book; a book that lies in the counting-house.

Lord Angelo, having affairs to heaven,
Intends you for his swift ambassador,
Where you shall be an everlasting leger. Shakspeare.

I've given him that,
Which, if he take, shall quite unpeople her

Of leigers for her sweet. Shakspeare, Cymb.

If leger ambassadors or agents were sent to remain near the courts of princes, to observe their motions, such were made choice of as were vigilant. Bacon.

Who can endear
Thy praise too much? thou art Heaven's leger
here,
Working against the states of death and hell.

Herbert.

He withdrew not his confidence from any of those who attended his person, who, in truth, lay leger for the covenant, and kept up the spirits of their countrymen by their intelligence. Clarendon.

I call that a leger bait, which is fixed, or made to rest, in one certain place, when you shall be absent; and I call that a walking bait which you have ever in motion. Walton.

LEGER-BOOK.* n. s. A book that lies ready for entering articles of account or other memoranda in. See LEDGER.

Many leiger-books of the monasteries [are] still remaining, wherein they registered all their leases, and that for their own private use.

H. Wharton on Burnet's Hist. of the Ref. p. 42.

An entry in the leger-book of the chapter.

LEGERDEMAIN.* n. s. [contracted perhaps from legereté de main, French. Dr.
Johnson. — It was, of old, leger, legier du main, or de main: as in Huloet's dictionary;
in The Pope Confuted, fol. 35.
1580: "A trimme and skilfull shift of leger de mayne;" and in Fotherby's Atheomastix, p. 348: "Conveyed unto another by leger du main."] Sleight of hand; juggle; power of deceiving the eye by nimble motion; trick; deception;
knack.

He so light was at legerdemaine,
That what he touch'd came not to light again.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Of all the tricks and legerdemain by which men impose upon their own souls, there is none so common as the plea of a good intention. South.

LEGERITY.* n. s. [legereté, French.] Lightness; nimbleness; quickness. A word
not now in use.

When the mind is quicken'd, out of doubt,
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move
With casted slough and fresh legerity.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

TO LEGGE.* v. a. [legcan, Saxon.] To lay. See TO LAY.

Not eftsoone legginge the foundaments of penance fro deede workis, [present version, not laying again the foundation, &c.] Wicliffe, Heb. vi. 1.
Ther durste no wight hond upon him legge.

Chaucer, Reve's Tale.

LEGGED.* adj. [from leg.] Having legs;
furnished with legs: as, baker-legged,
bandy-legged.

And all to leave what with his toil he won
To that unfeather'd two-legg'd thing, a son.

Dryden.

LEGIBILITY.* n. s. [from legible.] Capability of being read.

LEGIBLE.* n. s. [from legibilis, Latin.]

1. That may be read.

You observe some clergymen with their heads held down within an inch of the cushion, to read what is hardly legible. Swift.

2. Apparent; discoverable.

People's opinions of themselves are legible in their countenances. Thus a kind imagination makes a bold man have vigour and enterprize in his air and motion; it stamps value and significancy upon his face. Collier.

LEGIBILITY.* n. s. [from legible.] State or quality of being legible. Ash.

LEGIBLY.* adv. [from legible.] In such a manner as may be read.

LEGION.* n. s. [legio, Latin.]

1. A body of Roman soldiers consisting of about five thousand.

The most remarkable piece in Antoninus's pillar is, the figure of Jupiter Pluvius sending rain on the fainting army of Marcus Aurelius, and thunderbolts on his enemies, which is the greatest confirmation possible of the story of the Christian legions. Addison.

2. A military force.

She to foreign realms
Sends forth her dreadful legions. Philips.

3. Any great number.

Not in the legions
Of horrid bell, can come a devil more damn'd.
Shakspeare.

The partition between good and evil is broken down; and where one sin has entered, legions will force their way through the same breach. Rogers.

LEGIONARY.* adj. [from legion; Fr. legionnaire.]

1. Relating to a legion.

Sherwood.

It [the Gospel] was most probably first introduced among the legionary soldiers; for we find St. Alban, the first British martyr, to have been of that body. Burke, Abridg. of Eng. History.

2. Containing a legion.

3. Containing a great indefinite number.

Too many applying themselves betwixt jest and earnest, make up the legionary body of error.

Brown.

LEGIONARY.* n. s. One of a body of Roman soldiers, consisting of about five thousand.

The legionaries, stood thick in order, empaed with light armed; the horse on either wing.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 2.

TO LEGISLATE.* v. n. To make laws for any community.

Solon, in legislating for the Athenians, had an idea of a more perfect constitution than he gave them; but he gave them such laws as they were then capable of receiving.

Bp. Watson, Charge in 1805.

LEGISLATION.* n. s. [from legislator, Lat.]

The act of giving laws.

Let me intreat you to explain what you mean by this way of divine legislation, or this way of delivering the Will of God, by the writings of the Holy Scripture. Goodman, Wint. Es. Conf. P. iii.

Pythagoras joined legislation to his philosophy, and like others, pretended to miracles and revelations from God, to give a more venerable sanction to the laws he prescribed.

Littellon on the Conversion of St. Paul.

LEGISLATIVE.* adj. [from legislator.]

Giving laws; lawgiving.

Their legislative phrenzy they repent,
Enacting it should make no precedent. Denham.
The poet is a kind of lawgiver, and those qualities are proper to the legislative style. Dryden.

LEGISLATOR.* n. s. [legislator, Latin;
legislatur, French. The earliest example, given by Dr. Johnson, of this word, is from South. It appears in the list of hard words, requiring explanation, in Sylvester's Du Bartas, 1621, p. 665.]

A lawgiver; one who makes laws for any community.
It spoke like a legislator: the thing spoke was a law. South.

Heroes in animated marble frown,
And Legislators seem to think in stone. Pope.

LEGISLATORSHIP.* n. s. [from legislator.]

Power of making laws.

There ought to be a difference made between coming out of pupillage, and leaping into legisla-torship. Ld. Hailfian.

LEGISLATRESS.* n. s. [from legislator.]

A female lawgiver.

See what that country of the mind will produce, when by the wholesome laws of this legislatrix it has obtained its liberty.

Shaftesbury, Moral. P. iv. § 2.

LEGISLATURE.* n. s. [from legislator, Lat.]

The power that makes laws.

Without the concurrent consent of all three parts of the legislature, no law is, or can be made.

Hale, Com. Law.

In the notion of a legislature is implied a power to change, repeal, and suspend laws in being, as well as to make new laws. Addison.

By the supreme magistrate is properly understood the legislative power, but the word magistrate seeming to denote a single person, and to express the executive power, it came to pass that the obedience due to the legislature was, for want of considering this easy distinction, misapplied to the administration.

Swift, Sentim. of a Ch. of Eng. Man.

LE'GIST.* n. s. [lex, legis, Lat. the law; legiste, old French.] Our old lexicography gives legister, as an obsolete word for lawyer. Bullokar and Cockeram. Chaucer uses it. Test. of Love.] One skilled in law.

Far be it from my sharp satirick muse
Those grave and reverent legists to abuse,
That aid Astræa.

Marston, Scourg. of Vill. (1599.) ii. 7.

The decretists and legists derived their ignorance.

A. Wood, Ann. Univ. Oxf.

LEGITIMACY.* n. s. [from legitimate.]

1. Lawfulness of birth.

In respect of his legitimacy, it will be good.

Ayliffe.

2. Genuineness; not spuriousness.

The legitimacy or reality of these marine bodies vindicated, I now inquire by what means they were hurried out of the ocean.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

LEGITIMATE.† adj. [from legitimus, Latin; legitime, Fr.]

1. Born in marriage; lawfully begotten.

The legitimate Edgar, I must have your land;
Our father's love is to the bastard Edmund.

Shakspeare.

An adulterous person is tied to make provision for the children begotten in unlawful embraces, that they may do no injury to the legitimate, by receiving a portion.

Bp. Taylor.

2. Genuine; not spurious: as, a legitimate work, the legitimate production of such an author.

3. Lawful: as, a legitimate course of proceeding.

To LEGITIMATE.† v. a. [legitimer, Fr. from the adjective.]

1. To procure to any the rights of legitimate birth.

None of your holy fathers as yet have been able to legitimate the child.

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, (1616,) p. 150.
Legitimate him that was a bastard.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

2. To make lawful.

To enact a statute of that which he dares not seem to approve, even to legitimate vice, to make sin itself, the ever alien and vassal sin, a free citizen of the commonwealth, pretending only these or these plausible reasons!

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. ii. 2.

It would be impossible for any enterprize to be lawful, if that which should legitimate it is subsequent to it, and can have no influence to make it good or bad.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

LEGITIMATELY.† adv. [from legitimate.]

1. Lawfully.

Those who were born of harlots, were not bound by the law to nourish or relieve their parents, as they were who were legitimately born.

Knatchbull, Tr. Annot. N. Test. p. 25.

2. Genuinely.

By degrees he rose to Jove's imperial seat,
Thus difficulties prove a soul legitimately great.

Dryden.

LEGITIMATENESS.* n. s. [from legitimate.]
Legality; lawfulness.

The fathers of Constantinople, in their letter to pope Damasus and the occidental bishops, approved and commended Flavianus to them, highly asserting the legitimateness of his ordination.

Barrow on the Pope's Supremacy.

LEGITIMATION.† n. s. [legitimation, Fr.; from legitimate.]

1. Lawful birth.

I have disclaim'd my land;

Legitimation, name, and all is gone;

Then, good my mother, let me know my father.

Shakspeare, K. John.

From whence will arise many questions of legitimation, and what in nature is the difference betwixt a wife and a concubine.

Locke.

2. The act of investing with the privileges of lawful birth.

He legitimated the duke's natural children by Katherine Swinford, whom he had lately married; he got their legitimation confirmed by parliament; and heaped upon them honours and preferments.

Louth, Life of Wykeham, p. 234.

LE'GUME. } n. s. [legume, Fr.; legu-
LEGUMEN. } men, Lat.] Seeds not reaped, but gathered by the hand; as, beans: in general all larger seeds; pulse.

Some legumens, as peas or beans, if newly gathered and distilled in a retort, will afford an acid spirit.

Boyle.

In the spring fell great rains, upon which ensued a most destructive mildew upon the corn and legumens.

Arbutnot.

LEGUMINOUS. adj. [legumineux, French; from legumen.] Belonging to pulse; consisting of pulse.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom is taken from the farinaceous seeds: as, oats, barley, and wheat; or of some of the siliqueous or leguminous; as, peas or beans.

Arbutnot.

LE'IGER.* } See LEGER and LEGER-
LEIGER-BOOK. } BOOK.

LE'ISURABLE.† adj. [from leisure.] Done at leisure; not hurried; enjoying leisure.

A relation inexcusable in his works of leisurable hours, the examination being as ready as the relation.

Brown.

A French gentleman, there consul-general for his nation, stayed me to take a leisurable view of that kingdom. Blount, Voy. to the Levant, p. 108.

He publicly declared himself ready and desirous to assist any person single, and particularly invited such to come at their leisurable hours.

Fell, Life of Hammond, § 2.

LE'ISURABLY.† adv. [from leisurable.] At leisure; without tumult or hurry.

Let us beg of God, that when the hour of our rest is come, the patterns of our dissolution may be Jacob, Moses, Joshua, and David, who leisurably ending their lives in peace, prayed for the mercies of God upon their posterity.

Hooker.

Here men must follow the shore; wind about leisurably; and insinuate their useful alterations by soft and unperceivable degrees.

Sprat, Hist. R. S. p. 66.

LEISURE. n. s. [loisir, Fr.]

1. Freedom from business or hurry; a vacancy of mind; power to spend time according to choice.

A gentleman fell very sick, and a friend said to him, Send for a physician; but the sick man answered, It is no matter; for if I die, I will die at leisure.

Bacon, Apophthegms.

Where ambition and avarice have made no entrance, the desire of leisure is much more natural than of business and care.

Teniple.

You enjoy your quiet in a garden, where you have not only the leisure of thinking, but the pleasure to think of nothing which can discompose your mind.

Dryden.

2. Convenience of time.

We'll make our leisures to attend on yours.

Shakspeare.

They summon'd up their meiny, strait took horse;

Commanded me to follow, and attend

The leisure of their answer, Shakspeare, K. Lear.

O happy youth!

For whom thy fates reserve so a fair bride:
He sigh'd, and had no leisure more to say,
His honour call'd his eyes another way.

Dryden, Ovid.

I shall leave with him that rebuke, to be considered at his leisure.

Locke.

3. Want of leisure. Not used.

More than I have said, loving countrymen;
The leisure and enforcement of the time

Forbids to dwell on. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

LE'ISURE.* adj. Convenient; free from business or hurry. We now say, leisure hours, leisure time.

Here pause, my Gothic lyre, a little while:

The leisure hour is all that thou can'st claim.

Beattie.

LE'ISURELY. adj. [from leisure.] Not hasty; deliberate; done without hurry.

He was the wretchedest thing when he was young,

So long a growing, and so leisurely,

That, if the rule were true, he should be gracious.

Shakspeare.

The earl of Warwick, with a handful of men, fired Leith and Edinburgh, and returned by a leisurely march.

Hayward.

The bridge is human life: upon a leisurely survey of it, I found that it consisted of threescore and ten intire arches.

Addison.

LE'ISURELY. adv. [from leisure.] Not in a hurry; slowly; deliberately.

The Belgians hop'd, that with disorder'd haste,
Our deep-cut keels upon the sands might run;

Or if with caution leisurely we past,

Their numerous gross might charge us one by one.

Dryden.

We descended very leisurely, my friend being careful to count the steps.

Addison.

LE'MAN.† n. s. [Generally supposed to be l'aimant, the lover, French; but imagined by Junius, with almost equal probability, to be derived from lief, Dutch, or leop, Saxon, beloved and man. This etymology is strongly supported by the ancient orthography, according to which it was written leveman. Dr. Johnson.—Junius is right; that is, the word comes from the Saxon, leop; and, as man in the Saxon language, signifies both man and woman, leman was used both for male and female sweethearts. Barret terms a leman "a married man's concubine," Alv. 1580. Shakspeare, a married woman's gallant; "Ford, that searched a hollow walnut for his wife's leman." Merr. Wives of Windsor.] A sweet-heart; a gallant; or a mistress.

[He] said, he wholde

Her lemman be, whether she wolde or n'olde.

Chaucer, Man of Law's Tale.

Unto his lemman Dalida he [Sampson] told,

That in his heres all his strengthe lay:

And falsely to his fomen him she sold.

Chaucer, Monk's Tale.

Hold for my sake, and do him not to dye;
But vanquish'd, thine eternal bonds slave make,
And me thy worthy meed unto thy leman take.

Spenser, F. Q.

A cup of wine,
That's brisk and fine,
And drink unto the leman mine.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

LEME.* n. s. [leoma, Saxon; liome, Icel. splendour; lahmon, Goth. lightning.] A ray; a beam; a flash: as, "a leam or flame of fire, a leam of lightning." Huloet. See also GLEAM.

Fire with red lemons. Chaucer, Nonnes Pr. Tale.
Thereby the incomprehensible majesty of God, as it were by a bright leme of a torch or candle, is declared to the blinde inhabitants of this world.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 2.

TO LEME.* v. n. [leoman, Saxon.] To shine; to blaze. Both the verb and substantive are obsolete.

LEMMA.† n. s. [λήμμα; lemme, Fr.] A proposition previously assumed.

I shall premise the following lemma: If with a view to demonstrate any proposition, a certain point is proposed, by virtue of which certain other points are attained; and such supposed point be itself afterwards destroyed or rejected by a contrary supposition; in that case, all the other points, attained thereby and consequent thereupon, must also be destroyed and rejected, so as from thence forward to be no more supposed or applied in the demonstration.

Bp. Berkeley, Analyst, § 12.

LEMON. n. s. [limon, French; limonium, low Latin.]

1. The fruit of the lemon-tree.

The juice of lemons is more cooling and astringent than that of oranges.

The dyers use it for dyeing of bright yellows and lemon colours.

Bear me, Ponona!

To where the lemon and the piercing lime,
With the deep orange, glowing through the green,
Their lighter glories blend.

Thomson.

2. The tree that bears lemons.

The lemon tree hath large stiff leaves;
the flower consists of many leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the fruit is almost of an oval figure, and divided into several cells, in which are lodged hard seeds, surrounded by a thick fleshy substance, which, for the most part, is full of an acid juice. There are many varieties of this tree, and the fruit is yearly imported from Lisbon in great plenty.

Miller.

LEMONADE. n. s. [from lemon.] Liquor made of water, sugar, and the juice of lemons.

Thou, and thy wife, and children, should walk in my gardens, buy toys, and drink lemonade.

Arbutnot, John Bull.

LEMURES.* n. s. pl. [Latin.] Hobgoblins; evil spirits among the ancients.

In consecrated earth,
And on the holy herms,
The Lars and Lemures moan with midnight plaint.

Milton, Ode Nativ.

TO LEND.† v. a. preterite, and part. pass.
lent. [laenan, Saxon; leenen, Dutch;
laena, Su. Goth. leiwhan, M. Goth. See LOAN.]

1. To afford or supply, on condition of repayment.

In common worldly things 'tis call'd ungrateful
With dull unwillingness to pay a debt,
Which, with a bounteous hand, was kindly lent;
Much more to be thus opposite with Heav'n.

Shakespeare.

Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury,
nor lend him thy victuals for increase.

Lev. xxv. 37.

They dare not give, and e'en refuse to lend,
To their poor kindred, or a wanting friend.

Dryden.

2. To suffer to be used on condition that it be restored.

I'll lend it thee, my dear, but have no power to give it from me.

Shakespeare, All's Well.

The fair blessing we vouchsafe to send;
Nor can we spare you long, though often we may lend.

Dryden to the D. of Ormond.

3. To afford; to grant in general.

Covetousness, like the sea, receives the tribute of all rivers, though unlike it in lending any back again.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

Painting and poesy are two sisters so like,
that they lend to each other their name and office: one is called a dumb poesy, and the other a speaking picture.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

From thy new hope, and from thy growing store,
Now lend assistance, and relieve the poor.

Dryden, Pers.

Cato, lend me for a while thy patience,
And condescend to hear a young man speak.

Addison.

Cephisa, thou

Wilt lend a hand to close thy mistress' eyes.

A. Phillips.

LENDABLE.* adj. [from lend.] That may be lent.

LENDER. n. s. [from lend.]

1. One who lends any thing.

2. One who makes a trade of putting money to interest.

Let the state be answered some small matter, and the rest left to the lender; if the abatement be small, it will not discourage the lender: he that took ten in the hundred, will sooner descend to eight than give over this trade.

Bacon.

Whole droves of lenders crowd the bankers doors
To call in money.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

Interest would certainly encourage the lender to venture in such a time of danger.

Addison.

LENDING.* n. s. [from lend.]

1. What is lent on condition of repayment.

Mowbray hath receiv'd eight thousand nobles,
In name of lendings for your highness' soldiers.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

2. What is supplied in general.

Off, off, you lendings: Come, unbutton here.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

LENDS.* n. s. pl. [lenſenu, Saxon; lenden,
Germ.] Loins. Obsolete.

A girdle of skyn aboute his lendis.

Wicliffe, St. Matt. iii. 4.

A barme-cloth cke as white as morwe milk
Upon her lenders.

Chaucer, Mill. Tale.

LENGTH.† n. s. [lengeð, the third person singular from the Sax. verb lengian.
Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. The extent of any thing material from end to end; the longest line that can be drawn through a body.

There is in Ticiunum a church that is in length
one hundred feet, in breadth twenty, and in height near fifty: it reporteth the voice twelve or thirteen times.

Bacon.

2. Horizontal extension.

Mezentius rushes on his foes,
And first unhappy Acron overthrows;
Stretch'd at his length he spurns the swarthy ground.

Dryden.

3. Comparative extent; a certain portion of space or time: in this sense it has a plural.

Large lengths of seas and shores
Between my father and my other lay.

Shakespeare, K. John.

To get from th' enemy, and Ralph, free;
Left danger, fears, and foes, behind,
And beat, at least, three lengths the wind.

Hudibras.

Time glides along with undiscover'd haste,
The future but a length beyond the past.

Dryden, Ovid.

4. Extent of duration or space.

What length of lands, what oceans have you
pass'd,
What storms sustain'd, and on what shores been cast.

Dryden.

Having thus got the idea of duration, the next thing is to get some measure of this common duration, whereby to judge of its different lengths.

Locke.

5. Long duration or protraction.

May Heav'n, great monarch, still augment your bliss

With length of days, and every day like this.

Dryden.

Such toil requir'd the Roman name,
Such length of labour for so vast a frame.

Dryden, Æn.

In length of time it will cover the whole plain,
and make one mountain with that on which it now stands.

Addison.

6. Reach or expansion of any thing.

I do not recommend to all a pursuit of sciences, to those extensive lengths to which the moderns
have advanced.

Watts, Impr. of the Mind.

7. Full extent; uncontracted state.

If Lætitia, who sent me this account, will acquaint me with the worthy gentleman's name; I will insert it at length in one of my papers.

Addison, Spect.

8. Distance.

He had marched to the length of Exeter, which he had some thought of besieging.

Clarendon.

9. End; latter part of any assignable time.

Churches purged of things burdensome, all was brought at the length into that wherein now we stand.

Hooker.

A crooked stick is not straitened unless it be bent as far on the clear contrary side, that so it may settle itself at the length in a middle state of evenness between them both.

Hooker.

10. AT LENGTH. [An adverbial mode of speech. It was formerly written at the length.] At last; in conclusion.

At length, at length, I have thee in my arms,
Though our malevolent stars have struggled hard,
And held us long asunder.

Dryden, K. Arthur.

TO LENGTH.* v. a. [lengian, Saxon.] To extend; to make longer. Obsolete.

Was never man such favour could off at all ladies
fynde,

To cause them lengthe or shorte the day which they
to hym assynde.

Huloet in V. Ladies of Destinie.

[He] knows full well life doth but length his pain.
Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

TO LENGTHEN. v. a. [from length. Sax.
lengian.]

1. To draw out; to make longer; to elongate.

Relaxing the fibres, is making them flexible, or easy to be lengthened without rupture.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

Falling dews, with spangles deck'd the glade,
And the low sun had lengthen'd every shade.

Pope.

2. To protract; to continue.

Frame your mind to mirth and merriment,
Which bars a thousand harms, and lengthens life.

Shakespeare.

It is in our power to secure to ourselves an interest in the divine mercies that are yet to come,
and to lengthen the course of our present prosperity.

Atterbury, Serm.

3. To protract pronunciation.

The learned languages were less constrained in the quantity of every syllable, beside helps of grammatical figures for the lengthening or abbreviation of them.

Dryden.

4. TO LENGTHEN out. [The particle out is only emphatical.] To protract; to extend.

What if I please to lengthen out his date
A day, and take a pride to cozen fate? Dryden.
I'd hoard up every moment of my life,
To lengthen out the payment of my tears. Dryden.
It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words. Addison.

TO LENGTHEN. v. n. To grow longer; to increase in length.

One may as well make a yard, whose parts lengthen and shrink, as a measure of trade in materials, that have not always a settled value. Locke.
Still 'tis farther from its end;
Still finds its error lengthen with its way. Prior.

LENGTHENING.* n. s. [from lengthen.] Continuation; protraction.

Break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by shewing mercy to the poor; if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquillity. Dan. iv. 27.

LENGTHFUL.* adj. [length and full.] Of great measure in length.

The driver whirls his lengthful thong,
The horses fly, the chariot smokes along.
Pope, Iliad.

LENGTHWISE. adv. [length and wise.] According to the length, in a longitudinal direction.

LENIENT. adj. [leniens, Latin.]

1. Assuasive; softening; mitigating.

In this one passion man can lengthen enjoy;
Time, that on all things lays his lenient hand,
Yet takes not this; it sticks to our last sand. Pope.
2. With of.

Consolatories write
With studied argument, and much persuasion sought,
Lenient of grief and anxious thought. Milton, S. A.

3. Laxative; emollient.

Oils relax the fibres, are lenient, balsamick, and abate acrimony in the blood.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

LENIENT. n. s. An emollient, or assuasive application.

I dressed it with lenients. Wiseman, Surgery.

TO LENIFY. v. n. [lenifier, old French; lenio, Latin.] To assuage; to mitigate.
Used for squinancies and inflammations in the throat, it seemeth to have a mollifying and lenifying virtue.
Bacon.

All soft'ning simples, known of sov'reign use,
He presses out, and pours their noble juice;
These first infus'd, to lenify the pain,
He tugs with pincers, but he tugs in vain. Dryden.

LENIMENT.* n. s. [lenimentum, Latin.] An assuaging.

LENITIVE. adj. [lenitif, Fr.; lenio, Latin.] Assuasive; emollient.

Some plants have a milk in them; the cause may be an inception of putrefaction: for those milks have all an acrimony, though one would think they should be lenitive. Bacon.

There is aliment lenitive expelling the feces without stimulating the bowels; such are animal oils. Arbuthnot.

LENITIVE.† n. s.

1. Any thing medicinally applied to ease pain.

An apothecary's shop, wherein are remedies — alternatives, corroboratives, lenitives.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 279.

South, Serm.

LENITY. n. s. [lenitas, Latin.] Mildness; mercy; tenderness; softness of temper.

Henry gives consent,
Of meer compassion, and of lenity,
To ease your country. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Lenity must gain
The mighty men, and please the discontent.
Daniel.

Albeit so ample a pardon was proclaimed touching treason, yet could not the boldness be beaten down either with severity, or with lenity be abated.
Hayward.

These jealousies
Have but one root, the old imprison'd king,
Whose lenity first pleas'd the gaping crowd:
But when long try'd, and found supinely good,
Like Æsop's log, they leapt upon his back. Dryd.

LENNOCK.* adj. Slender; pliable. Lancasire Gloss.

LENS. n. s. From resemblance to the seed of a lentil.

A glass spherically convex on both sides, is usually a lens; such as is a burning-glass, or spectacle glass, or an object glass of a telescope. Newt. Opticks.
According to the difference of the lenses, I used various distances. Newton, Opticks.

LENT. part. pass. from lend.
By Jove, the stranger and the poor are sent,
And what to those we give, to Jove is lent.
Pope, Ody.

LENT.* n. s. [from lend.] A supply, to be repaid or returned.

Upon the lent of Mr. Pocock's copy, he declared, that had it not been for his fear of oppressing his amanuensis, he would, upon sight thereof, have begun his work again.
Twells, Life of Dr. E. Pocock.

LENT.† n. s. [lenten, the spring, Sax.; from the Goth. hlana, to grow warm, as the air in the spring does. Serenius.]
The quadragesimal fast; a time of abstinence; the time from Ashwednesday to Easter.

Lent is from springing, because it falleth in the spring; for which our progenitors, the Germans, use lent. Camden.

LENT.* adj. [lentus, Latin.] Slow; mild.
Not in use.

We must now increase
Our fire to 'ignis ardens,' we are past
'Fimus equinus, balnei cineris,'
And all those lenter heats, B. Jonson, Alchemist.

LENTEN. adj. [from lent.] Such as is used in lent; sparing.

My lord, if you delight not in man, what lenten entertainment the players shall receive from you.
Shakespeare, Hamlet.

She quench'd her fury at the flood,
And with a lenten salad cool'd her blood.
Their commons, though but coarse, were nothing scant. Dryden, Hind and Panther.

mastich or gum of which is of use for the teeth or gums.

Mortimer, Husbandry.
The weepings of the lenticus and cypress.
Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 28.

LENTITUDE. n. s. [from lentus, Latin.]
Sluggishness; slowness. Diet.

LENTNER. n. s. A kind of hawk.
I should enlarge my discourse to the observation of the haggard, and the two sorts of lentners.
Walton, Angler.

LENTOR. n. s. [lensor, Latin; lenteur,
French.]

1. Tenacity; viscosity.
Some bodies have a kind of lensor, and more deceptible nature than others. Bacon.

2. Slowness; delay; sluggish coldness.
The lensor of eruptions, not inflammatory, points to an acid cause. Arbuthnot on Diet.

3. [In physick.] That sizzly, viscid, co-agulated part of the blood, which, in malignant fevers, obstructs the capillary vessels. Quincy.

LENTOUS. adj. [lentus, Latin.] Viscous;
tenacious; capable to be drawn out.

In this spawn of a lentous and transparent body, are to be discerned many specks which become black, a substance more compacted and terrestrious than the other; for it riseth not in distillation.
Brown.

LENVOY.* See the fourth sense of EN-VOY.

LEO.* n. s. [Latin, the lion.] The fifth sign of the zodiac.
By Leo, and the Virgin, and the Scales.
Milton, P. L.

LEOD.† n. s. Leod signifies the people;
or, rather, a nation, country, &c. Thus leodgar is one of great interest with the people or nation. Gibson's Camden.

Thus leid, in old Cornish, a tribe.
Chaucer uses leos, from the Greek laos,
for people.

Leos people in English is to say.
Second Nonnes Tales.

LEOF. n. s. Leof denotes love; so leof-win is a winner of love; leofstan, best beloved: like these Agapetus, Erasmus, Philo, Amandus, &c. Gibson's Camden.

LEONINE.† adj. [leoninus, Latin.]
1. Belonging to a lion; having the nature of a lion.

So was he ful of leonin corage.
Chaucer, Monk's Tale.
That which in their physiognomy is leonine;
for, we read, some men had lionly looks.
Bp. Gaulten, Life of Bp. Brownrigg, p. 236.

2. Leonine verses are those of which the end rhimes to the middle, so named from Leo the inventor: as,

Gloria factorum temere conceditur horum. Dr. Johnson.

Leo was not the inventor of Leonine verses, but Leontius. Menagiana, tom. ii. p. 214.

If he delighteth in odd-contrived fancies, he may please himself with antistrophes, rebusses, leonine verses, &c. to be found in Sieur des Accords.

Leonine verses are properly the Roman hexameters or pentameters rhymed.

Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 2.

LEOPARD. n. s. [leo and pardus, Latin.]

A spotted beast of prey.

Sheep run not half so timorous from the wolf, Or horse or oxen from the leopard, As you fly from your oft-subdued slaves.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Before the king tame leopards led the way, And troops of lions innocently play.

A leopard is every way, in shape and actions, like a cat: his head, teeth, tongue, feet, claws, tail, all like a cat's: he boxes with his fore-feet, as a cat doth her kittens; leaps at the prey, as a cat at a mouse; and will also spit much after the same manner: so that they seem to differ, just as a kite doth from an eagle.

Grev, Museum.

LEOPARDS-BANE.* n. s. The name of an herb.

LEPER. n. s. [lepra, leprosus, Latin.]

One infected with a leprosy.

I am no loathsome leper; look on me.

Shakespeare.

The leper in whom the plague is, his clothes shall be rent.

Lev. xiii. 45.

LEPEROUS. adj. [Formed from leprous, to make out a verse.] Causing leprosy: infected with leprosy; leprous.

Upon my secure hour thy uncle stole, With juice of cursed hebenon in a vial, And in the porches of mine ears did pour The leperous distilment.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

LEPID.* adj. [lepidus, Latin.] Pleasant; merry; lively; quick.

Cockeram.

Some elegant figures and tropes of rhetoric do lie very near upon the confines of jocularity, and are not easily discerned from those sallies of wit, wherein the lepid way doth consist.

Barrow, i. 14.

LEPORINE. adj. [leporinus, Lat.] Belonging to a hare; having the nature of a hare.

LEPRO'SITY. n. s. [from leprous.] Squamous disease.

If the crudities, impurities, and leproisities of metals were cured, they would become gold.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

LEPROSY.† n. s. [lepra, Latin; lepre, Fr. Formerly our word was leproy; as in Huloet's old dictionary.] A loathsome distemper, which covers the body with a kind of white scales.

Itches, blains,

Sow all the Athenian bosoms, and their crop Be general leprosy.

Shakespeare, Timon.

It is a plague of leprosy.

Lev. xiii. 3.

Between the malice of my enemies and other men's mistakes, I put as great a difference as between the itch of novelty and the leprosy of disloyalty.

King Charles.

Authors, upon the first entrance of the pox, looked upon it so highly infectious, that they ran away from it as much as the Jews did from the leprosy.

Wisenan, Surgery.

LEPROUS.† adj. [lepra, Latin; lepreux, French.] Infected with a leprosy.

He put his hand into his bosom; and when he took it out, behold, his hand was leprous as snow.

Exod. ix. 6.

The silly amorous sucks his death, By drawing in a leprous harlot's breath. Donne. LEPROUSLY.* adv. [from leprous.] In an infectious degree.

Do but imagine

Now the disease has left you, how leprously That office would have cling'd unto your forehead.

LEPROUSNESS.* n. s. [from leprous.] State of being leprous.

Sherwood.

LERE.† n. s. [læpe, Sax; leere, Dutch.]

1. A lesson; lore; doctrine. Obsolete.

This sense is still retained in Sotland.

The kid, pitying his heaviness, Asked the cause of his great distress; And also who, and whence, that he were. Tho' he, that had well ycon'd his lere, Thus medled his talk with many a teare.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

2. Skill; scholarship. In this sense lere, or lair, is used in the north of England. He was invulnerable made by magick lere.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. iv. 4.

To LERE.* v. a. [læpan, Saxon, to teach; leren, Germ. to teach and to learn; laerd, Icel. learned.]

1. To learn. So used in the north of England. "Lewed or lered:" ignorant or learned. Piers Pl. Crede.

As children lered their antiphonere.

Chaucer, Priores Tale.

He of Tityrus his songs did lere.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

2. To teach.

I then did lear

A lore repugnant to thy parents' faith.

Fairfax, Tasso.

LERE.* adj. Empty. See LEAR.

LEERY. [from lere.] A rating; a lecture. Rustick word.

LESS.† A negative or privative termination. [læ, Saxon; loos, Dutch.] Joined to a substantive, it implies the absence or privation of the thing expressed by that substantive; as, a wit-less man, a man without wit; childless, without children; fatherless, deprived of a father; pennyless, wanting money.

Dr. Johnson.

The imperative ler of the Sax. verb leran, to dismiss, has given to our language such adjectives as hopeless, restless, deathless, motionless, &c. i. e. dismiss hope, rest, death, motion, &c. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. i. 173.

LESS.* conj. [ler, Sax. imper. of leran, to dismiss. Mr. H. Tooke.] Unless.

To tell you true, 'tis too good for you, Less you had grace to follow it.

B. Jonson, Barthol. Fair.

You should not ask, less you knew how to give.

Beaumont, Fl. Laws of Candy.

And the mute silence hist along,

Less Philomel will doign a song,

In her sweetest, saddest plight,

Smoothing the rugged brow of night.

Milton, Il Pens.

LESS. adj. [læ, Saxon.] The comparative of little; opposed to greater or to so great; not so much; not equal.

Mary, the Mother of James the less.

St. Mar. xv. 40.

He that thinks he has a positive idea of infinite space will find, that he can no more have a positive idea of the greatest than he has of the least space; for in this latter we are capable only of a comparative idea of smallness, which will always be less than any one whereof we have the positive idea.

Locke.

All the ideas that are considered as having parts, and are capable of increase by the addition of any equal or less parts, afford us, by their repetition, the idea of infinity.

Locke.

'Tis less to conquer, than to make war cease.

And, without fighting, awe the world to peace.

Ld. Halifax.

LESS. n. s. Not so much; opposed to more, or to as much.

They gathered some more, some less.

Exod. xvi. 17.

Thy servant knew nothing of this, less or more.

1 Sam.

Yet could he not his closing eyes withdraw, Though less and less of Emily he saw.

Dryden.

LESS. adv. In a smaller degree; in a lower degree.

This opinion presents a less merry, but not less dangerous, temptation to those in adversity.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

The less space there is betwixt us and the object, and the more pure the air is, by so much the more the species are preserved and distinguished; and, on the contrary, the more space of air there is, and the less it is pure, so much the more the object is confused and embroiled.

Dryd.

Their learning lay chiefly in flourish; they were not much wiser than the less pretending multitude.

Collier on Prid.

The less they themselves want from others, they will be less careful to supply the necessities of the indigent.

Smalridge.

Happy, and happy still, she might have prov'd, Were she less beautiful, or less below'd.

Pope, Statius.

To LESS.* v. a. To make less. Obsolete.

What he will make lesse, he lesseth.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 7.

LESSE'E. n. s. The person to whom a lease is given.

To LESSEN.† v. a. [from less.]

1. To make less; to diminish in bulk.

Up to yon hill;

Your legs are young: I'll tread these flats. Consider

When you above perceive me like a crow,

That it is place that lessens, and sets off.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

2. To diminish the degree of any state or quality; to make less intense.

Kings may give

To beggars, and not lessen their own greatness.

Denham.

Though charity alone will not make one happy in the other world, yet it shall lessen his punishment.

Calanmy, Serm.

Collect into one sum as great a number as you please, this multitude, how great however, lessens not one jot the power of adding to it, or brings him any nearer the end of the inexhaustible stock of number.

Locke.

This thirst after fame betrays him into such indecencies as are a lessening to his reputation, and is looked upon as a weakness in the greatest characters.

Addison, Spect.

Nor are the pleasures which the brutal part of the creation enjoy subject to be lessened by the uneasiness which arises from fancy.

Atterbury, Serm.

3. To degrade; to deprive of power or dignity.

Who seeks

To lessen thee, against his purpose serves.

To manifest the more thy might. Milton, P. L.

St. Paul chose to magnify his office, when all men conspired to lessen it.

Atterbury, Serm.

To LE'SSEN. v. n. To grow less; to shrink; to be diminished.

All government may be esteemed to grow strong or weak, as the general opinion in those that govern is seen to lessen or increase. Temple.

The objection lessens much, and comes to no more than this, there was one witness of no good reputation. Atterbury.

LE'SSER.† adj. A barbarous corruption of less, formed by the vulgar from the habit of terminating comparatives in er; afterwards adopted by poets, and then by writers of prose, till it has all the authority which a mode originally erroneous can derive from custom.

Dr. Johnson.

Little has two comparatives, less and lesser. Use leaves us at liberty to employ either. The sound will direct us when to prefer the one to the other. As Addison's "Attend to what a lesser Muse indites," is clearly better than a less Muse. But, in general, it may be a good rule, to join less with a singular noun, and lesser with a plural; as, when we say, a less difficulty, and lesser difficulties. The reason is, that few singular nouns terminate in s, and most plural nouns do. Worse, the second comparative of bad, has not the same authority to plead as lesser, and is not, I think, of equal use. Our grammarians do not enough attend to the influence which the ear has in modelling a language. Bp. Hurd.

What great despite doth fortune to thee bear,
Thus lowly to abase thy beauty bright,
That it should not deface all other lesser light?
Spenser, F. Q.

It is the lesser blot, modesty finds,
Women to change their shapes than men their minds.
Shakespeare.

The mountains, and higher parts of the earth, grow lesser and lesser from age to age: sometimes the roots of them are weakened by subterraneous fires, and sometimes tumbled by earthquakes into caverns that are under them. Burnet.

Cain, after the murder of his brother, cries out,
Every man that findeth me shall slay me. By the same reason may a man, in the state of nature, punish the lesser breaches of that law. Locke.

The larger here, and there the lesser lambs.
The new-fall'n young herd bleating for their dams.
Pope.

LE'SSER. adv. [formed by corruption from less.]

Some say he's mad; others, that lesser hate him,
Do call it valiant fury. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

LE'SSES. n. s. pl. [laissées, French.] The dung of beasts left on the ground.

LE'SSON.† n. s. [leçon, Fr. lectio, Lat. Dr. Johnson.—Gothick, laisseins; from laisgan, to teach.]

1. Any thing read or repeated to a teacher, in order to improvement.

I but repeat that lesson
Which I have learn'd from thee. Denham, Sophy.

2. Precept; notion inculcated.

This day's ensample hath this lesson dear
Deep written in my heart with iron pen,
That bliss may not abide in state of mortal men.
Spenser, F. Q.

Be not jealous over the wife of thy bosom, and teach her not an evil lesson against thyself.

Ecclus. ix. 1.

3. Portion of Scripture read in divine service.

Notwithstanding so eminent properties, whereof lessons are happily destitute; yet lessons being free from some inconveniences whereunto sermons are most subject, they may, in this respect, no less take, than in other they must give the hand which betokeneth pre-eminence. Hooker.

4. Tune pricked for an instrument.

Those good laws were like good lessons set for a flute out of tune; of which lessons little use can be made, till the flute be made fit to be played on.
Davies on Ireland.

5. A rating lecture.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late, that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight. Sidney.

To LE'SSON.† v. a. [Goth. laisgan, to teach.] To teach; to instruct.

Even in kind love, I do conjure thee,
To lesson me. Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.
Well hast thou lesson'd us, this shall we do.
Shakespeare.

How irreconciliation with our brethren voids all our addresses to God, we need be lessoned no farther than from our Saviour's own mouth.
Bp. Prideaux, Euch. p. 71.

Children should be seasoned betimes, and lessoned into a contempt and detestation of this vice.
L'Estrange, Fab.

LE'SSOR. n. s. One who lets any thing to farm, or otherwise, by lease.

Lords of the world have but for life their lease,
And that too, if the lessor please must cease.
Denham.

If he demises the glebe to a layman, the tenant must pay the small tithes to the vicar, and the great tithes to the lessor.
Ayliffe, Parergon.

LEST.† conj. [from the adjective least.
Dr. Johnson.—Lest (i. e. lesed) is nothing else but the participle past of the Sax. lejan, to dismiss; and with the article that, (either expressed or understood,) means no more than hoc dimisso, or quo dimisso. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. i. 224.]

1. This particle may be sometimes resolved into that not, meaning prevention or care lest a thing should happen.

Forty stripes he may give him, and not exceed, lest if he should exceed, then thy brother should seem vile. Deut. xxv.

Lest they faint
At the sad sentence rigorously urg'd,
All terror hide. Milton, P. L.

My labour will sustain me, and lest cold
Or heat should injure us, his timely care
Hath unbesought provided. Milton, P. L.

King Luitprand brought hither the corps, lest it might be abused by the barbarous nations.

Addison on Italy.

2. It sometimes means only that, with a kind of emphasis.

One doubt
Pursues me still, lest all I cannot die,
Lest that pure breath of life, the spirit of man,
Which God inspir'd, cannot together perish
With this corporeal clod. Milton, P. L.

LE'STERCOCK. n. s. They have a device of two sticks filled with corks, and crossed flatlong, out of whose midst there riseth a thread, and at the same hangeth a sail; to this engine, termed a lestercock, they tie one end of their boulder, so as the wind coming from the shore filleth the sail, and the sail carrieth the boulder into the sea, which, after the respite of some hours, is drawn in again by a cord fastened at the nearer end. Carew.

To LET.† v. a. [lætan, Sax. letan, Goth. to permit.]

1. To allow; to suffer; to permit.

Where there is a certainty and an uncertainty, let the uncertainty go, and hold to that which is certain. Bp. Sanderson.

Remember me; speak, Raymond, will you let him?
Shall he remember Leonora?
Dryden, Span. Friar.

We must not let go manifest truths, because we cannot answer all questions about them. Collier.

One who fixes his thoughts intently on one thing, so as to take but little notice of the succession of ideas in his mind, lets slip out of his account a good part of that duration. Locke.

A solution of mercury in aqua fortis being poured upon iron, copper, tin, or lead, dissolves the metal, and lets go the mercury.
Newton, Opticks.

2. A sign of the optative mood used before the first and imperative before the third person. Before the first person singular it signifies resolution, fixed purpose, or ardent wish.

Let me die with the Philistines. Judges.
Here let me sit,
And hold high converse with the mighty dead. Thomson.

3. Before the first person plural, let implies exhortation.

Rise; let us go. St. Mark.
Let us seek out some desolate shade. Shakspeare.

4. Before the third person, singular or plural, let implies permission.

Let Euclid rest, and Archimedes pause. Milton, Sonnet.

5. Or precept.

Let the soldiers seize him for one of the assassins. Dryden.

6. Sometimes it implies concession.

O'er golden sands let rich Pactolus flow,
Or trees weep amber on the banks of Po,
While by our oaks the precious loads are borne,
And realms commanded which those trees adorn.
Pope.

7. Before a thing in the passive voice, let implies command.

Let not the objects which ought to be contiguous be separated, and let those which ought to be separated be apparently so to us; but let this be done by a small and pleasing difference.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

8. Let has an infinitive mood after it without the particle to, as in the former examples.

But one submissive word which you let fall,
Will make him in good humour with us all. Dryden.
The seventh year thou shalt let it rest, and lie still. Ezodus.

9. To leave: in this sense it is commonly followed by alone; but formerly was also unaccompanied.

Yet nether spinnes nor cards, ne cares nor frets,
But to her mother Nature all her care she lets. Spenser, F. Q. ii. vi. 17.

They did me too much injury,
That ever said I hearken'd for your death.
If it were so, I might have let alone
The insulting hand of Douglas over you.

Shakespeare.
The publick outrages of a destroying tyranny are but childish appetites, let alone till they are grown ungovernable.

L'Estrange, Fab.
Let me alone to accuse him afterwards.

Dryden, Sp. Friar.

It had been done e'er this, had I been consul: We had had no stop, no let. B. Jonson, Catiline.

Just judge, two lets remove; that free from dread, I may before thy high tribunal plead. Sandys, Paraphr. of Job.

To these internal dispositions to sin add the external opportunities and occasions concurring with them, and removing all lets and rubs out of the way, and making the path of destruction plain before the sinner's face; so that he may run his course freely. South.

LET, the termination of diminutive words, from lȳce, Saxon, little, small; as, rivulet, a small stream; hamlet, a little village.

LETCH.* n. s.

1. A vessel to put ashes in, to run water through, for the purpose of making washing lye. Ray, N. and E. Country Words, and Moore's Suffolk Words.

2. A long narrow swamp, in which water moves slowly among rushes and grass. Brockett, North C. Words.

LETHAL.* adj. [lethalis, Lat.] Deadly; mortal.

Vengeance' wings bring on thy lethal day. Cupid's Whirligig, (1616).

Could not your heavenly citrons, your tuneful voice, Have sooth'd't the rage of rueful fate, and stay'd The lethal blow?—Ah me, if heavenly charms, If softest melody could sooth the rage Of rueful fate, our Phæbe had not died. W. Richardson.

LETHALITY.* n. s. [from lethal, Latin, lethaliter.] Mortality.

Bayley.

The certain punishment being preferable to the doubtful lethality of the fetish.

Atkins, Voyage, p. 104.

LETHARGICAL.* adj. [lethargicus, Lat.] Sleepy by disease; lethargic.

LETHARGICALLY.* adv. [from lethargical.] In a morbid sleepiness.

Mr. Muzzy was not only unwieldy, but so lethargically stupid, that he fell asleep even in musical assemblies.

Ld. Corke.

LETHARGICALNESS.* n. s. [from lethargical.] Morbid sleepiness.

That thou mayest be the more effectually roused up out of this tepidity and lethargicalness.

More on the Seven Churches, ch. 9.

LETHARGICK. adj. [lethargique, Fr.; from lethargy.] Sleepy by disease, beyond the natural power of sleep.

Vengeance is as if minutely proclaimed in thunder from heaven, to give men no rest in their sins, till they awake from the lethargick sleep, and arise from so dead, so mortiferous a state.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

Let me but try if I can wake his pity
From his lethargick sleep.

Denham, Sophy.

A legarthy demands the same cure and diet as an apoplexy from a phlegmatick case, such being the constitution of the lethargick.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

LETHARGICKNESS. n. s. [from lethargick.] Morbid sleepiness; drowsiness to a disease.

A grain of glory mixt with humbleness,
Cures both a fever, and lethargickness.

Herbert.

LETHARGY. n. s. [λεθάργυα; lethargie, French.] A morbid drowsiness; a sleep from which one cannot be kept awake.

The lethargy must have his quiet course;
If not, he foams at mouth, and by and by
Breaks out to savage madness.

Shakspeare.

Though his eye is open as the morning's,
Towards lusts and pleasures; yet so fast a lethargy
Has seiz'd his powers towards public cares and dangers,

He sleeps like death.
Europe lay then under a deep lethargy; and was no otherwise to be rescued from it, but by one that would cry mightily.

Atterbury.

A lethargy is a lighter sort of apoplexy, and demands the same cure and diet.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

To LETHARGY.† v. a. [from the noun.] To lay asleep; to entrance.

His motion weakens, or his discernings
Are lethargied.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

LETHE.† n. s. [λήθη, Greek, forgotten; lêthé, French.]

1. Oblivion; a draught of oblivion.

The conquering wine hath steeped our sense
In soft and delicate lethe. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.
Lethe, the river of oblivion, rolls
Her watery labyrinth, which whoso drinks
Forgets both joy and grief.

Milton, P. L.

2. Death. [lethum, Lat.] In this sense, it was probably spoken as a word of only one syllable; in the former it consists of two.] Obsolete.

Here wast thou bay'd, brave hart,
Here didst thou fall; and here thy hunters stand,
Sign'd in thy spoil, and crimson'd in thy lethe.

Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

LETHEAN.* adj. [from lethe.] Oblivious; causing oblivion.

I did not think Suffolk waters had such a lethean quality in them, as to cause such an "amnesia" in him of his friends here upon the Thames.

Howell, Lett. iii. 6.

Ovid makes mention of a certain oblivious or lethean love, to whom the ancient Romans dedicated a temple.

Ferrand, Love-Mel. p. 315.

They ferry over this lethean sound
Both to and fro, their sorrow to augment,
And wish and struggle, as they pass, to reach
The tempting stream, with one small drop to lose
In sweet forgetfulness all pain and woe.

Milton, P. L.

LE'THEED.* adj. [from lethe.] Oblivious; lethean.

Epicurean cooks,
Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite;
That sleep and feeding may prorogue his honour,
Even till a letheed dulness.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

LETHIFEROUS.* adj. [lethifer, Latin.] Deadly; bringing death.

Bailey.

Those that are really lethiferous, are but escrescencies of sin.

Dr. Robinson's Endoxa, (1658,) p. 151.

Their very words conveyed with a lethiferous air, were feared as bullets.

Mem. of Sir Edm. Bury Godfrey, p. 40.

LE'TTER.† n. s. [from let.]

1. One who lets or permits.

2. One who hinders. Huloet, and Sherwood.

3. One who gives vent to any thing; as, a blood-letter.

4. A LETTER go. A spendthrift; a squanderer.

A provider slow

For his own good, a careless letter-go
Of money. B. Jonson, Horace's Art of Poetry.

LE'TTER.† n. s. [lettre, French; litera, Latin.]

1. One of the elements of syllables; a character in the alphabet.

A superscription was written over him in letters of Greek, Latin, and Hebrew. Luke, xxiii. 38.

Thou whoreson Zed! thou unnecessary letter!

Shakspeare.

2. A written message; an epistle.

They use to write it on the top of letters.

Shakspeare.

I have a letter from her
Of such contents as you will wonder at. Shakspeare.
When a Spaniard would write a letter by him,
The Indian would marvel how it should be possible, that he, to whom he came, should be able to know
all things. Abbot.

The asses will do very well for trumpeters, and the hares will make excellent letter carriers.

L'Estrange, Fab.

The style of letters ought to be free, easy, and natural; as near approaching to familiar conversation as possible: the two best qualities in conversation are, good humour and good breeding; those letters are therefore certainly the best that shew the most of these two qualities.

Walsh.

Mrs. P. B. has writ to me, and is one of the best letter writers I know; very good sense, civility, and friendship, without any stiffness or constraint.

Swift.

3. The verbal expression; the literal meaning.

Touching translations of Holy Scripture, we may not disallow of their painful travels herein, who strictly have tied themselves to the very original letter.

Hooker.

In obedience to human laws, we must observe the letter of the law, without doing violence to the reason of the law, and the intention of the law-giver.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

Those words of his must be understood not according to the bare rigour of the letter, but according to the allowances of expression.

South, Serm.

What! since the pretor did my fetters loose,
And left me freely at my own dispose,

May I not live without controul and awe,
Excepting still the letter of the law? Dryden, Pers.

4. Letters without the singular: learning.
The Jews marvelled, saying, How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?

St. John, vii. 15.

5. Letters without the singular, used with the adjective patent: a written instrument, containing a royal grant. [literæ patentes, Lat.]

The king's grants are contained in letters-patent, so called, because they are not sealed up, but exposed to open view, with the great seal pendant at the bottom.

Blackstone.

Call in his letters-patent, that he hath

By his attorneys-general to sue. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

6. Anything to be read.

Good laws are at best but a dead letter.

Addison, Freeholder

7. Type with which books are printed.

The iron lades that letter founders use to the casting of printing letters, are kept constantly in melting metal.

Moxon.

To LE'TTER. v. a. [from letter.] To stamp with letters.

I observed one weight lettered on both sides; and I found on one side, written in the dialect of men, and underneath it, calamities; on the other side was written, in the language of the gods, and underneath, blessings.

Addison.

LE'TTERED.† adj. [from letter.] This is a very old word in our language; though Dr. Johnson has given no other example of it than that from Jeremy Collier. It is used by Chaucer; and is found in Huloet's dictionary with the definition of learned, "literatus," Lat.]

1. Literate; educated to learning; learned.

Your prelates ben not so wise,

Ne halfe so letrid as am I.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 7691.

A martial man, not sweetened by a lettered education, is apt to have a tincture of sourness.

Collier on Pride.

2. Belonging to learning; suiting letters.

When stung with idle anxieties, or teased with fruitless impertinence, or yawning over insipid diversions, then we perceive the blessing of a lettered recess.

Young, Conject. on Orig. Composition.

LE'TTERFOUNDER.* n. s. [letter and founder.] One who casts types for printing. See the seventh sense of LETTER.

LE'TTERLESS.* adj. [letter and less.] Ignorant; illiterate. Not in use.

A meer daring letterless commander can, in a rational way, promise himself no more success in his enterprise, than a mastiff can in his contest with a lion.

Waterhouse, Apol. for Learning, (1653,) p. 125.

LE'TTERPRESS.* n. s. [letter and press.] Print; what is given in types from a written copy.

If his merits are to be determined by judges who estimate the value of a book from its bulk, or its frontispiece, every rival must acquire an easy superiority, who with persuasive eloquence promises four extraordinary pages of letterpress, or three beautiful prints curiously coloured from nature.

Goldsmith, Ess. i.

LE'TTERS Patent.* See the fifth sense of LETTER.

LE'TTUCE. n. s. [lactuca, Lat.]

The species are, common or garden lettuce; cabbage lettuce; Silesia lettuce; white and black cos; white cos; red capuchin lettuce. Miller.

Fat colworts, and comforting purslane,
Cold lettuce, and refreshing rosemarie.

Spenser, Muirpot.
Lettuce is thought to be poisonous, when it is so old as to have milk. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
The medicaments proper to diminish milk, are lettuce, purslane, endive. Wiseman, Surgery.

LEVANT† adj. [levant, Fr.] Eastern.

Thwart of those, as fierce
Forth rush the Levant, and the Ponent winds, Eurus and Zephyr. Milton, P. L.

The levant winds, which blow directly out.
Sir H. Shore, Ld. Halifax's Miscell. p. 34.

LEVANT† n. s.

1. The east, particularly those coasts of the Mediterranean east of Italy.

2. A wind so called; now termed a levanter.

They are called levants both from their course, as blowing from the east where the sun rises, and also from their freshening and rising higher as the sun rises: for they are generally at their height when the sun comes to the meridian, and duller as the sun declines.

Sir H. Shore, Ld. Halifax's Miscell. p. 34.

The fiercer levants dull space, after you are once out of the Streight. Ibid. p. 35.

LEVANTER* n. s. [from levant.]

1. A strong easterly wind, so called by the sailors in the Mediterranean.

2. A colloquial expression, applied to one who bets at a horse-race, and runs away without paying the wagers he has lost.

LEVANTINE* adj. [from levant; Fr. levantine.] Belonging to the Levant, that part of the east so called.

We read of Antioch,—and the churches of the Colossians and Laodicea—their perishing by an earthquake, of God's forsaking the levantine churches, of the sea's sudden breaking of its sandy girdle. Spencer on Prod. p. 355.

LEVATOR. n. s. [Latin.] A chirurgical instrument, whereby depressed parts of the skull are lifted up.

Some surgeons bring out the bone in the bore;
but it will be safer to raise it up with your levator, when it is but lightly retained in some part.

Wiseman, Surgery.

LEUCOPHLEGMACY. n. s. [from leuco-phlegmatick.] Paleness, with viscid juices and cold sweatings.

Spirits produce debility, flatulency, fevers, leu-cophlegmacy, and dropsies.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

LEUCOPHLEGMATICK. adj. [λευκός and φλέγμα.] Having such a constitution of body where the blood is of a pale colour, viscid, and cold, whereby it stuffs and bloats the habit, or raises white tumours in the feet, legs, or any other parts; and such are commonly asthmatic and dropsical.

Quincy.

Asthmatic persons have voracious appetites, and for want of a right sanguification are leucophlegmatick.

Arbuthnot.

LEVE* adj. [leof, Sax.] Agreeable;
pleasing; dear. Written also leef, lefe, and lif. See LEVER.

to believe.] The old form of our present word believe.

She leveth all that ever he saith.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

Another man leveth that he may ete alle thingis.
Wicliffe, Rom. xiv. 2.

LEVÉE† n. s. [French.]

1. The time of rising.

2. The concourse of those who crowd round a man of power in a morning.

Would'st thou be first minister of state;
To have thy levees crowded with resort,
Of a depending, gaping, servile court?

Dryden, Juw.

None of her sylvan subjects made their court,
Levees and couches pass'd without resort.

Dryden, Hind and Panther.

Such as are troubled with the disease of leveehunting, and are forced to seek their bread every morning at the chamber-doors of great men.

Addison, Spect. No. 547.

LEVÉL. adj. [læfel, Sax.]

1. Even; not having one part higher than another.

The doors

Discover ample spaces o'er the smooth
And level pavement. Milton, P. L.

The garden, seated on the level floor,
She left behind. Dryden, Boccace.

2. Even with any thing else; in the same line or plane with any thing.

Our navy is addressed, our pow'r collected,
And every thing lies level to our wish.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Now shaves with level wing the deep.

Milton, P. L.

There is a knowledge which is very proper to man, and lies level to human understanding, the knowledge of our Creator, and of the duty we owe to him. Tillotson.

3. Having no gradations of superiority.

Be level in preferences, and you will soon be as level in your learning. Bentley.

TO LEVÉL. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make even; to free from inequalities; as he levels the walks.

2. To reduce to the same height with something else.

Less bright the moon,

But opposite in level'd west was set.

Milton, P. L.

He will thy foes with silent shame confound,
And their proud structures level with the ground.

Sandys.

3. To lay flat.

We know by experience, that all downright rains do evermore disserve the violence of outrageous winds, and beat down and level the swelling and mountainous billows of the sea. Ralegh.

With unresisted might the monarch reigns,
He levels mountains, and he raises plains;
And not regarding difference of degree,
Abas'd your daughter, and exalted me. Dryd.

4. To bring to equality of condition.

Reason can never assent to the admission of those brutish appetites which would over-run the soul, and level its superiour with its inferior faculties. Decay of Chr. Piety.

5. To point in taking aim; to aim.

Each at the head

One to the gunners on St. Jago's tower;
Bid 'em for shame level their cannon lower.

Dryden.

Iron globes which on the victor host
Level'd with such impetuous fury smote.

Milton, P. L.

The construction I believe is not,
globes level'd on the host, but globes level'd smote on the host.

6. To direct to an end.

The whole body of puritans was drawn to be abettors of all villainy by a few men, whose designs from the first were levelled to destroy both religion and government. Swift.

7. To suit to proportion.

Behold the law

And rule of beings in your Maker's mind:
And thence, like limbecks, rich ideas draw,
To fit the level'd use of human kind. Dryden.

TO LEVÉL† v. n.

1. To aim at: to bring the gun or arrow to the same line with the mark.

The glory of God, and the good of his church, was the thing which the apostles aimed at,
and therefore ought to be the mark whereto we also level. Hooker.

2. To conjecture; to attempt to guess.

I pray thee overname them; and as thou namest them I will describe them; and, according to my description, level at my affection.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

3. To be in the same direction with a mark.

He to his engine flew,
Plac'd near at hand in open view,
And rais'd it till it level'd right,
Against the glow worm tail of kite. Hudibras.

4. To make attempts; to aim.

Ambitious York did level at thy crown.

Shakspeare.

5. To efface distinction or superiority; as, infamy is always trying to level.

6. To square with; to accord.

With such accommodation and besort,
As levels with her breeding. Shakspeare, Oth.

LEVÉL. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A plane; a surface without protuberances or inequalities.

After draining of the level in Northamptonshire, innumerable mice did upon a sudden arise.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Those bred in a mountainous country oversize those that dwell on low levels. Sandys, Travels.

2. Rate; standard; customary height.

Love of her made us raise up our thoughts above the ordinary level of the world, so as great clerks do not disdain our conference. Sidney.

The praises of military men inspired me with thoughts above my ordinary level. Dryden.

3. Suitable or proportionate height.

It might perhaps advance their minds so far Above the level of subjection, as T'assume to them the glory of that war. Daniel.

4. A state of equality.

The time is not far off when we shall be upon the level; I am resolved to anticipate the time, and be upon the level with them now: for he is so that neither seeks nor wants them.

Atterbury to Pope.

Providence, for the most part, sets us upon a level, and observes proportion in its dispensations towards us. Addison, Spect.

I suppose, by the style of old friends, and the like, it must be somebody there of his own level;
among whom his party have, indeed, more friends than I could wish. Swift.

5. An instrument whereby masons adjust their work.

The level is from two to ten feet long, that it may reach over a considerable length of the work:
if the plumb-line hang just upon the perpendicular, when the level is set flat down upon the work, the level is level; but if it hangs on either side the perpendicular, the floor or work must be raised on that side, till the plumb-line hang exactly on the perpendicular. Mozon, Mech. Exerc.

6. Rule; plan; scheme: borrowed from the mechanical level.

Be the fair level of thy actions laid,
As temperance wills, and prudence may persuade,
And try if life be worth the liver's care. Prior.

7. The line of direction in which any missive weapon is aimed.

I stood i'the level
Of a full charg'd confederacy, and gave thanks
To you that choked it. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

As if that name,
Shot from the deadly level of a gun,
Did murder her. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.
Thrice happy is that humble pair,
Beneath the level of all care,
Over whose heads those arrows fly,
Of sad distrust and jealousy. Waller.

8. The line in which the sight passes.
Fir'd at first sight with what the muse imparts,
In fearless youth we tempt the heights of arts;
While from the bounded level of our mind
Short views we take, nor see the lengths behind. Pope.

LEV'ELLER.† n. s. [from level.]

1. One who makes any thing even; one who measures or lays by a level.

Sherwood.

2. One who destroys superiority; one who endeavours to bring all to the same state of equality.

The presbyterian must not hold himself secure, while the independent sits at stern; nor the independent free from fear so long as the leveller, with the plausible promises of a pleasing party, suggests to the commons of England (as if it were the year of jubilee) the enjoyment of a lawless and indisputable liberty.

K. Charles, cited in the Princely Pelican, ch. 9.
You are an everlasting leveller; you won't allow encouragement to extraordinary merit.

Collier on Pride.
Is diversion grown a leveller, like death?
Young, Centaur, Lett. 2.

1. Evenness; equality of surface.
2. Equality with something else.

The river Tiber is expressed lying along, for so you must remember to draw rivers, to express their levelness with the earth. Peacham.

LEV'EN. n. s. [levain, Fr. Commonly, though less properly, written leaven; see LEAVEN.]

1. Ferment; that which being mixed in bread makes it rise and ferment.
2. Any thing capable of changing the nature of a greater mass.

The matter fermenteth upon the old leaven, and becometh more acid. Wiseman, Surgery.
The pestilential levains conveyed in goods. Arbuthnot.

LEV'ER. n. s. [levier, Fr.]

The second mechanical power, is a balance supported by a hypomochlion; only the centre is not in the middle, as in the common balance, but near one end; for which reason it is used to elevate or raise a great weight; whence come the name lever. Harris.

Have you any levers to lift me up again, being down?
Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
Some draw with cords, and some the monster drive

With rolls and levers. Denham.
In a lever, the motion can be continued only for so short a space, as may be answerable to that little distance betwixt the fulcrum and the weight; which is always by so much lesser, as the disproportion betwixt the weight and the power is greater, and the motion itself more easy.

Wilkins, Math. Magicl.

Some hoisting levers, some the wheels prepare.

Dryden.

LEV'ER.* adj. the comparative degree of leve, leaf, or lief. [leop, leopne, Saxon.] More agreeable; more pleasing.

Now these, and take which you is lever.

Gower, Conf. Am.

It were me lever than twenty pound worth lond.

Chaucer, Frank. Prol.

LEV'ER.* adv. Rather "To have lever, malo." Prompt. Parv. to prefer. As we now say, I lever rather.

Yet had I lever spenden all the good
Which that I have, and (elles were I wood),
Than that ye should fallen in swiche meschefe.

Chaucer, Chan. Yeom. Tale.

Die had she lever with enchanter's knife,
Than to be false in love. Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 6.

LEV'ERET. n. s. [lievret, Fr.] A young hare.

Their travels o'er that silver field does show,
Like track of leverets in morning snow. Waller.

LEV'ET. n. s. [from lever, French] A blast on the trumpet; probably that by which the soldiers are called in the morning.

He that led the cavalcade,
Wore a sowgelder's flagellet,
On which he blew as strong a levet,
As well-fee'd lawyer on his breviate. Hudibras.

LEV'EROCK. n. s. [lapecq, Saxon.] This word is retained in Scotland, and denotes the lark. See LAVEROCK.

The smaller birds have their particular seasons; as the leverock. Walton, Angler.

LEV'IALE. adj. [from levy.] That may be levied.

The sums which any agreed to pay, and were not brought in, were to be leviable by course of law. Bacon, Hen. VII.

LEVI'ATHAN. n. s. [לִיְאֹתִין] A water animal mentioned in the book of Job. By some imagined the crocodile; but in poetry generally taken for the whale.

We may, as bootless, spend our vain command
Upon the enraged soldiers in their spoil,
As send our precepts to the leviathan,
To come ashore. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Canst thou draw out leviathan with a hook? Job.
More to embroil the deep; leviathan,
And his unwieldy train, in dreadful sport
Tempest the loosen'd brine. Thomson, Winter.

To LE'VIGATE.† v. a. [lavigo, Latin.]

1. To polish; to smooth; to plane. Cock-eram. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.
This is the primary sense of the word.

New objects with a gentle and grateful touch warble upon the corporeal organs, or excite the spirits into a pleasant frisk of motion; but when use hath levigated the organs, and made the way so smooth and easy, that the spirits pass without any stop, those objects are no longer felt, or very faintly; so that the pleasure ceaseth.

Barrow, vol. iii. S. 9.

The case of the vessel having been curiously levigated, ("ex lignis levigatis et quadratis.")

Biblioth. Bibl. i. 395.

2. To rub or grind to an impalpable powder.

3. To mix till the liquor becomes smooth and uniform.

The chyle is white, as consisting of salt, oil, and water, much levigated or smooth.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

LEVIGATE.* part. adj. [from the verb.] Figuratively, made smooth; lightened.

His labours being levigated and made more tolerable. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 11. b.

LEVIGATION.† n. s. [from levigate.]

Levigation is the reducing of hard bodies, as coral, tully, and precious stones, into a subtle powder, by grinding upon marble with a muller; but unless the instruments are extremely hard, they will so wear as to double the weight of the medicine. Quincy.

Into water thy earth turn first of all,
Then of thy water make air by levigation,
And air make fire; then master I will thee call
Of all our secrets.

Old Poem in Ashmole's Theat. Chem. (1652), p. 133.

LEV'IN.* n. s. [from hlipian, Saxon; to glisten, to shine.] Lightning. Not now in use.

Wild thunder dint and fiery leven.

Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Prol.

The lightsome levin. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

As when the flashing levin haps to light
Upon two stubborn oaks.

Spenser, F. Q. v. vi. 40.

LEVITATION.* n. s. [levitas, levitatis, Lat.] Act or quality of rendering light, or buoyant.

The lungs also of birds, as compared with the lungs of quadrupeds, contain in them a provision distinguishingly calculated for this same purpose of levitation; namely, a communication [not found in other kinds of animals] between the air-vessels of the lungs and the cavities of the body: so that by the intromission of air from one to the other, (at the will, as it should seem, of the animal,) its body can be occasionally puffed out, and its tendency to descend in the air, or its specific gravity made less. Paley, Nat. Theol. ch. 12. § 6.

LEV'ITE. n. s. [levita, Latin, from Levi.]

1. One of the tribe of Levi; one born to the office of priesthood among the Jews.

In the Christian church, the office of deacons succeeded in the place of the Levites among the Jews, who were as ministers and servants to the priests. Ayliffe, Parergon.

2. A priest: used in contempt.

LEVITICAL.* adj. [from levite.]

1. Belonging to the Levites; making part of the religion of the Jews.

By the levitical law, both the man and the woman were stoned to death; so heinous a crime was adultery. Ayliffe.

2. Priestly.

Austin—sent to Rome Laurence and Peter, two of his associates, to acquaint the pope of his good success in England, and to be resolved of certain theological, or rather levitical, questions. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 4.

LEVITICALLY.* adv. [from levitical.] After the manner of the Levites.

These pure conceited men quarrelled at the name of the holy seventh day, called, as of old, Sunday, which they would have named Sabbath; and thereafter would have it observed levitically, so strict as not to gather sticks.

Franklyn, Annals of K. James I. p. 31.

What right of jurisdiction soever can be from this place levitically bequeathed, must descend upon the ministers of the Gospel equally.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 1.

LEVITY. n. s. [levitas, Latin.]

1. Lightness; not heaviness; the quality by which any body has less weight than another.

He gave the form of levity to that which ascended; to that which descended, the form of gravity. Raleigh.

This bubble, by reason of its comparative levity to the fluidity that encloses it, would ascend to the top. Bentley.

2. Inconstancy; changeableness.

They every day broached some new thing; which restless levity they did interpret to be their growing in spiritual perfection.

Hooker.

Where wigs with wigs, with sword-knots sword-knots strive,

Beaus banish beaus, and coaches coaches drive,
This erring mortals levity may call.

Pope.

3. Unsteadiness; laxity of mind.

I unbosom'd all my secrets to thee;

Not out of levity, but over-power'd

By thy request.

Milton, S. A.

4. Idle pleasure; vanity.

He never employed his omnipotence out of levity or ostentation, but as the necessities of men required.

Calamy.

5. Trifling gaiety; want of seriousness.

Our graver business frowns at this levity.

Shaks. Hopton abhorred the licence, and the levities, with which he saw too many corrupted.

Clarendon.

That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished, and a spirit of levity and libertinism, infidelity and profaneness, started up in the room of it.

Asterbury, Serm.

To LE'VY. v. a. [lever, French.]

1. To raise; to bring together; applied to men.

He resolved to finish the conquest of Ireland, and to that end levied a mighty army.

Davies on Ireland.

2. To raise: applied to war. This sense, though Milton's, seems improper.

They live in hatred, enmity, and strife,

Among themselves, and levy cruel wars.

Milton.

3. To raise: applied to money.

Levy a tribute unto the Lord of the men of war.

Numb.

Instead of a ship, he should levy upon his county such a sum of money.

Clarendon.

LE'VY. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of raising money or men.

They have already contributed all their superfluous hands, and every new levy they make must be at the expence of their farms and commerce.

Addison, State of the War.

2. War raised.

Treason has done his worst: nor steel nor poison, Malice domestic, foreign levy, nothing

Can touch him further.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

LEW.* adj. [lauw, German; lew, Dutch; hloa, to be warm, Icelandick; hlpan, hleopan, Saxon, the same, of which Mr. Tooke considers lew as the participle past, hlp, hleop.]1. Not very warm; tepid; lukewarm. Lew-warm is still an expression in several parts of England. See also LUKEWARM.

Thou art lewe, and neither could neither boot.

Wicliffe, Revel. iii.

2. Pale; wan; of a decayed hue.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

LEWD.† adj. [læpebe, læp, lep, Saxon; as, læpebe man, a layman; probably from leob, the people. This is the primitive sense of the word. It next included the idea of ignorance; which Dr. Jamieson attributes to the influence of the clergy on the general sentiments of society, the unlearned being in old time treated by them in a very contemptuous manner. Next, as if moral excellence had been confined to their own order, the term was applied by them to signify a wicked person, or one of a licentious life; whence, Dr. Jamieson adds, the modern sense of our lewd. The sense, however, to which Dr. Jamieson alludes by the word modern, is of great age in our language; for Chaucer uses it in the sense of lustful, as well as ignorant.]

1. Lay; not clerical; gross; ignorant. Obsolete.

It was founden that they weren men unlettrid, and lewde men.

Wicliffe, Acts, iv.

For lewde men this book I writ.

Bishop Groshead.

So these great clerks their little wisdom shew
To mock the lewd, as learn'd in this as they.

Davies.

2. Wicked; bad; dissolute.

If some be admitted in to the ministry, either void of learning, or lewd in life, are all the rest to be condemned?

Whitgift.

Before they did oppress the people, only by colour of a lewd custom, they did afterwards use the same oppressions by warrant.

Davies on Ireland.

3. Lustful; libidinous.

Swiche old lewde words use he.

Chaucer, March. Tale.

He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,

But on his knees at meditation.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Then lewd Anchermolus he laid in dust,

Who stain'd his step-dame's bed with impious lust.

Dryden.

LE'WDLY.† adv. [from lewd.]

1. Foolishly; ignorantly; in a state of ignorance.

All which my daies I have not lewdly spent,
Nor spilt the blossom of my tender years

In ydlesse.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. ii. 91.

Employing his labours lewdly, he maketh a vain

god of the same clay.

Wisdom, xv. 8.

Lord Peter, even in his lucid intervals, was very lewdly given in his common conversation, extreme wilful and positive, and would at any time rather argue to death than allow himself to be once in an error.

Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 4.

2. Wickedly; naughtily.

A sort of naughty persons, lewdly bent,
Have practis'd dangerously against your state.

Shakspeare.

3. Libiduously; lustfully.

He lov'd fair lady Eltre, lewdly lov'd,
Whose wanton pleasures him too much did please,

That quite his heart from Guendeline remov'd.

Spenser.

So lewdly dull his idle works appear,

The wretched texts deserve no comments here.

Dryden.

LE'WDNESS.† n. s. [from lewd.]1. Foolishness; grossness; want of shame. Lewdness blotteth good deserts with blame.

Spenser, F. Q. v. iii. 38.

2. Wickedness; propensity to wickedness.

In stead of teares, the starres like weeping eies
Drop down their exhalations from the skies;
And Tithon's bride new rising from her bed,
Beholds their lewdness with a blushing red.

Mir. for Mag. p. 730.

If it were a matter of wrong or wicked lewdness,
O ye Jews, reason would that I should bear with you.

Acts, xviii. 14.

3. Lustful licentiousness.

Suffer no lewdness, nor indecent speech,
Th' apartment of the tender youth to reach.

Dryden, Juv.

Damianus's letter to Nicholas is an authentick record of the lewdnesses committed under the reign of celibacy.

Asterbury.

LE'WDSTER. n. s. [from lewd.] A lecher; one given to criminal pleasures.

Against such lewdsters, and their lechery,
Those that betray them do no treachery.

Shakspeare, M. Wives of Winds.

LE'WIS D'OR. n. s. See LOUIS D'OR.

LEXICO'GRAPHY. n. s. [λεξικόν and γράφω, Gr. lexicographie, French.] A writer of dictionaries; a harmless drudge, that busies himself in tracing the original, and detailing the signification of words.

Commentators and lexicographers, acquainted with the Syriack language, have given these hints in their writings on Scripture.

Watts, Improv. of the Mind.

LEXICO'GRAPHY.† n. s. [λεξικόν and γράφω, Greek.] The art or practice of writing dictionaries.

I shall only make some few reflections upon etymology and syntax, supposing orthography to belong to lexicography.

Dalgarno, Deaf and Dumb Man's Tutor, (1680), p. 59.

LEX'ICON. n. s. [λεξικόν.] A dictionary; a book teaching the signification of words.

Though a linguist should pride himself to have all the tongues that Babel cleft the world into, yet, if he had not studied the solid things in them, as well as the words and lexicons, yet he were thought so much to be esteemed a learned man as any yeoman competently wise in his mother dialect only.

Milton.

LEY. n. s. See LAY, and LEA.

Ley, lee, lay, are all from the Saxon leax, a field or pasture, by the usual melting of the letter z or g.

Gibson's Camden.

LIAB'ILITY.* n. s. [from liable.] The state of being liable. This is used in conversation oftener than the old word liableness. Of neither has Dr. Johnson taken notice. The present is certainly very modern.

LI'ABLE.† adj. [liable, from the old Fr. lia, whence lier, attacher: See Lacombe: And that from the Latin, ligo, to bind; so that liable is quasi ligabilis.] Obnoxious; not exempt; subject: with to.

But what is strength without a double share
Of wisdom? vast, unwieldy, burdensome,
Proudly secure, yet liable to fall
By weakest subtleties.

Milton, S. A.

The English boast of Spenser and Milton, who neither of them wanted genius or learning; and yet both of them are liable to many censures.

Dryden, Juv.

This, or any other scheme, coming from a private hand, might be liable to many defects.

Swift.

LI'ABLENESS.* n. s. [from liable.] State of being liable to; obnoxiousness; subjection; propensity.

Abusing the liableness of women to self-love and vanity, they are continually striking fire out of their fancies upon this tender.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648), p. 162.

That state or condition must be the better, and in conformity to right reason more eligible, in which there is no liableness to the wrath and anger of God.

Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 485.

There is an inlet for ambition, though not for lust; a liableness to the filthiness of the spirit, though not of the flesh.

Hammond, Works, iv. 511.

How difficult a thing it is, especially in matter of reforming, to pare off the excess, and not to cut to the quick; to stay at the right point, and not over-do; because of the liableness, in such cases, in declining one extreme, to fall into another.

Puller, Moderation of the Ch. of Eng. p. 432.

LI'AR. n. s. [from lie.] This word would analogically be lier; but this orthography has prevailed, and the convenience of distinction from liar, he who lies down, is sufficient to confirm it.] One who tells falsehood; one who wants veracity.

She's like a liar, gone to burning hell!
 'Twas I that kill'd her. Shakespeare, Othello.
 He approves the common liar, fame,
 Who speaks him thus at Rome.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.
 I do not reject his observation as untrue, much less condemn the person himself as a liar, whenever it seems to be contradicted. Boyle.

Thy better soul abhors a liar's part,
 Wise is thy voice, and noble is thy heart.

Pope, Odyssey.

LI'ARD.† adj. [old Fr. liart, gris pommelé; Lacombe: Ital. leardo, gray or whitish horse-hair.] Gray: It was common, Mr. Tyrwhitt says, to call a gray horse from the colour, liard, as a bay one bayard. In Scotland liard, or liart, denotes gray-haired; as, he's a liard auld man; au liart beard, i. e. old gray-beard.

This carter thakketh his horse upon the croupe—
 That was wel twicht, min owen liard boy.

Chaucer, Frere's Tale.

To LIB.* v. a. [lubben, Dutch.] To castrate. Still a northern word.

The bellowing bullock lib, and goat.

Chapman, Hesiod, (1618.)

LIBA'TION. n. s. [libatio, Latin.]
 1. The act of pouring wine on the ground in honour of some deity.

In digging new earth pour in some wine, that the vapour of the earth and wine may comfort the spirits, provided it be not taken for a heathen sacrifice, or libation to the earth.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. The wine so poured.

They had no other crime to object against the Christians, but that they did not offer up libations, and the smoke of sacrifices, to dead men.

Stillingfleet on Rom. Idolatry.

The goblet then she took, with nectar crown'd,
 Sprinkling the first libations on the ground.

Dryden, Æn.

LI'BEARD. n. s. [libaert, German; leopardus, Lat.] A leopard.

Make the libbard stern.

Leave roaring, when in rage he for revenge did yearn.

The libbard and the tiger, as the mole
 Rising, the crumbled earth above them threw.

Milton, P. L.

The torrid parts of Africk are by Piso resembled to a libbard's skin, the distance of whose spots represent the disperseness of habitations, or towns of Africk.

Brerewood.

LI'BEARDS-BANE.* n. s. A poisonous plant. Night-shade, moonwort, libbard's-bane.

B. Jonson, Masques.

LIBEL.† n. s. [libellus, Latin; libelle, French.]

1. A satire; defamatory writing; a lampoon.

Every fidler sings libels openly; and each man is ready to challenge the freedom of David's ruffians, "Our tongues are our own, who shall control us?" This is not a fashion for Christians, whose tongues must be ranged within the compass as of truth, so of charity and silent obedience.

Bp. Hall, Fashions of the World.

Are we reproached for the name of Christ? that ignominy serves but to advance our future glory; every such libel here becomes panegyrick there.

Decay of Chrs. Piety.

Good heav'n! that sots and knaves should be so vain,
 To wish their vile resemblance may remain!

And stand recorded, at their own request,
 To future days, a libel or a jest. Dryden.

2. [In the civil law.] A declaration or charge in writing against a person exhibited in court.

To LI'BEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To spread defamation; written or printed: it is now commonly used as an active verb, without the preposition against.
 Sweet scrolls to fly about the streets of Rome:
 What's this but libelling against the senate?

Shakespeare.

He, like a privileg'd spy, whom nothing can
 Discredit, libels now 'gainst each great man.

Donne.

To LI'BEL. v. a. To satirise; to lampoon.
 Is the peerage of England dishonoured when a peer suffers for his treason? if he be libelled, or any way defamed, he has his scandalum magnatum to punish the offender.

Dryden.

But what so pure which envious tongues will spare?

Some wicked wits have libelled all the fair. Pope.

LI'BELLER.† n. s. [from libel.] A defamer by writing; a lampooner. "The satirist and libeller differ as much as the magistrate and the murderer. In the consideration of human life, the satirist never falls upon persons who are not glaringly faulty, and the libeller on none but who are conspicuously commendable." Tatler, No. 92.

Our common libellers are as free from the imputation of wit, as of morality. Dryden, Juv.

The squibs are those who, in the common phrase, are called libellers and lampooners.

Tatler.

The common libellers, in their invectives, tax the church with an insatiable desire of power and wealth, equally common to all bodies of men.

Swift.

LI'BELLING.* n. s. [from libel.] Act of defaming or abusing.

This is the design and the mischievous issue, which to cover and propagate, the cunning machinator pretends the exaltation of the freeness of that grace which he designs to dishonour and defeat. He raiseth a mighty cry of free grace, and intitles the libellings of divine goodness by the specious name of Vindicia gratie.

Glanville, Serm. x. p. 380.

Libelling is not the crime of an illiterate people.

Burke, Speech on Libels.

LI'BELOUS. adj. [from libel.] Defamatory.

It was the most malicious surmise that had ever been brewed, howsoever countenanced by a libellous pamphlet.

Wotton.

LI'BERAL.† adj. [liberalis, Lat.; liberal, Fr.]

1. Not mean; not low in birth; not low in mind.

Where gentle court and gracious delight
 She to them made, with mildness virginall
 Shewing herself both wise and liberal.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. ix. 20.

2. Becoming a gentleman.

3. Munificent; generous; bountiful; not parsimonious.

Her name was Mercy, well known over all,
 To be both gracious and eke liberal.

Spenser, F. Q.

Sparing would shew a worse sin than ill doctrine.

Men of his way should be most liberal,

They're set here for examples.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Needs must the power

That made us, and for us this ample world,
 Be infinitely good, and of his good
 As liberal and free, as infinite. Milton, P. L.
 The liberal are secure alone;
 For what we frankly give, for ever is our own.

Granville.

4. It has of before the thing, and to before the person.

There is no art better than to be liberal of praise and commendation to others, in that wherein a man's self hath any perfection. Bacon, Ess.

Several clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, are, in their sermons very liberal of all those which they find in ecclesiastical writers, as if it were our duty to understand them. Swift.

5. Gross; licentious; free to excess.

Thou art too wild, too rude, and bold of voice;
 Parts, that become thee happily enough,
 And in such eyes as ours appear not faults;
 But where thou art not known, why, there they shew

Something too liberal. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Is he not a profane and very liberal counsellor?

Shakespeare, Othello.

I might, if it pleas'd me, stand still, and hear
 My sister made a may-game, might I not?
 And give allowance to your liberal jests
 Upon his person, whose least anger would Consume a legion of such wretched people.

Beaumont, and Fl. Captain.

LIBERA'LITY. n. s. [liberalitas, Latin; liberalité, French.] Munificence; bounty; generosity; generous profusion.

Why should he despair, that knows to court
 With words, fair looks, and liberality? Shaks.

Such moderation with thy bounty join,
 That thou may'st nothing give that is not thine;
 That liberality is but cast away,
 Which makes us borrow what we cannot pay.

Denham.

To LI'BERALISE.* v. a. [from liberal.] To make liberal, generous, gentlemanly, open.

He [Mr. Grenville] was bred to the law, which is, in my opinion, one of the first and noblest of human sciences; a science which does more to quicken and invigorate the understanding, than all the other kinds of learning put together; but it is not apt, except in persons very happily born, to open and to liberalize the mind exactly in the same proportion.

Burke, Speech on American Taxation, (1774.)

LI'BERALLY.† adv. [from liberal.]

1. Bounteously; bountifully; largely.

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not.

James, i. 5.

2. Not meanly; magnanimously.

3. Freely; copiously.

They invited their father to drink liberally.

Patrick on Gen. xix. 32.

4. Licentiously.

Had mine own brother spoke thus liberally,
 My fury should have taught him better manners.

Greene, Com. of Tu Quoque.

To LIBERATE.* v. a. [libero, Lat.] To free; to set free. Upon this word Mr. Mason has rashly observed, that "though this verb, and its derivative noun liberation, are now frequent in periodical publications of news, they are too modern to be found in any dictionary; nor had he met with either, to the best of his recollection, in any writer whom he would produce for an authority." The verb and substantive, however, are both of nearly two hundred years of age in our language; and may be seen in the old vocabulary of Cockerman.

By what means a man may liberate himself from those fears. Johnson, in Taylor's Sermons.

LIBERATION.* n. s. [liberatio, Lat.] The act of setting free; deliverance.

Cockeram, and Coles.

This mode of analysing requires perfect liberation from all prejudged system.

Pownall on Antiq. p. 155.

LIBERATOR.* n. s. [liberator, Lat.] A deliverer.

The exploits of the judges and kings given to the people of God for liberators.

Heuyt, Serm. (1658,) p. 155.

LIBERTINAGE.* n. s. [libertinage, Fr.]

1. Sensuality; dissoluteness.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

2. Licentiousness of opinion.

Erasmus thought he saw, under all their fondness for the language of old Rome, a growing libertinage, which disposed them to think slightly of the christian faith. Warburton, Serm. xiii. note.

LIBERTINE. n. s. [libertin, French.]

1. One unconfin'd; one at liberty.

When he speaks,

The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honied sentences.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

2. One who lives without restraint or law.

Man, the lawless libertine, may rove,
Free and unquestio'd. Rowe, Jane Shore.

Want of power is the only bound that a libertine puts to his views upon any of the sex.

Richardson, Clarissa.

2. One who pays no regard to the precepts of religion.

They say this town is full of couzenage,
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin. Shakespeare.

That word may be applied to some few libertines in the audience. Collier, View of the Stage.

4. [In law; libertinus, Lat.] A freedman; or rather, the son of a freedman.

Some persons are forbidden to be accusers on the score of their sex, as women; others on the score of their age, as pupils and infants; others on the score of their condition, as libertines against their patrons.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

LIBERTINE. adj. [libertin, French.] Licentious; irreligious.

There are men that marry not, but chuse rather a libertine and impure single life, than to be yoked in marriage. Bacon.

Might not the queen make diligent enquiry, if any person about her should happen to be of libertine principles or morals?

Swift, Proj. for Advanc. of Religion.

LIBERTINISM.† n. s. [from libertine.]

1. Irreligion; licentiousness of opinions and practice.

Modest heathens would hiss this libertinism off the stage.

By. Hall, Cuses of Consc. iv. 2.

That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished all at once, and a spirit of liberty and libertinism, of infidelity and profaneness, started up in the room of it.

Atterbury, Serm.

2. Privilege or state of a freedman.

Dignified with the title of free-man, and denied the libertinism that belongs to it.

Hammond, Works, iv. 486.

LIBERTY. n. s. [liberté. French; libertas, Latin.]

1. Freedom, as opposed to slavery.

My master knows of your being here, and hath threatened to put me into everlasting liberty, if I tell you of it; for he swears, he'll turn me away.

Shakespeare.

O liberty! thou goddess, heavenly bright!
Profuse of bliss, and pregnant with delight,
Eternal pleasures in thy presence reign. Addison.

2. Exemption from tyranny or inordinate government.

Justly thou abhor'st

The son, who, on the quiet state of man,
Such trouble brought, affecting to subdue
Rational liberty; yet know withal,
Since thy original lapse, true liberty
Is lost, which always with right reason dwells.

Milton, P. L.

3. Freedom, as opposed to necessity.

Liberty is the power in any agent to do, or forbear, any particular action, according to the determination, or thought of the mind, whereby either of them is preferred to the other. Locke.

As it is in the motions of the body, so it is in the thoughts of our minds: where any one is such, that we have power to take it up, or lay it by, according to the preference of the mind, there we are at liberty. Locke.

4. Privilege; exemption; immunity.

His majesty gave not an intire country to any, much less did he grant jura regalia, or any extraordinary liberties.

Davies.

5. Relaxation of restraint: as, he sees himself at liberty to chuse his condition.

License they mean, when they cry liberty.

Milton, Sonnet.

6. Leave; permission.

I shall take the liberty to consider a third ground, which, with some men, has the same authority. Locke.

LIBIDINIST.* n. s. [from libidinosus.] One devoted to lewdness or lust.

Nero, being monstrous incontinent himself, verily believed, that all men were most foul libidinists, yea, that there was not a chaste person in all the world.

Junius, Sin Stigmatized, (1639,) p. 350.

LIBIDINOUS.† adj. [libidinosus, Latin; libidineux, Fr.] Lewd; lustful.

It is not love, but strong libidinous will,
That triumphs o'er me.

Beaumont, Fl. Kn. of Malta.

For his libidinous courses he was slain by his sister's husband.

Gregory, Posthum. (1650,) p. 253.

Thou didst cover,

With a maid's habit, a libidinous lover.

Fanshawe, Pastor Fido.

None revolt from the faith, because they must not look upon a woman to lust after her, but because they are much more restrained from the perpetration of their lusts. If wanton glances and libidinous thoughts had been permitted by the Gospel, they would have apostatized nevertheless.

Bentley.

LIBIDINOUSLY.† adv. [from libidinosus.] Lewdly; lustfully.

Simon Magus, and his mystical priests, lived libidinously; and used all manner of incentives and allurements to venery.

Bp. Lavingdon, Moravians Compared, p. 104.

LIBIDINOUSNESS.* n. s. [from libidinosus.] Lewdness; lustfulness.

They exercise all kinds of lewdness and libidinousness.

Dr. James, Manuduct. unto Divinity, (1625,) p. 104.

LYBRA.* n. s. [Latin.] The seventh sign in the zodiac; the balance.

From eastern point

Of Libra to the fleecy star. Milton, P. L.

LIBRAL. adj. [libralis, Latin.] Of a pound weight.

Dict.

LIBRARIAN.† n. s. [librarius, Latin.]

1. One who has the care of a library. This word is of modern usage; library-keeper being the usual term for the officer of this description, which is used by bishop Barlow, Prideaux, Boyle, Bentley, and others.

It was his inconceivable knowledge of books, that induced the great Duke Cosmo the third to do him the honour of making him his librarian.

Spence, Life of Magliabecchi.

2. One who transcribes or copies books. Charybdis thrice swallows, and thrice refunds, the waves: this must be understood of regular tides. There are indeed but two tides in a day, but this is the error of the librarian.

Broome, Notes on the Odyssey.

LIBRARIANSHIP.* n. s. The office of a librarian.

LIBRARY.† n. s. [librairie, Fr.]

1. A large collection of books, publick or private.

Then as they gan his library to view,
And antique registers for to advise,
There chanced to the prince's hand to rise
An ancient book, hight Briton's monuments.

Spenser, F. Q.

I have given you the library of a painter, and a catalogue of such books as he ought to read.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

2. A book-room.

Magliabecchi had a local memory of the places where every book stood; as in his master's shop at first, and in several other libraries afterwards.

Spence.

To LIBRATE. v. a. [libro, Lat.] To poise; to balance; to hold in equipoise.

LIBRATION. n. s. [libratio, Latin; libration, Fr.]

1. The state of being balanced.

This is what may be said of the balance, and the libration, of the body. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Their pinions still

In loose librations stretch'd, to trust the void

Trembling refuse. Thomson, Spring.

2. [In astronomy.]

Libration is the balancing motion or trepidation in the firmament, whereby the declination of the sun, and the latitude of the stars, change from time to time. Astronomers likewise ascribe to the moon a libratory motion, or motion of trepidation, which they pretend is from east to west, and from north to south, because that, at full moon, they sometimes discover parts of her disk which are not discovered at other times. These kinds are called, the one a libration in longitude, and the other a libration in latitude. Besides this, there is a third kind, which they call an apparent libration, and which consists in this, that when the moon is at her greatest elongation from the south, her axis being then almost perpendicular to the plane of the ecliptic, the sun must enlighten towards the north pole of the moon some parts which he did not before, and that, on the contrary, some parts of those which he enlightened towards the opposite pole are obscured; and this produces the same effect which the libration in latitude does. Dict. Trev.

Those planets which move upon their axis, do not all make intire revolutions; for the moon maketh only a kind of libration, or a reciprocated motion on her own axis. Grew.

LI'BRATORY. adj. [from libro, Latin.] Balancing; playing like a balance.

LICE, the plural of louse.

Red blisters rising on their paps appear,
And flaming carbuncles, and noisome sweat,
And clammy dews that loathsome lice heget;
Till the slow creeping evil eats his way.

Dryden, Virg.

LI'CEBANE. n. s. [lice and bane.] A plant.

LI'CEBANE. † n. s. See LICENSE.

LI'CENSABLE.* adj. [from To licence.]

1. That may be permitted by a legal grant.
I now have another copy to sell, but nobody will buy it because it is not licensable.

Downfall of Temporizing Poets, (1641), p. 5.

2. Dismissible. Not in use.

Notgrave, and Sherwood.

LICENSE. † n. s. [licentia, Latin; licence, Fr.] And our own word is perhaps more frequently written licence than license.

1. Exorbitant liberty; contempt of legal and necessary restraint.

Some of the wiser seeing that a popular licence is indeed the many-headed tyranny, prevailed with the rest to make Musidorus their chief. Sidney.

Taunt my faults

With such full licence, as both truth and malice

Have power to utter. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

They baul for freedom in their senseless moods,

And still revolt when truth would set them free;

License they mean, when they cry liberty.

Milton, Sonnet.

The privilege that antient poets claim,

Now turn'd to licence by too just a name.

Roscommon.

Though this be a state of liberty, yet it is not a state of licence; though man, in that state, have an uncontrollable liberty to dispose of his person or possessions, yet he has not liberty to destroy himself.

Locke.

2. A grant of permission.

They sent some to bring them a licence from the senate.

Judith, xi. 14.

Those few abstract names that the schools forged, and put into the mouths of their scholars, could never yet get admittance into common use, or obtain the licence of public approbation. Locke.

We procured a licence of the duke of Parma to enter the theatre and gallery. Addison on Italy.

3. Liberty; permission.

It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face, and have licence to answer for himself.

Acts.

To LI'CENSE. † v. a. [licencier, Fr.]

1. To permit by a legal grant.

There must be licensing dancers, that no gesture, motion, or deportment, be taught our youth, but what by their allowance shall be thought honest! — The lutes, the violins, the guitars, — must not be suffered to prattle as they do, but must be licensed what they may say.

Milton, Areopagitica.

Wit's titans brav'd the skies,

And the press groan'd with licens'd blasphemies.

Pope.

2. To dismiss; to send away. Not in use.

He would play well, and willingly, at some games of greatest attention, which shewed, that when he listed he could license his thoughts.

Wotton.

LI'CENSER. † n. s. [from license.] A granter of permission; commonly a tool of power.

It will ask more than the work of twenty licensers to examine all the lutes, the violins, and the guitars, in every house. Milton, Areopagitica.

It seems probable that these eight verses were suppressed by Thomas Norton, Sackville's supposed assistant in the play, who was not only an active, and I believe a sensible puritan, but a licencier of the publication of books under the commission of the bishop of London.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 370.

LICE'NTIATE. † n. s. [licentiatus, low Lat.]

1. A man who uses license. Not in use.

The licentiates somewhat licentiously, lest they should prejudice poetical liberty, will pardon themselves for doubling or rejecting a letter, if the sense fall aptly. Camden.

2. A degree in Spanish universities.

A man might, after that time, sue for the degree of a licentiate or master in this faculty.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

3. A term applied to those who receive, in our own country, licences from the college of physicians to practise in the faculty of medicine.

The college of physicians, in July 1687, published an edict, requiring all the fellows, candidates, and licentiates, to give gratuitous advice to the neighbouring poor. Johnson, Life of Garth.

To LICE'NTIATE. v. a. [licentier, Fr.]

To permit; to encourage by license.

We may not hazard either the stifling of generous inclinations, or the licentiating of any thing that is coarse. L'Estrange.

LICENTIA'TION.* n. s. [from licentiate.]

The act of permitting. Not in use.

There is a tacit licentiation or permission of error. J. Freeman, Sermon, (1643), p. 35.

LICE'NTIOUS. adj. [licencieux, French; licentiosus, Latin.]

1. Unrestrained by law or morality.

Later ages' pride, like corn-fed steed,
Abus'd her plenty, and fat swoll encrease,
To all licentious lust, and gain exceded
The measure of her mean, and natural first need.

Spenser, F. Q.

How would it touch thee to the quick,
Should'st thou but hear I were licentious?
And that this body, consecrate to thee,
With ruffian lust should be contaminate?

Shakspeare.

2. Presumptuous; unconfin'd.

The Tyber, whose licentious waves,
So often overflow'd the neighbouring fields,
Now runs a smooth and inoffensive course.

Roscommon.

LICE'NTIOUSLY. adv. [from licentious.]

With too much liberty; without just restraint.

The licentiates, somewhat licentiously, will pardon themselves. Camden, Rem.

LICE'NTIOUSNESS. n. s. [from licentious.]

Boundless liberty; contempt of just restraint.

One error is so fruitful, as it begetteth a thousand children, if the licentiousness thereof be not timely restrained. Raleigh.

This custom has been always looked upon, by the wisest men, as an effect of licentiousness, and not of liberty.

Swift.

During the greatest licentiousness of the press,

the character of the queen was insulted. Swift.

LICH.* adj. [lic, Sax. similis.] Like; resembling; equal. Obsolete.

Anon he let two coffres make
Of one semblance, and of one make,
So lich, that no lif thilke throwe,
That one may fro that other knowe.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

[He] rather joy'd to be than seemen sich,

For both to be and seeme to him was labour lich.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. vii. 29.

LICH. n. s. [lice, Sax.] A dead carcase; whence lichwake, the time or act of watching by the dead; lichgate, the gate through which the dead are carried to the grave; Lichfield, the field of the dead, a city in Staffordshire, so named from martyred christians. Salve, magna, parens! Lichwake is still retained in Scotland in the same sense.

LI'CHEN.* n. s. [lichen, Fr.] Liverwort.

Miller.

I observed nothing but several curious lichens, and plenty of gale (or Dutch myrtle) perfuming the border of the lake. Gray's Letters.

LI'CHOWL. n. s. [lich and owl.] A sort of owl, by the vulgar supposed to foretell death.

LICIT.* adj. [licitus, Lat.] Lawful.

A just and licit thing.

Port Royal, Gr. Primitives, p. 150.

LI'CITLY.* adv. [from licit.] Lawfully.

The question may be licitly discussed.

Throckmorton's Considerations, p. 38.

LI'CITNESS.* n. s. [from licit.] Lawfulness.

To LICK. v. a. [liccian, Saxon, lecken, Dutch.]

1. To pass over with the tongue.

Æsculapius went about with a dog and she-goat, both which he used much in his cures; the first for licking all ulcerated wounds, and the goat's milk for the diseases of the stomach and lungs.

Temple.

A bear's a savage beast;
Whelp'd without form, until the dam
Has lick'd it into shape and frame. Hudibras.

He with his tepid rays the rose renews,

And licks the drooping leaves, and dries the dews.

Dryden.

I have seen an antiquary lick an old coin, among other trials, to distinguish the age of it by its taste.

Addison.

2. To lap; to take in by the tongue.

At once pluck out
The multitudinous tongue; but let them not lick
The sweet which they are their poison. Shakspeare, Coriol.

3. To LICK up. To devour.

Now shall this company lick up all that are round about us, as the ox licketh up the grass.

Numb. xxii. 4.

When luxury has lick'd up all thy self,
Curs'd by thy neighbours, thy trustees, thyself;
Think how posterity will treat thy name.

Pope, Hor.

LICK.* n. s. [from the verb.] A wash; what is smeared over. Not in use.

My face, which you behold so flaming red, is done over with ladies' licks.

Transl. of Boccacini, (1626), p. 233.

To LICK.* v. a. [laegga, Su. Goth. to strike.] To beat. Common, as a colloquial expression, in many parts of England.

LICK.* n. s. [from the preceding verb, which Dr. Johnson has not noticed.] A blow; rough usage; a low word.

He turned upon me as round as a chafed boar, and gave me a lick across the face. Dryden.

LI'CKER.* n. s. [from lick; Fr. licheur.] One who licks or laps up.

Notgrave, and Sherwood.

LI'CKERISH. † adj. [liccepa, a glutton, LI'CKEROUS.] Saxon. This seems to be the proper way of spelling the word, which has no affinity with liquor. Dr. Johnson. — An old form of writing it is also licorous, and licorish; as, in Huloet's old dictionary, and by Cornwallis in his Notes on Seneca, 1601. See also LICKERISHNESS. The etymology also may rather be referred to the Su. Goth. licker, or lecker, delicatus, mollis.]

1. Nice in the choice of food.

The liquorous palate of the glutton ranges through seas and lands for uncouth delicacies.

Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

Voluptuous men sacrifice all substantial satisfaction to a liquorish palate. L'Estrange.

2. Eager; greedy to swallow; eager not with hunger but gust.

It is never tongue-tied, where fit commendation, whereof womankind is so lickerish, is offered unto it. Sidney.

Strephon, fond boy, delighted, did not know, That it was love that shin'd in shining maid; But lickerous, poison'd, fain to her would go. Sidney.

Certain rare manuscripts, sought in the most remote parts by Erpenius, the most excellent linguist, had been left to his widow, and were upon sale to the jesuits, liquorish chapmen of all such ware. Wotton.

In vain he proffer'd all his goods to save His body, destin'd to that living grave; The liquorish hag rejects the pelf with scorn, And nothing but the man would serve her turn. Dryden.

In some provinces they were so liquorish after man's flesh, that they would suck the blood as it run from the dying man. Locke.

3. Nice; delicate; tempting the appetite. This sense I doubt.

Some burst with the plenty and abundance they have, and would sell paradise out of hand for a lickerous morsel.

Harmar, Tr. of Beza, (1587.) p. 36.

Would'st thou seek again to trap me here With lickerish baits, fit to ensnare a brute? Milton, Comus.

LICKERISHNESS.† } n. s. [from lickerish,
LICKEROUSNESS. } and lickerous.] Nice-
LICOROUSNESS. } ness of palate; daintiness of taste.

Barret, and Sherwood.

As earnestlie to desyre delicate thinges, is a poynte of lycorishnesse; so to refuse thinges usuall and profitable, is madnesse.

Wootton, Christian Manual, (1576.) sign. H. iii. b.

LICKERISHLY.* } adv. [from lickerish.]
LICOROUSLY. } Daintily; deliciously.

Gloss. Urry's Chaucer.

LICORICE. n. s. [γλυκύριζα; liquoricia, Italian.] A root of sweet taste.

Liquorice root is long and slender, externally of a dusky reddish brown, but within of a fine yellow, full of juice, and of a taste sweeter than sugar; it grows wild in many parts of France, Italy, Spain and Germany. The inspissated juice of this root is brought to us from Spain, and Holland; from the first of which places it obtained the name of Spanish juice. Hill, Materia Medica.

LICTOR. n. s. [Latin.] A beadle that attends the consuls to apprehend or punish criminals.

Saucy lictors Will catch at us like strumpets.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Proconsuls to their provinces Hastening, or on return, in robes of state, Lictors and rods the ensigns of their power.

Milton, P. R.

Democritus could feed his spleen, and shake His sides and shoulders till he felt 'em ake; Though in his country-town no lictors were, Nor rods, nor axe, nor tribune. Dryden, Juv. Lid. n. s. [hlub, Saxon; lied, German.]

1. A cover; any thing that shuts down over a vessel; any stopple that covers the mouth, but not enters it.

Hope, instead of flying off with the rest, stuck so close to the lid of the cup, that it was shut down upon her. Addison.

2. The membrane that, when we sleep or wink, is drawn over the eye.

Do not for ever with thy veiled lids, Seek for thy noble father in the dust. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Our eyes have lids, our ears still ope we keep. Davies.

That eye dropp'd sense distinct and clear, As any muse's tongue could speak; When from its lid a pearly tear Ran trickling down her beauteous cheek. Prior.

The rod of Hermes

To sleep could mortal eye-lids fix, And drive departed souls to Styx: That rod was just a type of Sid's, Which o'er a British senate's lids Could scatter opium full as well, And drive as many souls to hell. Swift.

LIE. n. s. [lie, French.] Any thing impregnated with some other body; as, soap or salt.

Chamber-lie breeds fleas like a loach. Shakspeare. All liquid things concocted by heat become yellow; as lye, wort, &c. Peachment on Drawing.

LIE. n. s. [lige, Saxon.]

1. A criminal falsehood.

— Thou liest, abhorred tyrant; with my sword I'll prove the lie thou speak'st. Shakspeare, Macb.

A lye is properly an outward signification of something contrary to, or at least beside, the inward sense of the mind; so that when one thing is signified or expressed, and the same thing not meant or intended, that is properly a lye. South.

Truth is the object of our understanding, as good is of our will; and the understanding can no more be delighted with a lye, than the will can chase an apparent evil. Dryden.

When I hear my neighbour speak that which is not true, and I say to him, This is not true, or this is false, I only convey to him the naked idea of his error; this is the primary idea: but if I say it is a lie, the word lie carries also a secondary idea; for it implies both the falsehood of the speech, and my reproach and censure of the speaker. Watts, Logic.

2. A charge of falsehood: to give the lie, is a formulary phrase.

That lie shall lye so heavy on my sword, That it shall render vengeance and revenge; Till thou the lie giver, and that lie, rest In earth as quiet as thy father's skull. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

It is a contradiction to suppose, that whole nations of men should unanimously give the lie to what, by the most invincible evidence, every one of them knew to be true. Locke.

Men will give their own experience the lie, rather than admit of any thing disagreeing with these tenets. Locke.

3. A fiction. This sense is ludicrous. The cock and fox, the fool and knave imply; The truth is moral, though the tale a lie. Dryden.

To LIE.† v. n. [leogan, Sax. liegen, Dutch; liga, Su. Goth. "consent. reliquis dialect. Celto-Scythicis." Serenius. Ben Jonson, in his English Grammar, observes, under the letter y, that "we usually difference to lye, or feign, from to lie along, by the use of the y;" a distinction, which has very commonly been made, and which, though not here adopted by Dr. Johnson, seems, as Mr. Nares has remarked, an useful one.]

1. To utter criminal falsehood.

I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say he lies here, or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat. Shakspeare, Othello.

If a soul lye unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep, he shall restore. Leviticus.

Should I lye against my right? Job, xxxiv. 6.

2. To exhibit false representation. Inform us, will the emp'r or treat?

Or do the prints and paper lie? Swift.

TO LIE. v. n. pret. I lay; I have lain or lien. [liegan, Saxon; liggen, Dutch.]

1. To rest horizontally, or with very great inclination against something else.

2. To rest; to press upon. Death lies on her like an untimely shower Upon the sweetest flow'r of all the field. Shakspeare. Lie heavy on him, earth, for he Laid many a heavy load on thee. Epitaph on Vanbrugh.

3. To be repositied in the grave.

All the kings of the nations lie in glory, every one in his own house. Isa. xiv. 18.

I will lie with my fathers, and thou shalt carry me out of Egypt, and bury me in your burying place. Gen. xlvii. 30.

4. To be in a state of decumbiture.

How many good young princes would do so; their fathers lying so sick as yours at this time is. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

My little daughter lieth at the point of death; I pray thee come and lay thy hands on her, that she may be healed. St. Mark.

5. To pass the time of sleep.

The watchful traveller, That by the moon's mistaken light did rise, Lay down again, and clos'd his weary eyes. Dryden. Forlorn he must, and persecuted fly; Climb the steep mountain, in the cavern lie. Prior.

6. To be laid up or repositied.

I have seen where copperas is made great variety of them, divers of which I have yet lying by me. Boyle.

7. To remain fixed.

The Spaniards have but one temptation to quarrel with us, the recovering of Jamaica, for that has ever lied at their hearts. Temple.

8. To reside.

If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door. Gen. iv. 7.

9. To be placed or situated with respect to something else.

Deserts, where there lay no way. Wisdom. I fly

To those happy climes that lie, Where day never shuts his eye. Milton, Comus. There lies our way, and that our passage home. Dryden.

Envy lies between beings equal in nature, though unequal in circumstances. Collier of Envy. The business of a tutor, rightly employed, lies out of the road. Locke on Education.

What lies beyond our positive idea towards infinity, lies in obscurity, and has the underminate confusion of a negative idea. Locke.

10. To press upon affectively.

Thy wrath lieth hard upon me, and thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves. Psalms.

He that commits a sin shall find The pressing guilt lie heavy on his mind, Though bribes or favour shall assert his cause. Creach.

Shew the power of religion, in abating that particular anguish which seems to lie so heavy on Leonora.
Addison.

11. To be troublesome or tedious.

Suppose kings, besides the entertainment of luxury, should have spent their time, at least way upon their hands, in chemistry, it cannot be denied but prices may pass their time advantageously that way.
Temple.

I would recommend the studies of knowledge to the female world, that they may not be at a loss how to employ those hours that lie upon their hands.
Addison, Guardian.

12. To be judicially imputed.

If he should intend his voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head.
Shakespeare.

13. To be in any particular state.

If money go before, all ways do lie open.

The highways lie waste, the wayfaring man ceaseth.
Isaiah.

The seventh year thou shalt let it rest and lie still.
Exodus.

Do not think that the knowledge of any particular subject cannot be improved, merely because it has lain without improvement.

Watts, Improv. of the Mind.

14. To be in a state of concealment.

Many things in them lie concealed to us, which they who were concerned understood at first sight.
Locke.

15. To be in prison.

Your imprisonment shall not be long; I will deliver you, or else lie for you.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

16. To be in a bad state.

Why will you lie pinning and pinching yourself in such a lonesome, starving course of life?

The generality of mankind lie pecking at one another, till one by one they are all torn to pieces.
L'Estrange, Fab.

Are the gods to do your drudgery, and you lie bellowing with your finger in your mouth?
L'Estrange, Fab.

17. To be in a helpless or exposed state.

To see a hated person superior, and to lie under the anguish of a disadvantage, is far enough from diversion.
Collier.

It is but a very small comfort, that a plain man, lying under a sharp fit of the stone for a week, receives from this fine sentence.
Tillotson, Serm.

As a man should always be upon his guard against the vices to which he is most exposed, so we should take a more than ordinary care not to lie at the mercy of the weather in our moral conduct.
Addison, Freholder.

The maintenance of the clergy is precarious, and collected from a most miserable race of farmers, at whose mercy every minister lies to be defrauded.
Swift.

18. To consist.

The image of it gives me content already; and I trust it will grow to a most prosperous perfection. — It lies much in your holding up.
Shakespeare.

He that thinks that diversion may not lie in hard labour, forgets the early rising, and hard riding of huntsmen.
Locke.

19. To be in the power; to belong to.

Do'st thou endeavour, as much as in thee lies, to preserve the lives of all men?

He shews himself very malicious if he knows I deserve credit, and yet goes about to blast it, as much as in him lies.
Stillingfleet on Idolatry.

Mars is the warrior's god, in him it lies on whom he favours to confer the prize.
Dryden.

20. To be valid in a court of judicature: as, an action lieth against one.

21. To cost; as, it lies me in more money.

22. To LIE at. To importune; to teaze.

23. To LIE by. To rest; to remain still.

Every thing that heard him play,
Even the billows of the sea,
Hung their heads, and then lay by;
In sweet musick is such art,
Killing care and grief of heart,
Fall asleep, or hearing die. Shaksp. Hen. VIII.

24. To LIE down. To rest; to go into a state of repose.

The leopard shall lie down with the kid.

The needy shall lie down in safety. Isa. xi. 6.
Isa. xiv. 30.

25. To LIE down. To sink into the grave. His bones are full of the sin of his youth, which shall lie down with him in the dust. Job, xx. 11.

26. To LIE in. To be in childbed.

As for all other good women that love to do but little work, how handsome it is to lie in and sleep, or to louse themselves in the sun-shine, they that have been but a while in Ireland can well witness.
Spenser on Ireland.

You confine yourself most unreasonably. Come; you must go visit the lady that lies in.

Shakespeare, Coriol.
She had lain in, and her right breast had been apostemated.
Wiseman, Surgery.

When Florimel design'd to lie privately in; She chose with such prudence her pangs to conceal, That her nurse, nay her midwife, scarce heard her once squeal.
Prior.

Hysterical affections are contracted by accidents in lying in.
Arbuthnot on Diet.

27. To LIE under. To be subject to; to be oppressed by.

A generous person will lie under a great disadvantage.
Smalridge, Serm.

This mistake never ought to be imputed to Dryden, but to those who suffered so noble a genius to lie under necessity.
Pope.

Europe lay then under a deep lethargy, and was no otherwise to be rescued but by one that would cry mightily.
Atterbury.

28. To LIE upon. To become the matter of obligation or duty.

These are not places merely of favour, the charge of souls lies upon them; the greatest account whereof will be required at their hands.
Bacon, Adv. to Viliers.

It should lie upon him to make out how matter, by undirected motion, could at first necessarily fall, without ever erring or miscarrying, into such a curious formation of human bodies. Bentley, Serm.

29. To LIE with. To converse in bed.

Pardon me, Bassanio,
For by this ring she lay with me. Shakespeare.

30. It may be observed of this word in general, that it commonly implies something of sluggishness, inaction, or steadiness, applied to persons; and some gravity or permanency of condition, applied to things.

LIEF, † adj. [loef, Saxon; written by our old authors, leef, and lefe. See LEEF, and LEVER. Lief, however, follows the form of the Goth. liubs, and the Germ. lief, which signify beloved.] Dear; beloved. Obsolete.

My lieft lord she thus beguiled had,
For he was flesh; all flesh doth frailty breed.
Spenser, F. Q.

You, with the rest,
Causeless have laid disgraces on my head;
And with your best endeavour have stirr'd up
My lieft liege to be mine enemy.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

LIEF, adv. Willingly: now used only in familiar speech.

If I could speak so wisely under an arrest, I would send for certain of my creditors; and yet to say the truth, I had as lief have the foppery of freedom, as the morality of imprisonment.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

LIEFTE'NANT,* See LIEUTENANT.

LIEGE, adj. [lige, French; ligio, Italian; ligius, low Lat.]

1. Bound by some feudal tenure; subject: whence liegeman for subject.

2. Sovereign. [This signification seems to have accidentally risen from the former, the lord of liege men, being by mistake called liege lord.]

Did not the whole realm acknowledge Henry for their king and liege lord? Spenser on Ireland.

My lady liege, said he,
What all your sex desire is sovereignty. Dryden.

So much of it as is founded on the law of nature, may be stiled natural religion; that is to say, a devotedness unto God our liege lord, so as to act in all things according to his will.

Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

LIEGE, n. s. Sovereign; superiour lord; scarcely in use.

O pardon me, my liege! but for my tears
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke. Shakespeare.

The other part reserv'd I by consent,
For that my sovereign liege was in my debt. Shakespeare.

The natives, dubious whom
They must obey, in consternation wait
Till rigid conquest will pronounce their liege.
Philips.

*LI'E*GE MAN, n. s. [from liege and man.] A subject: not in use.

This liegeman can be war more bold,
And when he felt the folly of his lord,
In his own kind, he gan himself unfold.

Spenser, F. Q.

Sith then the ancestors of those that now live, yielded themselves then subjects and liegemen, shall it not tye their children to the same subjection? Spenser on Ireland.

Stand, ho! who is there?
— Friends to this ground, and liegemen to the Dane. Shakespeare.

*LI'E*GER, n. s. [more proper legier, or ledger.] A resident ambassador.

His passions and his fears
Lie liegers for you in his breast, and there Negotiate your affairs. Denham, Sophy.

LI'EN, the particle of lie.

One of the people might lightly have lien with thy wife. Gen. xxvi. 10.

*LIEN*T'ERICK, adj. [from lientry.] Pertaining to a lientry.

There are many medicinal preparations of iron,
but none equal to the tincture made without acids;
especially in obstructions, and to strengthen the tone of the parts; as in lienterick and other like cases. Grew, Museum.

LI'ENTERY, n. s. [from liēon, leve, smooth, and ēiēpon, intestinum, gut; lienterie, French.] A particular looseness, or diarrhœa, wherein the food passes so suddenly through the stomach and guts, as to be thrown out by stool with little or no alteration. Quincy.

LI'ER, n. s. [from to lie.] One that rests or lies down; or remains concealed.

There were liers in ambush against him behind the city. Jos. viii. 14.

LIEU. n. s. [French.] Place; room: it is only used with in: in lieu, instead. God, of his great liberality, had determined, in lieu of man's endeavours, to bestow the same by the rule of that justice which best besemeth him. Hooker.
In lieu of such an increase of dominion, it is our business to extend our trade. Addison, Freeholder.

LIEVE. adv. [See LIEF.] Willingly. Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounced it to you, trippingly on the tongue: but if you mouth it, as many of our players do, I had as lieve the town crier had spoke my lines. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Action is death to some sort of people, and they would as lieve hang as work. L'Estrange.

LIEUTE'NANCY. n. s. [Lieutenancy, French; from lieutenant.]

1. The office of a lieutenant.

If such tricks as these strip you out of your lieutenancy, it had been better you had not kissed your three fingers so oft. Shakspeare, Othello.

2. The body of lieutenants.

The list of undisputed masters, is hardly so long as the list of the lieutenancy of our metropolis. Felton on the Classics.

LIEUTE'NANT. † n. s. [Lieutenant, Fr. Often pronounced, and formerly written, lieutenant. "Mr. Secretary used lieutenant Spencer exceeding honourably." Sidney State-Pap. vol. ii. p. 207, under the year 1600. Again, ibid. p. 257. the same spelling. And so in other old books.]

1. A deputy; one who acts by vicarious authority.

Exhibiting himself into the hands of Christes vicar or lieutenant. Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554.) N. iv. b.

Whither away so fast?

— No farther than the tower,
 We'll enter all together,
 And in good time here the lieutenant comes. Shakspeare.

I must put you in mind of the lords lieutenants, and deputy lieutenants, of the counties: their proper use is for ordering the military affairs, in order to oppose an invasion from abroad, or a rebellion or sedition at home. Bacon.

Killing, as it is considered in itself without all undue circumstances, was never prohibited to the lawful magistrate, who is the vicegerent or lieutenant of God, from whom he derives his power of life and death. Bp. Bramhall against Hobbes.

Sent by our new lieutenant, who in Rome, And since from me, has heard of your renown: I come to offer peace. Philips, Briton.

2. In war, one who holds the next rank to a superiour of any denomination; as, a general has his lieutenant generals, a colonel his lieutenant colonel, and a captain simply his lieutenant.

It were meet that such captains only were employed as have formerly served in that country, and been at least lieutenants there. Spenser on Ireland.

According to military custom the place was good, and the lieutenant of the colonel's company might well pretend to the next vacant captainship. Wotton.

The earl of Essex was made lieutenant general of the army; the most popular man of the kingdom, and the darling of the sword men. Clarendon.

His lieutenant, engaging against his positive orders, being beaten by Lysander, Alcibiades was again banished. Swift.

Canst thou so many gallant soldiers see,
 And captains and lieutenants slight for me? Gay.
LIEUTE'NANTSHIP. † n. s. [from lieutenant.]
 The rank or office of lieutenant.
 Though we should graunt him the *lieutenants*hip he pretendeth to have. Harman, Tr. of Beza, (1587.) p. 405.

LIFE. † n. s. plural lives. [līf, lȳf, Saxon; līpan, to live; lif, Su. Goth.]

1. Union and co-operation of soul with body; vitality; animation, opposed to an inanimate state.

On thy life no more.

— My life I never held but as a pawn

To wage against thy foes. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

She shews a body rather than a life.

A statue than a breather. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life. Gen. i. 20.

The identity of the same man consists in nothing but a participation of the same continued life, by constantly fleeting particles of matter, in succession vitally united to the same organized body. Locke.

2. Present state; as distinct from other parts of human existence.

O life, thou nothing's younger brother!

So like, that we may take the one for t'other!

Dream of a shadow! a reflection made

From the false glories of the gay reflected bow,

Is more a solid thing than thou!

Thou weak built isthmus, that do'st proudly rise

Up betwixt two eternities:

Yet canst not wave nor wind sustain,

But, broken and o'erwhelm'd, the ocean meets again. Cowley.

When I consider life 'tis all a cheat,

Yet fool'd by hope men favour the deceit,

Live on, and think to-morrow will repay;

To-morrow's falser than the former day;

Lies more; and when it says we shall be blest

With some new joy, takes off what we possess.

Swiss cozenage! none would live past years again. Dryden.

Yet all hope pleasure in what yet remain;

And from the dregs of life think to receive

What the first sprightly running could not give:

I'm tir'd of waiting for this chemick gold,

Which fools us young, and beggars us when old. Dryden.

Howe'er 'tis well that while mankind

Through life's perverse meanders errs,

He can imagin'd pleasures find,

To combat against real cares. Prior.

So peaceful shalt thou end thy blissful days,

And steal thyself from life by slow decays. Pope.

3. Enjoyment, or possession of existence, as opposed to death.

Then avarice gan through his veins to inspire

His greedy flames, and kindle life devouring fire. Spenser, F. Q.

His plot is to have my life:

And, if my death might make this island happy,

And prove the period of their tyranny,

I would expend it with all willingness. Shakspeare.

Nor love thy life nor hate; but what thou liv'st

Live well, how long or short permit to heaven. Milton, P. L.

He entreated me not to take his life, but exact a sum of money. Broome on the Odyssey.

4. Blood, the supposed vehicle of life.

His gushing entrails smok'd upon the ground,

And the warm life came issuing through the wound. Pope.

5. Conduct; manner of living with respect to virtue or vice.

His faith perhaps in some nice tenets might

Be wrong, his life I'm sure was in the right. Cowley.

Henry and Edward, brightest sons of fame,

And virtuous Alfred, a more sacred name;

After a life of glorious toils endur'd,
 Clos'd their long glories with a sigh. Pope.
 I'll teach my family to lead good lives. Mrs. Barber.

6. Condition; manner of living with respect to happiness and misery.

Such was the life the frugal Sabines led;
 So Remus and his brother god were bred. Dryden, Virg.

7. Continuance of our present state: as, half his life was spent in study.

Some have not any clear ideas all their lives. Locke.

Untam'd and fierce the tyger still remains,

And tires his life with biting on his chains. Prior.

The administration of this bank is for life, and partly in the hands of the chief citizens. Addison on Italy.

8. The living form: opposed to copies.

That is the best part of beauty which a picture cannot express, no, nor the first sight of the life. Bacon, Ess.

Let him visit eminent persons of great name abroad, that he may tell how the life agreeth with the fame. Bacon.

He that would be a master, must draw by the life as well as copy from originals, and join theory and experience together. Collier of the Entertainment of Books.

9. Exact resemblance: with to before it.

I believe no character of any person was ever better drawn to the life than this. Denham.

Rich carvings, portraiture, and imagery,

Where ev'ry figure to the life express'd

The godhead's power. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

He saw in order painted on the wall

The wars that fame around the world had blown,

All to the life, and ev'ry leader known. Dryden, Æn.

10. General state of man.

Studious they appear

Of arts that polish life; inventors rare!

Unmindful of their Maker. Milton, P. L.

All that cheers or softens life,

The tender sister, daughter, friend, and wife. Pope.

11. Common occurrences; human affairs; the course of things.

This I know, not only by reading of books in my study, but also by experience of life abroad in the world. Ascham.

Not to know at large of things remote

From use, obscure and subtle; but to know

That which before us lies in daily life,

Is the prime wisdom. Milton, P. L.

12. Living person.

Why should I play the Roman fool, and die

On my own sword? whilst I see lives the gashes

Do better upon them. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

13. Narrative of a life past.

Plutarch, that writes his life,

Tells us, that Cato dearly lov'd his wife. Pope.

14. Spirit; briskness; vivacity; resolution.

The Helots bent thitherward with a new life of resolution, as if their captain had been a root out of which their courage had sprung. Sidney.

They have no notion of life and fire in fancy and in words; and any thing that is just in grammar and in measure is as good oratory and poetry to them as the best. Felton.

Not with half the fire and life,

With which he kiss'd Amphytroon's wife. Prior.

15. Animal, animated existence; animal being.

Full nature swarms with life. Thomson.

16. System of animal nature.

Lives through all life. Pope.

17. Life is also used of vegetables, and whatever grows and decays.

LIFEBLOOD. n. s. [life and blood.] The blood necessary to life; the vital blood.

This sickness doth infect
The very lifeblood of our enterprise.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

How could'st thou drain the lifeblood of the child?

Shakespeare.

His forehead struck the ground,
Lifeblood and life rush'd mingled through the wound.

Dryden.

They loved with that calm and noble value which dwells in the heart, with a warmth like that of lifeblood.

Spectator.

Money, the lifeblood of the nation,
Corrupts and stagnates in the veins,
Unless a proper circulation,
Its motion and its heat maintains.

Swift.

LIFEBLOOD.* adj. Necessary as the blood to life; vital; essential.

To set at nought and trample under foot all the most sacred and lifeblood laws, statutes, and acts of parliament. Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.

LIFEEVERLASTING. An herb. Ainsworth.

LIFEGIVING. adj. [life and giving.] Having the power to give life.

His own heat,

Kindled at first from heaven's lifegiving fire.

Spenser.

He sat devising death

To them who liv'd; nor on the virtue thought

Of that lifegiving plant. Milton, P. L.

LIFEGUARD. † n. s. [life and guard.] The guard of a king's person.

Such a noble and useful courage, as will render you a lifeguard to your prince, a wall and bulwark to your country, and make your famous artillery-ground a sanctuary to your city.

Scott, Sermon, before the Artill. Comp. (1680).

LIFELESS. † adj. [līplear, Saxon.]

1. Dead; deprived of life.

I who make the triumph of to-day,
May of to-morrow's pomp one part appear,
Ghastly with wounds, and lifeless on the bier. Prior.
2. Unanimous; void of life.

Was I to have never parted from thy side?

As good have grown there still a lifeless rill!

Milton, P. L.

Thus began

Outrage from lifeless things. Milton, P. L.

The power which produces their motions, springs from something without themselves: if this power were suspended, they would become a lifeless, unactive heap of matter.

Cheyne.

And empty words she gave, and sounding strain,
But senseless, lifeless! idol void and vain. Pope.

3. Wanting power, force, or spirit.

Hopeless and helpless doth Ægeon wend,
But to procrastinate his lifeless end. Shakespeare.

Unknown to command, proud to obey

A lifeless king, a royal shade I lay. Prior.

4. Wanting or deprived of physical energy.

The other victor-flame a moment stood,

Then fell, and lifeless left th' extinguish'd wood.

Dryden.

LIFELESSLY. adv. [from lifeless.] Without vigour; frigidly; jejunely.

LIFELIKE. adj. [life and like.] Like a living person.

Minerva, lifelike, on embodied air

Impress'd the form of Iphemia fair.

Pope, Odys.

LIFESTRING. n. s. [life and string.] Nerve; strings imagined to convey life.

These lines are the veins, the arteries,
The undecaying lifestrings of those hearts

That still shall pant, and still shall exercise

The motion spirit and nature both impart. Daniel.

LIFETIME. n. s. [life and time.] Continuance or duration of life.

Jordain talked prose all his life-time, without knowing what it was. Addison on Medals.

LIFEWEARY. adj. [life and weary.] Wretched; tired of living.

Let me have

A dram of poison, such soon speeding gear
As will disperse itself through all the veins,
That the life-weary taker may fall dead. Shakespeare.

To LIFT. † v. a. I lifted, or lift; I have lifted, or lift. [lyfta, Swedish; loffter, Danish; levo, Latin, to lift or hold up; hence a lever, that which lifts up: but perhaps our word may be referred to the Sax. lyft, the air. See also LOFT, and ALOFT.]

1. To raise from the ground; to heave; to elevate; to hold on high.

Filial ingratitude!

Is it not as this mouth should tear this hand

For lifting food to't? Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Your guests are coming;

Lift up your countenance, as 'twere the day

Of celebration of that nuptial.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Propp'd by the spring, it lifts aloft the head,

But of a sickly beauty soon to shed,

In summer living, and in winter dead. Dryden.

2. To bear; to support. Not in use.

So down he fell, that th' earth him underneath

Did groan, as feeble so great load to lift.

Spenser, F. Q.

3. To rob; to plunder. Whence the term shoplifter. [hlifstus, Gothick, a thief. See also the neuter verb, and the substantive LIFTER.]

So weary bees in little cells repose,

But if night robbers lift the well-stor'd hive,

An humming through their waxen city grows.

Dryden.

4. To exalt; to elevate mentally.

His heart was lift up in the ways of the Lord.

2 Chron.

Of Orpheus now no more let poets tell,

To bright Cæcilia greater pow'r is given,

His numbers rais'd a shade from hell,

Hers lift the soul to heaven. Pope.

5. To raise in fortune.

The eye of the Lord lifted up his head from misery. Ecclesi.

6. To raise in estimation.

Neither can it be thought, because some lessons are chosen out of the Apocrypha, that we do offer disgrace to the word of God, or lift up the writings of men above it. Hooker.

7. To exalt in dignity.

See to what a godlike height

The Roman virtues lift up mortal man!

Addison, Cato.

8. To elevate; to swell, as with pride.

Lifted up with pride. Tim. iii. 6.

Our successes have been great, and our hearts have been too much lifted up by them, so that we have reason to humble ourselves. Atterbury.

9. Up is sometimes emphatically added to lift.

He lift up his spear against eight hundred,

whom he slew at one time. 2 Sam. xxiii. 8.

Arise, lift up the lad, and hold him in thine hand. Genesis.

To LIFT. † v. n.

1. To strive to raise by strength.

Pinch cattle of pasture while summer doth last,

And lift at their tails ere a winter be past. Tusser.

The mind, by being engaged in a task beyond its strength, like the body strained by lifting at a weight too heavy, has often its force broken.

Locke.

2. To practise theft.

One other peculiar virtue you possess, in lifting, or legier-du-main! B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

LIFT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The manner of lifting.

In the lift of the feet, when a man goeth up the hill, the weight of the body beareth most upon the knees.

Bacon.

In races, it is not the large stride, or high lift, that makes the speed.

Bacon, Ess.

2. The act of lifting.

The goat gives the fox a lift, and out he springs.

L'Estrange.

3. Effort; struggle. Dead lift is an effort to raise what with the whole force cannot be moved; and figuratively any state of impotence and inability.

Myself and Trulla made a shift

To help him out at a dead lift. Hudibras.

Mr. Doctor had puzzled his brains

In making a ballad, but was at a stand:

And you freely must own, you were at a dead lift.

Swift.

4. Lift, in Scotland, denotes a load or surcharge of any thing; as also, if one be disguised much with liquor, they say, He has got a great lift.

5. [In Scottish.] The sky; for in a starry night they say, How clear the lift is!

6. Lifts of a sail are ropes to raise or lower them at pleasure.

LIFTER. † n. s. [from lift.]

1. One that lifts.

Thou, O Lord, art my glory, and the lifter up of mine head. Psal. iii. 3.

2. One that lifts with a lever. Huloet.

3. A thief. See the third sense of the verb active LIFT.

Broker or pander, cheater or lifter.

Holland's Leaguer, (1633).

LIFTING.* n. s. [from lift.] The act of lifting; assistance.

I cannot forbear doing that author the justice of my publick acknowledgements for the great helps, and liftings, I had out of his incomparable piece, while I was penning this treatise.

Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 5.

To LIG. † v. n. [Goth. ligan, Sax. licgan, hgan, Germ. lügen, Dan. ligge, Dutch, liggen.] To lie. Still used in our northern counties.

What hounds liggen on the floor adoun.

Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

Thou kenst the great care

I have of thy health and thy welfare,

Which many wild beasts liggen in wait

For to entrap in thy tender state.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Vowing that never he in bed againe

His limbs would rest, ne lig in ease embost,

Till that his lady's sight he mote attaine.

Spenser, F. Q.

LIGAMENT. n. s. [ligamentum, from ligo, Latin; ligament, French.]

1. Ligament is a white and solid body, softer than a cartilage, but harder than a membrane; they have no conspicuous cavities, neither have they any sense, lest they should suffer upon the motion of the joint: their chief use is to fasten the bones, which are articulated together for motion, lest they should be dislocated with exercise. Quincy.

Be all their ligaments at once unbound,

And their disjointed bones to powder ground.

Sandys.

The incus is one way joined to the malleus, the other end being a process is fixed with a ligament to the stapes. Holder.

2. [In popular or poetical language.] Any thing which connects the parts of the body.

Though our ligaments betimes grow weak,
We must not force them till themselves they break. Denham.

3. Bond; chain; entanglement.

Men sometimes, upon the hour of departure, do speak and reason above themselves; for then the soul, beginning to be freed from the ligaments of the body, reasons like herself, and discourses in a strain above mortality. Addison, Spect.

LIGAMENTAL. } n. s. [from ligament.]

LIGAMENTOUS. } Composing a ligament.

The urachos or ligamental passage is derived from the bottom of the bladder, whereby it discharge the watery and urinary part of its alimen-
t. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The clavicle is inserted into the first bone of the sternon, and bound in by a strong ligamentous membrane. Wiseman.

LIGATION.† n. s. [ligatio, Latin.]

1. The act of binding.

2. The state of being bound.

This ligation of senses proceeds from an inhibition of spirits, the way being stopped by which they should come. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 24.

There is a peculiar religion attends friendship;
there is, according to the etymology of the word,
a ligation and solemn tie, the rescinding whereof may be truly called a schism. Howell, Lett. ii. 46.

Sleep, if perfect and sound, is the ligation of all the senses. Smith on Old Age, p. 101.

The slumber of the body seems to be but the waking of the soul: it is the ligation of sense, but the liberty of reason. Addison.

LIGATURE. n. s. [ligature, French; liga-tura, Latin.]

1. Any thing tied round another; bandage.

He deludeth us also by philters, ligatures, charms, and many superstitious ways in the cure of diseases. Brown.

If you slit the artery, and thrust into it a pipe, and cast a strait ligature upon that part of the artery; notwithstanding the blood hath free passage through the pipe, yet will not the artery beat below the ligature; but do but take off the ligature, it will beat immediately. Ray on Creation.

The many ligatures of our English dress check the circulation of the blood. Spectator.

I found my arms and legs very strongly fastened on each side to the ground; I likewise felt several slender ligatures across my body, from my arm-pits to my thighs. Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

2. The act of binding.

The fatal noose performed its office, and with most strict ligature squeezed the blood into his face. Arbutnot on Diet.

Any stoppage of the circulation will produce a dropsy, as by strong ligature or compression.

3. The state of being bound. Not very proper.

Sand and gravel grounds easily admit of heat and moisture, for which they are not much the better, because they let it pass too soon, and contract no ligature. Mortimer, Husbandry.

LIGHT.† n. s. [leohc. Sax. from leohtan, to light, viz. the third person singular, leohð. Mr. H. Tooke. But it is the Goth. liuhath, or liuhats, whence also the Germ. lioh, Dutch, licht, and the Sax. liht, leohc. Serenius notices the Icel. light, likt; and deduces it from hloa, to shine.]

1. That material medium of sight; that body by which we see; luminous matter.

Light is propagated from luminous bodies in time, and spends about seven or eight minutes of an hour in passing from the sun to the earth.

Newton, Opticks.

2. State of the elements, in which things become visible: opposed to darkness.

God called the light day; and the darkness he called night. Genesis.

So alike thou driv'st away

Light and darkness, night and day. Carew.

3. Power of perceiving external objects by the eye: opposed to blindness.

My strength faileth me; as for the light of mine eyes, it also is gone from me. Psalms.

If it be true

That light is in the soul,
She all in every part; why was the sight
To such a tender ball as the eye contain'd,
So obvious and so easy to be quencht;
And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,
That she might look at will through every pore.
Milton, S. A.

4. Day.

The murderer rising with the light killeth the poor. Job.

Ere the third dawning light

Return, the stars of morn shall see him rise
Out of his grave, fresh as the dawning light.
Milton, P. L.

5. Life.

Infants that never saw light. Job.
Swift roll the years, and rise the expected morn,
O spring to light, auspicious babe be born! Pope.

6. Artificial illumination.

Seven lamps shall give light. Numbers.

7. Illumination of mind; instruction;
knowledge.

Of those things which are for direction of all the parts of our life needful, and not impossible to be discerned by the light of nature itself, are there not many which few men's natural capacity hath been able to find out? Hooker.

Light may be taken from the experiment of the horse-tooth ring, how that those things which assuage the strife of the spirits, do help diseases contrary to the intention desired. Bacon, Nat. His.

I will place within them as a guide
My umpire conscience, whom if they will hear
Light after light well us'd they shall attain,
And to the end persisting safe arrive. Milton, P. L.
I opened Ariosto in Italian, and the very first two lines gave me light to all I could desire.
Dryden.

If internal light, or any proposition which we take for inspired, be conformable to the principles of reason, or to the word of God, which is attested revelation, reason warrants it. Locke.

The ordinary words of language, and our common use of them, would have given us light into the nature of our ideas, if considered with attention. Locke.

The books of Varro concerning navigation are lost, which no doubt would have given us great light in those matters. Arbutnot on Coins.

8. The part of a picture which is drawn with bright colours, or in which the light is supposed to fall.

Never admit two equal lights in the same picture; but the greater light must strike forcibly on those places of the picture where the principal figures are; diminishing as it comes nearer the borders. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

9. Reach of knowledge; mental view.

Light, and understanding, and wisdom, like the wisdom of the gods, was found in him.

Dan. v. 11.

We saw as it were thick clouds, which did put us in some hope of land, knowing how that part of the South Sea was utterly unknown, and might have islands or continents that hitherto were not come to light. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

They have brought to light not a few profitable experiments. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

10. Point of view; situation; direction in which the light falls.

Frequent consideration of a thing wears off the strangeness of it; and shews it in its several lights, and various ways of appearance, to the view of the mind. South.

It is impossible for a man of the greatest parts to consider any thing in its whole extent, and in all its variety of lights. Spectator.

An author who has not learned the art of ranging his thoughts, and setting them in proper lights, will lose himself in confusion.

Addison, Spectator.

11. Publick view; publick notice.

Why am I ask'd what next shall see the light;
Heavens! was I born for nothing but to write?
Pope.

12. The publick.

Grave epistles bringing vice to light,
Such as a king might read, a bishop write. Pope.

13. Explanation.

I have endeavour'd throughout this discourse, that every former part might give strength unto all that follow, and every latter bring some light unto all before. Hooker.

We should compare places of Scripture treating of the same point: thus one part of the sacred text could not fail to give light unto another.

Locke, Ess. on St. Paul's Epistles.

14. Any thing that gives light; a pharos;
a taper; any luminous body.

That light we see is burning in my hall;
How far that little candle throws his beams,
So shines a good deed in a naughty world.
Shakespeare.

Then he called for a light, and sprang in,
and fell down before Paul. Acts, xvi. 29.

I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, for salvation unto the ends of the earth. Acts, xiii. 47.

Let them be for signs,
For seasons, and for days, and circling years;
And let them be for lights, as I ordain
Their office in the firmament of heaven,
To give light on the earth. Milton, P. L.

I put as great difference between our new lights and ancient truths, as between the sun and a meteor. Glauville.

Several lights will not be seen,
If there be nothing else between;
Men doubt because they stand so thick i' the sky,
If those be stars that paint the galaxy. Cowley.

I will make some offers at their safety, by fixing some marks like lights upon a coast, by which their ships may avoid at least known rocks.
Temple.

He still must mourn
The sun, and moon, and every starry light,
Eclips'd to him, and lost in everlasting night.
Prior.

LIGHT.† adj. [liht, Saxon.]

1. Not tending to the centre with great force; not heavy.

Hot and cold were in one body fixt,
And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt.
Dryden.

These weights did not exert their natural gravity till they were laid in the golden balance, inasmuch that I could not guess which was light or heavy whilst I held them in my hand.
Addison, Spect.

2. Not burdensome; easy to be worn, or carried, or lifted; not onerous.

Horse, oxen, plough, tumbrel, cart, waggon,
and wain,

The lighter and stronger the greater thy gain.
Tusser.

It will be light, that you may bear it
Under a cloak that is of any length. Shakespeare.
A king that would not feel his crown too heavy,
must wear it every day; but if he think it too light, he knoweth not of what metal it is made.

Bacon, Ess.

3. Not afflictive; easy to be endured.

Every light and common thing incident into any part of man's life. Hooker.
Light sufferings give us leisure to complain,
We groan, but cannot speak, in greater pain.

Dryden.

4. Easy to be performed; not difficult.

What is lighter to seye to the syk man in palsey, sinnes be forghivn to thee; or to seye, rise, take thy bed and walke?

Wicliffe, St. Mark, ii.

Well pleas'd were all his friends, the task was light,
The father, mother, daughter, they invite.

Dryden.

5. Easy to be acted on by any power.

Apples of a ripe flavour, fresh and fair,
Mellow'd by winter from their cruder juice,
Light of digestion now, and fit for use.

Dryden, Juv.

6. Not heavily armed.

Paulus Bachitius, with a company of light horsemen, lay close in ambush, in a convenient place for that purpose. Knolles.

7. Active; nimble.

He so light was at legerdmain,
That what he touch'd came not to light again.

Spenser.

Asahel was as light of foot as a wild roe.

2 Sam. ii. 18.

There Stamford came, for his honour was lame
Of the gout three months together;
But it prov'd, when they fought, but a running gout,

Denham.

For heels were lighter than ever.
Youths, a blooming band;
Light bounding from the earth at once they rise,
Their feet half viewless quiver in the skies.

Pope, Odys.

8. Unencumbered; unembarrassed; clear of impediments.

Unmarried men are best masters, but not best subjects; for they are light to run away. Bacon.

9. Slight; not great.

A light error in the manner of making the following trials was enough to render some of them unsuccessful. Boyle.

10. Not dense; not gross.

In the wilderness there is no bread, nor water,
and our soul loatheth this light bread.

Numb. xxi. 5.

Light fumes are merry, grosser fumes are sad,
Both are the reasonable soul run mad. Dryden.

11. Easy to admit any influence; unsteady; unsettled; loose.

False of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand.
Shakespeare.
These light vain persons still are drunk and mad

With surfeitings, and pleasures of their youth.

Davies.

They are light of belief, great listeners after news.

There is no greater argument of a light and inconsiderate person, than profanely to scoff at religion. Tillotson.

12. Gay; airy; wanting dignity or solidity; trifling.

Seneca cannot be too heavy, nor Plautus too light. Shakespeare.

Forgive

If fictions light I mix with truth divine,
And fill these lines with other praise than thine.
Fairfax.

13. Not chaste; not regular in conduct.

Let me not be light,
For a light wife doth make a heavy husband.

Shakespeare.

I have spent some evenings among the men of wit of that profession [the clergy] with an inexpressible delight. Their habitual care of their character gives such a chastisement to their fancy, that all which they utter in company is as much above what you meet with in other conversation, as the charms of a modest are superior to those of a light woman. Tatler, No. 270.

14. [From light, n. s.] Bright; clear.

As soon as the morning was light, the men were sent away. Gen. xlv. 3.

The horses ran up and down with their tails and mains on a light fire. Knolles.

15. Not dark; tending to whiteness.

In painting the light and a white colour are but one and the same thing: no colour more resembles the air than white, and by consequence no colour which is lighter. Dryden.

Two cylindric bodies with annular sulci, found with sharks' teeth, and other shells, in a light coloured clay. Woodward.

LIGHT, adv. [for lightly, by colloquial corruption.] Lightly; cheaply.

Shall we set light by that custom of readings, from whence so precious a benefit hath grown?

Hooker.

To LIGHT,† v. a. [from light, n. s.] pret.
and part. lighted, light, and lit. "This verb in the past time and participle is pronounced short, light or lit: but the regular form is preferable, and prevails most in writing." Lowth, Eng. Gram.
See LIT.

1. To kindle; to enflame; to set on fire; to make flame.

Swinging coals about in the wire, thoroughly lighted them. Boyle.

This truth shines so clear, that to go about to prove it were to light a candle to seek the sun.

Glanville.

The same candle that refreshes when it is first light, smells and offends when it is going out.

South, Sermon vii. 298.

The maids, who waited her commands,
Ran in with lighted tapers in their hands. Dryden.

Be witness, gods, and strike Jocaster dead,
If an immodest thought or low desire,
Inflam'd my breast since first our loves were lighted. Dryden.

Absence might cure it, or a second mistress
Light up another flame, and put out this.

Addison, Cato.

2. To give light to; to guide by light.

A beam that falls,
Fresh from the pure glance of thine eye,
Lighting to eternity. Crashaw.

Ah hopeless, lasting flames! like those that burn

To light the dead, and warm the unfruitful urn.

Pope.

3. To illuminate; to fill with light.

The sun was set, and vesper to supply
His absent beams, had lighted up the sky. Dryden.

4. Up is emphatically joined to light.

No sun was lighted up the world to view.

Dryden, Ovid.

And light this weary vessel of her load.

Spenser, F. Q.

To LIGHT, v. n. pret. lighted, or light, or lit. [licht, chance, Dutch.]

1. To happen to find; to fall upon by chance; it has on before the thing found.

No more settled in valour than disposed to justice, if either they had lighted on a better friend, or could have learned to make friendship a child,
and not the father of virtue. Sidney.

The prince, by chance, did on a lady light,
That was right fair and fresh as morning rose.

Spenser.

Haply, your eye shall light upon some toy
You have desire to purchase. Shakespeare.

As in the tides of people once up, there want not stirring wings to make them more rough; so this people did light upon two ringleaders.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Of late years, the royal oak did light upon count Rhodophil. Howell, Voc. For.

The way of producing such a change on colours may be easily enough lighted on, by those conversant in the solutions of mercury.

Boyle on Colours.

He sought by arguments to sooth her pain;
Nor those avail'd: at length he lights on one,
Before two moons their orb with light adorn,
If heaven allow me life, I will return. Dryden.

Truth light upon this way, is of no more avail to us than error; for what is so taken up by us, may be false as well as true; and he has not done his duty, who has thus stumbled upon truth in his way to preferment. Locke.

Whosoever first lit on a parcel of that substance
we call gold, could not rationally take the bulk and figure to depend on its real essence. Locke.

As wily reynard walk'd the streets at night,
On a tragedian's mask he chanc'd to light,
Turning it o'er, he mutter'd with disdain,
How vast a head is here without a brain!

Addison.

A weaker man may sometimes light on notions which have escaped a wiser. Watts on the Mind

2. To fall in any particular direction: with on.

The wounded steed curvets: and, rais'd upright,

Lights on his feet before: his hoofs behind
Spring up in air aloft, and lash the wind.

Dryden, Æn.

3. To fall; to strike on: with on.

He at his foe with furious rigour smites,
That strongest oak might seem to overthrow;
The stroke upon his shield so heavy lights,
That to the ground it doubleth him full low.

Spenser.

At an uncertain lot none can find themselves grieved on whomsoever it lighteth. Hooker.

They shall hunger no more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. Rev. vii. 16.

On me, me only, as the source and spring
Of all corruption, all the blame lights due.

Milton, P. L.

A curse lights upon him presently after: his great army is utterly ruined, he himself slain in it, and his head and right hand cut off, and hung up before Jerusalem. South.

4. [alightan, Sax.] To descend from a horse or carriage.

When Naman saw him running after him, he lighted down from the chariot to meet him.

2 Kings, v. 21.

Beheld them when they lighted, how they clung
In their embracement. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Rebekah lifted up her eyes, and when she saw
Isaac, she lighted off the camel. Gen. xxiv. 64.

The god laid down his feeble rays,
Then lighted from his glittering coach. Swift.

5. To settle; to rest; to stoop from flight.

I plac'd a quire of such enticing birds,
That she will light to listen to their lays.

Shakespeare.

Then as a bee which among weeds doth fall,
Which seem sweet flowers, with lustre fresh and
gay,

She lights on that, and this, and tasteth all,
But pleas'd with none, doth rise and soar away.

Davies.

Plant trees and shrubs near home, for bees to pitch on at their swarming, that they may not be in danger of being lost for want of a lighting place.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

LIGHT-A'RMED.* adj. [light and armed.]
Not heavily armed.

They around the flag
Of each his faction, in their several clans, Light-arm'd or heavy, sharp, smooth, swift, or slow,
Swarm populous.

Milton, P. L.

LIGHT-BE'ARER.* n. s. [light and bearer.]
A torch-bearer.

The masquers were twelve nymphs, &c. attended by so many of the Oceanic, which were their torch-bearers.

B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

LIGHTBRAIN.* n. s. [light and brain.] A trifling, empty-headed person.

Being, as some were, light-braines, runnagates,
unthrifles, and riotours.

Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554), L l. iii.

To LIGHTEN.† v. n. [lhtan, Saxon; hit
lht, it, lightens.]

1. To flash, with thunder.

This dreadful night,
That thunders, lightens, opens graves, and roars,
As doth the lion. Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.
Although I joy in thee,
I have no joy of this contract to-night;
It is too rash, too unadvis'd, too sudden,
Too like the light'ning, which doth cease to be Ere one can say it lightens.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

The lightning that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, sheweth unto the other part.

St. Luke, xvii. 24.

2. To shine like lightning.

3. Figuratively, to dart out words with vehemence; as to thunder is to emit them with noise and terrour. Of this usage of lighten Dr. Johnson takes no notice. ἡστραπτήν, ἐξβόρτα, ἐκκενέουσα
τῆς ἑλλάδας.

Now then, my lords, upon these frail and weak foundations they come to build the sentence of their proscription: and here they lay out all their tragic eloque; they thunder, they lighten, they storm and rage!

Apol. or Def. of the P. of Orange, (1581), sign. N.4.b.

4. To fall; to light. [from light.]

O Lord, let thy mercy lighten upon us, as we do put our trust in thee.

Common Prayer.

To LIGHTEN.† v. a. [lhtan, lyhtan, Sax.]

1. To illuminate; to enlighten.

Upon his bloody finger he doth wear
A precious ring, that lightens all the hole. Shaks.
Thou art my lamp, O Lord: and the Lord will lighten my darkness. 2 Sam. xxii. 29.

Lighten our darkness, we beseech thee, O Lord.

Common Prayer.

O light, which mak'st the light which makes the
day,

Which set'st the eye without, and mind within;
Lighten my spirit with one clear heavenly ray,
Which now to view itself doth first begin. Davies.
A key of fire ran all along the shore,
And lighten'd all the river with a blaze.

Dryden.

Shines out afresh; and through the lighten'd air
A higher lustre, and a clearer calm,
Diffusive tremble.

Thomson, Summer.

2. To dart like lightning.

Yet looks he like a king: behold his eye,
As bright as is the eagle's, lightens forth
Controlling majesty.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

3. To exonerate; to unload. [from light, adj.]

The mariners were afraid, and cast forth the wares that were in the ship into the sea, to lighten
it of them. Jon. i. 7.

4. To make less heavy.

Long since with woe
Nearer acquainted, now I feel, by proof,
That fellowship in pain divides not smart,
Nor lightens aught each man's peculiar load.

Milton, P. R.

Strive
In offices of love how we may lighten
Each other's burden.

Milton, P. L.

5. To exhilarate; to cheer.

A trusty villain, very oft,
When I am dull with care and melancholy,
Lightens my humour with his merry jest. Shaks.
The audience are grown weary of continued melancholy scenes; and few tragedies shall succeed in this age, if they are not lightened with a course of mirth. Dryden.

LIGHTER.† n. s. [from light, to make light.] Dr. Johnson. — It is probably from the Saxon, lit, a vessel, a ship;
whence litman, a shipman: litmen of Lunbene, Chron. Saxon; shipmen of London. Dr. Johnson defines the word merely as "a heavy boat into which ships are lightened or unloaded."

1. A large open vessel, usually managed with oars; a kind of barge: common on the river Thames, and employed to convey goods to or from a ship; and usually to carry ballast.

They have cockboats for passengers, and lighters for burthen. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.
He climb'd a stranded lighter's height,
Shot to the black abyss, and plung'd downright.

Pope.

2. [from light.] One who communicates light; as, a lamp-lighter.

'Tis sweet to view from half past five to six,
Our long wax candles, with short cotton wicks,
Touch'd by the lamp-lighter's Promethean art,
Start into light, and make the lighter start!

Rejected Addresses.

LIGHTERMAN. n. s. [lighter and man.]
One who manages a lighter.

Where much shipping is employed, whatever becomes of the merchant, multitudes of people will be gainers; as shipwrights, butchers, carmen, and lightermen.

Child.

LIGHTFINGERED. adj. [light and finger.]
Nimble at conveyance; thievish.

LIGHTFOOT.† adj. [light and foot.] Nimble in running or dancing; active.

Him so far had born his lightfoot steed,
Pricked with wrath and fiery horse disdain,
That him to follow was but fruitless pain. Spenser.
And all the troop of lightfoot Naiades
Flock all about to see her lovely face. Spenser.
Why, you think I can run like light-foot Ralph.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.

LIGHTFOOT. n. s. Venison. A cant word.
LIGHTFOOTED.* adj. [from lightfoot.]
Nimble in running.

Wood-nymphs mixt with her light-footed Fauns.
Drayton, Polyolb. S. 11.

To say nothing how excellent he is at the swimming any water, and how he can tread the very air, he is so high-mettled and light-footed!

More, Ant. against Idolatry, Pref.

LIGHTHEADED.† adj. [light and head.]

1. Unsteady; loose; thoughtless; weak.
The English Liturgy, how piously and wisely soever framed, had found great opposition; the ceremonies had wrought only upon lightheaded, weak men, yet learned men excepted against some particulars.

Clarendon.

2. Delirious; disordered in the mind by disease.

When Belvidera talks of "lutes, laurels, seas of milk, and ships of amber," she is not mad, but light-headed.

Walpole.

LIGHTHEADEDNESS. n. s. Deliriousness; disorder of the mind.

LIGHTHEARTED. adj. [light and heart.]
Gay; merry; airy; cheerful.

LIGHTHOUSE. n. s. [light and house.] An high building, at the top of which lights are hung to guide ships at sea.

He charged himself with the risque of such vessels as carried corn in winter; and built a pharos or lighthouse.

Arbutnot.

Build two poles to the meridian, with immense lighthouses on the top of them. Arbutnot and Pope.

LIGHTLEGGED. adj. [light and leg.] Nimble;
swift.

Lightlegged Pas has got the middle space.

Sidney.

LIGHTLESS.† adj. [from light.] Wanting light; dark.

The lightless fire,
Which, in pale embers hid, lurks to aspire.

Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

LIGHTLY.† adj. [from light.]
1. Without weight.

This grave partakes the fleshly birth,
Which cover lightly, gentle earth.

B. Jonson.

2. Without deep impression.
The soft ideas of the cheerful note,
Lightly receiv'd, were easily forgot.

Prior.

3. Easily; readily; without difficulty; of course; commonly.

At many seasons in the yere, lightly every thyre daye.

Bp. Fisher, Serm. 7.

If they write or speak publicly but five words, one of them is lightly about the dangerous estate of the church of England in respect of abused ceremonies.

Hooker.

Believe't not lightly that your son
Will not exceed the common, or be caught
With cautious baits and practice.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

Short summers lightly have a forward spring.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

4. Without reason.
Flatter not the rich; neither do thou willingly or lightly appear before great personages.

Bp. Taylor, Guide.

Let every man that hath a calling be diligent in pursuance of its employment, so as not lightly, or without reasonable caution, to neglect it.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

5. Without dejection; cheerfully.

With such solace the travel and weariness of pilgrims is lightly and merrily borne out.

Fox, Acts and Mon. of W. Thorpe.

Bid that welcome
Which comes to punish us, and we punish it,
Seeming to bear it lightly.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

6. Not chastely.

If I were lightly disposed, I could still perhaps have offers, that some, who hold their heads higher, would be glad to accept.

Swift, Story of an injured Lady.

7. Nimble; with agility; not heavily or tardily.

I beheld the mountains, and lo, they trembled;
and all the hills moved lightly.

Jerem. iv. 24.

Methought I stood on a wide river's bank;
When on a sudden Torismond appear'd,
Gave me his hand, and led me lightly o'er;

Leaping and bounding on the billows' heads,
Till safely we had reach'd the farther shore.

Dryden.

8. Gaily; airily; with levity; without heed or care.

Matrimony — is not by to be taken in hand unadvisedly, lightly, or wantonly. Common Prayer.

- LIGHTMINDED. adj. [light and mind.] Unsettled; hasty.

He that is busy to give credit is lightminded.
Eccl. xix. 4.

- LIGHTNESS. n. s. [from light.]

1. Want of weight; absence of weight: the contrary to heaviness.

Some are for masts of ships, as fir and pine, because of their length, straightness, and lightness.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Suppose many degrees of littleness and lightness in particles, so as many might float in the air a good while before they fell. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

2. Inconstancy; unsteadiness.

For, unto knight there is no greater shame,
Than lightness and inconstancy in love.

Spenser, F. Q.

Of two things they must chuse one; namely, whether they would, to their endless disgrace, with ridiculous lightness, dismiss him, whose restitution they had in so importunate manner desired, or else condescend unto that demand.
Hooker.

As I blow this feather from my face,
Obeying with my wind when I do blow,
And yielding to another when it blows,
Commanded always by the greatest gust;
Such is the lightness of you common men. Shaks.

3. Unchastity; want of conduct in women.

Is it the disdain of my estate, or the opinion of my lightness, that emboldened such base fancies towards me?
Sidney.

Can it be,

That modesty may more betray our sense,
Than woman's lightness? Shaks. Meas. for Meas.

4. Agility; nimbleness.

- LIGHTNING. n. s. [from lighten, lightening, lightning.]

1. The flash that attends thunder.

Lightning is a great flame, very bright, extending every way to a great distance, suddenly darting upwards, and then ending, so that it is only momentaneous.

Muschenbroek.

Sense thinks the lightning born before the thunder;

What tells us then they both together are? Davies.

Salmonoeus, suffering cruel pains, I found
For emulating Jove; the rattling sound
Of mimic thunder, and the glittering blaze
Of pointed lightnings, and their forked rays.

Dryden, Æn.

No warning of the approach of flame,
Swiftly, like sudden death, it came;
Like travellers by lightning kill'd,
I burnt the moment I beheld.

Granville.

2. Mitigation; abatement. [from to lighten, to make less heavy.]

How oft, when men are at the point of death,
Have they been merry! which their keepers call'd
A lightning before death. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

We were once in hopes of his recovery, upon a kind message from the widow; but this only proved a lightning before death.
Addison, Spect.

- LIGHTS. n. s. [supposed to be called so from their lightness in proportion to their bulk.] The lungs; the organs of breathing; we say, lights of other animals, and lungs of men.

The complaint was chiefly from the lights, a part as of no quick sense, so no seat for any sharp disease.
Hayward.

- LIGHTSOME. adj. [from light.]

1. Luminous; not dark; not obscure; not opaque.

Neither the sun, nor any thing sensible is that light itself, which is the cause that things are lightsome, though it make itself, and all things else, visible; but a body most enlightened by whom the neighbouring region, which the Greeks call æther, the place of the supposed element of fire, is affected and qualified.
Raleigh.

White walls make rooms more lightsome than black.
Bacon.

Equal posture, and quick spirits, are required to make colours lightsome.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The sun

His course exalted through the Ram had run,
Through Taurus and the lightsome realms of love.

Dryden.

2. Gay; airy; having the power to exhilarate.

It suiteth so fitly with that lightsome affection of joy wherein God delighteth when his saints praise him.
Hooker.

The lightsome passion of joy was not that which now often usurps the name; that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension, and plays upon the surface of the soul.
South.

- LIGHTSOMENESS. n. s. [from lightsome.]

1. Luminousness; not opacity; not obscurity; not darknessomeness.

It is to our atmosphere that the variety of colours, which are painted on the skies, the lightsomeness of our air, and the twilight, are owing.
Cheyne, Philos. Prin.

2. Cheerfulness; merriment; levity.

- LIGNA'LOES. n. s. [lignum aloes, Latin.]

Aloes wood.
The vallies spread forth as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign-aloës which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the water.
Numb. xxiv. 6.

- LIGNEOUS. adj. [ligneus, Latin; ligneux, French.] Made of wood; wooden; resembling wood.

It should be tried with shoots of vines, and roots of red roses; for it may be they, being of a more ligneous nature, will incorporate with the tree itself.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Ten thousand seeds of the plant harts-tongue, hardly make the bulk of a pepper-corn; now the covers, and the true body of each seed, the parenchymous and ligneous part of both, and the fibres of those parts, multiplied one by another, afford a hundred thousand millions of formed atoms, but how many more we cannot define.
Grew.

- LIGNOUS. adj. [lignosus, Latin.] Of a woody substance.

By trees then is meant a lignous woody plant, &c.
Evelyn, b. i. ch. 2. § 9.

- LIGNUMVITÆ. n. s. [Latin.] Guaiacum: a very hard wood.

- LIGURE. n. s. A precious stone.

The third row a ligure, an agate, and an amethyst.
Exod. xxviii. 19.

- LIKE. A frequent termination of adjectives in our language, from the Saxon form of lic; as xoblic, mæbenlic, heofenlic, eopðhlic, i. e. godlike, maidenlike, heavenlike, earthlike; softened into the termination of ly, and denoting resemblance, viz. godly, maidenly, heavenly, earthly; and the like.

- LIKE.† adj. [lic, Saxon; lik, Dutch; lik, Su. Goth.]

1. Resembling; having resemblance.

Whom art thou like in thy greatness?
Ezek. xxxi. 2.

His son, or one of his illustrious name,
How like the former, and almost the same!

Dryden, Æn.

As the earth was designed for the being of men, why might not all other planets be created for the like uses, each for their own inhabitants? Bentley.
This plan, as laid down by him, looks like an universal art than a distinct logic.

Baker on Learning.

2. Equal; of the same quantity.

More clergymen were impoverished by the late war, than ever in the like space before.
Sprat.

3. [For likely.] Probable; credible.
The trials were made, and it is like that the experiment would have been effectual.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. Likely; in a state that gives probable expectations. This is, I think, an improper, though frequent, use.

If the duke continues these favours towards you, you are like to be much advanced.

Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

He is like to die for hunger, for there is no more bread.
Jer. xxxviii. 9.

The yearly value thereof is already increased double of that it was within these few years, and is like daily to rise higher till it amount to the price of our land in England.
Davies.

Hopton resolved to visit Waller's quarters, that he might judge whether he were like to pursue his purpose.
Clarendon.

Many were not easy to be governed, nor like to conform themselves to strict rules.
Clarendon.

If his rules of reason be not better suited to the mind than his rules for health are fitted to our bodies, he is not like to be much followed.

Baker on Learning.

- LIKE. n. s. [This substantive is seldom more than the adjective used elliptically; the like, for the like thing or like person.]

1. Some person or thing resembling another.

He was a man, take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Every like is not the same, O Cæsar. Shakspeare.
Though there have been greater fleets for number, yet for the bulk of the ships never the like.

Bacon, War with Spain.

Albeit an eagle did bear away a lamb in her talons, yet a raven endeavouring to do the like was held entangled.
Hayward.

One offers, and in offering makes a stay;

Another forward sets, and doth no more;

A third the like. Daniel, Civ. War.

His desire

By conversation with his like to help,

Or solace his defects.

Milton, P. L.

Two likes may be mistaken.

L'Estrange.

She'd study to reform the men,

Or add some grains of folly more,

To women than they had before;

This might their mutual fancy strike,

Since every being loves its like. Swift.

2. Used with had; near approach; a state like to another state. A sense common, but not just: perhaps had is a corruption for was.

Report being carried secretly from one to another in my ship, had like to have been my utter overthrow.
Raleigh.

- LIKE. adv.

1. In the same manner; in the same manner as: it is not always easy to determine whether it be adverb or adjective.

The joyous nymphs, and lightfoot fairies,
Which thither came to hear their musick sweet,
Now hearing them so heavily lament,
Like heavily lamenting from them went. Spenser.

Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. Psal. ciii. 13.
Are we proud and passionate, malicious and revengeful? Is this to be like-minded with Christ, who was meek and lowly? Tillotson.
What will be my confusion, when he sees me Neglected, and forsaken like himself? Philips.
They roar'd like lions caught in toils, and rag'd:
The man knew what they were, who heretofore
Had seen the like lie murder'd on the shore. Waller.

2. In such a manner as befits.
Be strong, and quit yourselves like men. 1 Sam. iv. 9.

3. Likely; probably. A popular use not analogical.
I like the work well, ere it be demanded,
As like enough it will, I'd have it copied. Shakspeare.

To LIKE.† v. a. [liccan, Saxon; liken, Dutch; lika, Su. Goth.]

1. To chuse with some degree of preference.
As nothing can be so reasonably spoken as to content all men, so this speech was not of them all liked. Knolles.
He gave such an account as made it appear that he liked the design. Clarendon.
We like our present circumstances well, and dream of no change. Atterbury.

2. To approve; to view with approbation, not fondness.
Though they did not like the evil he did, yet they liked him that did the evil. Sidney.
He grew content to mark their speeches, then to marvel at such wit in shepherds, after to like their company. Sidney.
He proceeded from looking to liking, and from liking to loving. Sidney.

- For several virtues
I have lik'd several women; never any
With so full soul. Shakspeare, Tempest.
I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye;
That lik'd, but had a rougher task in hand
Than to drive liking to the name of love. Shakspeare.

- Scarce any man passes to a liking of sin in others, but by first practising it himself. South.
Beasts can like, but not distinguish too,
Nor their own liking by reflection know. Dryden.

3. To please; to be agreeable to. Now disused.
Well hoped he, ere long that hardy guest,
If ever covetous hand, or lustful eye,
Or lips he laid on thing that lik'd him best,
Should be his prey. Spenser, F. Q.
Say, my fair brother now, if this device
Do like you, or may you to like entice. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

- This desire being recommended to her majesty, it lik'd her to include the same within one entire lease. Bacon.
He shall dwell where it liketh him best. Deut.
The musick likes you not. Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

- There let them learn, as likes them to despise
God and Messiah. Milton, P. L.

4. [From the adjective like.] To liken.
And like me to the peasant boys of France. Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. L.

- To LIKE.† v. n.

1. To be pleased with: with of before the thing approved. Obsolete, Dr. Johnson says; but he is mistaken in thinking it disused. Brockett, N. C. Words.

- Of any thing more than of God they could not by any means like, as long as whatsoever they knew besides God, they apprehended it not in itself without dependency upon God. Hooker.

The young soldiers did with such cheerfulness like of this resolution, that they thought two days a long delay. Knolles.

2. To chuse; to list; to be pleased.
The man likes not to take his brother's wife. Deut.

- He that has the prison doors set open is perfectly at liberty, because he may either go or stay, as he best likes. Locke.

- L'KELIHOOD.* } n. s. [from likely.]
L'KELINESS.

1. Appearance; shew. Obsolete.
What of his heart perceive you in his face,
By any likelihood he shew'd to-day?
— That with no man here he is offended. Shakspeare.

2. Resemblance; likeness. Obsolete.
The mayor and all his brethren in best sort,
Like to the senators of antique Rome,
Go forth and fetch their conqu'ring Caesar in.
As by a low, but loving likelihood,
Were now the general of our gracious empress,
As in good time he may, from Ireland coming,
How many would the peaceful city quit,
To welcome him. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

- There is no likelihood between pure light and black darkness, or between righteousness and reprobation. Ralegh.

3. Probability; verisimilitude; appearance of truth.
As it noteth one such to have been in that age, so had there been more, it would by likelihood as well have noted many. Hooker.

- Many of likelihood informed me of this before, which hung so tottering in the balance, that I could neither believe nor misdoct.

- Shakspeare, All's Well.*
It never yet did hurt,
To lay down likelihood, and forms of hope. Shakspeare.

- As there is no likelihood that the place could be so altered, so there is no probability that these rivers were turned out of their courses. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

- Where things are least to be put to the venture, as the eternal interests of the other world ought to be; there every, even the least, probability, or likelihood of danger, should be provided against. South.

- There are predictions of our Saviour recorded by the evangelists, which were not completed till after their deaths, and had no likelihood of being so when they were pronounced by our blessed Saviour. Addison on the Chr. Religion.

- Thus, in all likelihood, would it be with a libertine who should have a visit from the other world: the first horror it raised would go off, as new diversions came on. Atterbury.

- L'KELY*.† adj. [from like.]

1. That may be liked; that may please.
These young companions make themselves believe they love at the first looking of a likely beauty. Sidney.
Sir John, they are your likeliest men; I would have you served with the best. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

- Those argnt fields more likely habitants,
Translated saints and middle spirits hold
Betwixt the angelical and human kind. Milton, P. L.

2. Probable; that may in reason be thought or believed; that may be thought more reasonably than the contrary: as, a likely story, that is, a credible story.

- It seems likely that he was in hope of being busy and conspicuous. Johnson, Life of Uxay.

- L'KELY*. adv. Probably; as may reasonably be thought.

- While man was innocent, he was likely ignorant of nothing that imported him to know. Garville, Scopsis.

To L'KEN.† v. a. [from like.] The Su. Goth. likna is the same.] To represent as having resemblance; to compare.

The prince broke your head for likening him to a singing man of Windsor. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

For who, though with the tongue
Of angels, can relate? or to what things
Liken on earth conspicuous, that may lift
Human imagination to such height
Of God-like power? Milton, P. L.

L'KENNESS.† n. s. [from like. Sax. licneffe.]

1. Representation; parable; comparison.
He seide to them, sothey ye schal seye to me this likenesse, leche, heale thyself. Wicliffe, St. Luke, iv.

2. Resemblance; similitude.
They all do live, and moved are
To multiply the likeness of their kind. Spenser.

- A translator is to make his author appear as charming as he can, provided he maintains his character, and makes him not unlike himself. Translation is a kind of drawing after the life, where there is a double sort of likeness, a good one and a bad one. Dryden.

- There will be found a better likeness, and a worse; and the better is constantly to be chosen. Dryden.

3. Form; appearance.
Never came trouble to my house in the likeness of your grace; for trouble being gone, comfort should remain. Shakspeare.

- It is safer to stand upon our guard against an enemy in the likeness of a friend, than to embrace any man for a friend in the likeness of an enemy. L'Estrange.

4. One who resembles another; a copy; a counterpart.
Poor Cupid, sobbing, scarce could speak,
Indeed, mamma, I did not know ye:
Alas! how easy my mistake?
I took you for your likeness Cloe. Prior.

- L'KEWISE*.† adv. [like and wise.] "In very ancient style, all the words that are now compounded with wise were uncompounded, and had the preposition. They said 'in like wise' and 'in other wise.' But about the time that our present version of the Scriptures was made, the old usage was wearing out. The phrase 'in like wise' occurs [in this version] but once; (St. Matt. xxi. 24.) which Dr. Johnson has printed likewise, as if one word: whereas the compound term like-wise occurs frequently. We find, in several places, 'on this wise, in any wise, in no wise.' The two first phrases are now obsolete, and the third seems to be in the state which Dr. Johnson calls obsolescent." Campbell, Philosoph. of Rhetoric, i. 380.] In like manner; also; moreover; too.

- Jesus said unto them, I also will ask you one thing, which, if ye tell me, I in like wise will tell you by what authority I do these things. St. Matt. xxi. 24.

- So was it in the decay of the Roman empire, and likewise in the empire of Almaine, after Charles the Great, every bird taking a feather. Bacon, Ess.

- Spirit of vitriol poured to pure unmixed serum, coagulates it as if it had been boiled. Spirit of sea-salt makes a perfect coagulation of the serum likewise, but with some different phenomena. Arbutnot, on Aliments.

- L'KING*. adj. [Perhaps because plumpness is agreeable to the sight.] Plump; in a state of plumpness.

I fear my lord the king, who hath appointed your meat and your drink; for why should he see your faces worse liking, than the children which are of your sort? Dan. i. 10.

LI'KING.† n. s. [from like.]

1. Good state of body; plumpness.

I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some liking; I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Their young ones are in good liking; they grow up with corn. Job, xxxix. 4.

Cappadocian slaves were famous for their lustiness; and, being in good liking, were set on a stall when exposed to sale, to shew the good habit of their body. Dryden, Notes to Pers.

2. State of trial.

The royal soul, that, like the labouring moon, By charms of heart was hurried down; Forc'd with regret to leave her native sphere, Came but a while on liking here. Dryden.

3. Inclination; desire. [Hicung, will, Sax.] Your liking is that I should tell a tale.

Chaucer, Pard. Tale.

Why do you longer feed on loathed light, Or liking find to gaze on earthly mud? Spenser, F. Q.

4. Delight in; pleasure in: with to. [Hicung, pleasure, Saxon.] There are limits to be set betwixt the boldness and rashness of a poet; but he must understand those limits who pretends to judge, as well as he who undertakes to write: and he who has no liking to the whole, ought in reason to be excluded from censuring of the parts. Dryden.

LI'LACH.† n. s. [lilac, lilds, French.] A tree. The white thorn is in leaf, and the lilach tree. Bacon.

The lilac hangs to view Its bursting gems in clusters blue. T. Warton, Ode 10.

To LILL.* v. a.

1. To put out: used of the tongue. See To LOLL.

Cerberus His three deformed heads did lay along, And lilled forth his bloody flaming tongue. Spenser, F. Q.

2. To assuage pain. [lallare, Lat. to lull.] A northern word. Craven Dial. and Brockett.

LI'LIED. adj. [from lily.] Embellished with lilies.

Nymphs and shepherds dance no more By sandy Lodon's lilled banks. Milton, Arcades.

To LILT.* v. n. To do any thing cleverly or quickly. Lancashire, according to Mr. Pegge. The Scotch use lilt in the sense of "singing cheerfully;" and "to lilt and dance" is "to dance with great vivacity." See Dr. Jamieson's Scott. Dict. in V. To LILT. [lulla, Su. Goth. to sing.] Thus to sing, by not using words of meaning, but tuneless syllables only. Brockett's N. C. Words. To jerk, to rise in the gait or song. Craven Dialect.

LILY.† n. s. [lilium, Latin; lha, hlze, Saxon.] The etymology warrants lily; but, as Mr. Nares has observed, the analogy of our language not only allows us to double a letter, in order to shorten a preceding vowel, but even requires that we should do it; and indeed it was written lily anciently. The Su. Goth. word is also lilia.]

There are thirty-two species of this plant, including white lilies, orange lilies, red lilies, and martagons of various sorts. Miller.

Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom where no pity! No friends! no hope! no kindred weep for me! Almost no grave allow'd me! I like the lily, That once was mistress of the field, and flourish'd, I'll hang my head, and perish.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Arnus, a river of Italy, is drawn like an old man, by his right side a lion, holding forth in his right paw a red lily, or flower-de-luce.

Peacham on Drawing.

Take but the humblest lily of the field; And if our pride will to our reason yield; It must by sure comparison be shown, That on the regal seat great David's son, Array'd in all his robes, and types of pow'r, Shines with less glory than that simple flow'r.

Prior.

For her the lilies hang their heads, and die.

Pope.

LI'LY-DAFFODIL. n. s. [lilio-narcissus.] A foreign flower.

LI'LYHANDED.* adj. [lily and hand.] Having hands white as the lily.

The lily-handed Liagore

Did feeble his pulse. Spenser, F. Q.

LI'LY-HYACINTH. n. s. [lilio-hyacinthus.]

It hath a lily flower, composed of six leaves, shaped like the flower of hyacinth: the roots are scaly, and shaped like those of the lily. There are three species of this plant; one with a blue flower, another white, and a third red.

Miller.

LI'LY of the Valley, or May lily. n. s. [lilium convallium.]

The flower consists of one leaf, is shaped like a bell, and divided at the top into six segments; the ovary becomes a soft globular fruit, containing several round seeds. It is very common in shady woods. Miller.

Lily of the valley has a strong root that runs into the ground. Mortimer, Husbandry.

LI'LYLIVERED.† adj. [lily and liver.] Whitelivered; cowardly.

A base, lilylivered, action-taking knave.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Go, prick thy face, and over-red thy fear,

Thou lily-liver'd boy! Shakespeare, Macbeth.

LI'MATURE. n. s. [limatura, Lat.] Filings of any metal; the particles rubbed off by a file.

LIMB.† n. s. [lim, Saxon; lem, Danish; "limr, Icel. membrum; lima, articulatio dissecare." Serenius. Mr. H. Tooke deduces it from the Sax. lim-pian, to belong to.]

1. A member; a jointed or articulated part of animals.

A second Hector, for his grim aspect,

And large proportion of his strong-knit limbs.

Shakespeare.

Now am I come each limb to survey, If thy appearance answer loud report.

Milton, S. A.

2. [Limbe, French; limbus, Latin.] An edge; a border. A philosophical word. By moving the prisms about, the colours again emerged out of the whiteness, the violet and the blue at its inward limb, and at its outward limb the red and yellow. Newton.

To LIMB. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with limbs.

As they please,

They limb themselves, and colour, shape, and size Assume, as likes them best, condense, or rare. Milton, P. L.

2. To tear asunder; to dismember.

LIMBECK. n. s. [corrupted by popular pronunciation from alembick.] A still.

Her cheeks, on which this streaming nectar fell, Still'd through the limbeck of her diamond eyes. Fairfax.

Fires of Spain, and the line,

Whose countries limbecks to our bodies be, Canst thou for gain bear? Donne.

Call up, unbound,

In various shapes, old Proteus from the sea, Drain'd through a limbeck to his naked form.

Milton, P. L.

The earth, by secret conveyances, lets in the sea, and sends it back fresh, her bowels serving for a limbeck. Howell.

He first survey'd the charge with careful eyes, Yet judg'd, like vapours that from limbecks rise, It would in richer showers descend again.

Dryden.

The warm limbeck draws

Salubrious waters from the nocent brood. Philips.

To LI'MBECK.* v. a. [from the noun.]

To strain as through a still. An uncommon, and not a good expression. Feltham somewhere also uses it.

The greater do nothing but limbeck their brains in the art of alchumie.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

LI'MBED. adj. [from limb.] Formed with regard to limbs.

A steer of five years' age, large limb'd, and fed, To Jove's high altars Agamemnon led.

Pope, Iliad.

LI'MBER.† adj. [lemper, Danish, to bend to any one's will; lempa, Su. to give way, to yield. Junius and Serenius.] Flexible; easily bent; pliant; lithe.

You put me off with limber vows. Shakespeare.

I wonder how, among these jealousies of court and state, Edward Atheling could subsist, being the indubitate heir of the Saxon line: but he had tried, and found him a prince of limber virtues: so as though he might have some place in his caution, yet he reckoned him beneath his fear. Wotton.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground, Insect, or worm: those wav'd their limber fans For wings; and smallest lineaments exact In all the liveries deck'd of summer's pride.

Milton, P. L.

She durst never stand at the bay, having nothing but her long soft limber ears to defend her. More on Atheism.

The muscles were strong on both sides of the aspera arteria, but on the under side, opposite to that of the œsophagus, very limber.

Ray on Creation.

LI'MBERNESS. n. s. [from limber.] Flexibility; pliancy.

LI'MBERS.* n. s. pl. [limar, plur. of lim, Icel. boughs of trees.] In the rustic language of Berkshire, thills or shafts; in military language, two-wheel carriages having boxes for ammunition; and in naval language, limber-holes are little square apertures cut in the timbers of the ship to convey the limbe water to the pump. See LIMMER.

LI'MBLESS.* adj. [limbleaf, Sax.] Wanting limbs; deprived of limbs.

Lop these legs that bore me

To barbarous violence; with this hand cut off

This instrument of wrong, till nought were left me
But this poor bleeding limbless trunk.

Massinger, Renegado.

LI'MBMEAL.* adv. [limb and meal.] Piecemeal; in pieces.

O! that I had her here to tear her limbmeal.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

Tears cards limbmeal without regard to age,
sex, or quality.

Bulwer, Char. Rem.

LI'MBO.† n. s. ["Eo quod sit limbus in-LI'MBUS. } ferorum," Du Cange; that is, as if the frontier or margin of the other world.]

1. A region bordering upon hell, in which there is neither pleasure nor pain. Popularly hell.

I do clearly reject, and esteem as fables, all the limbos of the fathers.

Bp. Hooper, Confess. of Chr. Faith, (1584,) § 25.

No, he is in tatar limbo, worse than hell,
A devil in an everlasting garment hath him.
One whose hard heart is button'd up with steel.

Shakespeare.

O what a sympathy of woe is this!

As far from help as limbo is from bliss.

According to the common doctrine of their church, [the church of Rome,] the souls of pious men were held in a limbus, remote from God, in the borders of hell.

Bp. Patrick, Answ. to the Touchstone, p. 179.

All these up-whirl'd aloft

Fly o'er the backside of the world far off,
Into a limbo large, and broad, since call'd
The paradise of fools.

Milton, P. L.

2. Any place of misery and restraint.

For he no sooner was at large,
But Trulla straight brought on the charge;
And in the self-same limbo put
The knight and squire, where he was shut.

Hudibras.

Friar, thou art come off thyself, but poor I am left in limbo.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

LIME.† n. s. [lim, gelman, Saxon, to glue; lym, Teut. glue.]

1. A viscous substance drawn over twigs, which catches and entangles the wings of birds that light upon it.

Poor bird! thou'dst never fear the net or lime,
The pitfall, nor the gin.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

You must lay lime, to tangle her desires,
By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhimes
Should be full fraught with serviceable vows.

Shakespeare.

Jollier of this state

Than are new-benefic'd ministers, he throws,
Like nets or lime-twigs, wheresoe'er he goes,
His title of barrister on every wench.

Donne.

By this means

I knew the foul enchanter though disguis'd,
Enter'd the very lime-twigs of his spells,
And yet came off.

Milton, Comus.

A thrush was taken with a bush of lime-twigs.

L'Estrange.

Then toils for beasts, and lime for birds were found,

And deep-mouth'd dogs did forest walks surround.

Dryden.

Or court a wife, spread out his wily parts

Like nets, or lime-twigs, for rich widows' hearts.

Pope.

2. An essential ingredient in mortar and some other cements; so called because of its use in cement. [lime, Sax. calx.]
It is one of the alkaline earths, lately shewn to be a metallick oxide. See the Journal of Science, &c. No. 20,
p. 286.

There are so many species of lime stone, that we are to understand by it in general any stone that, upon a proper degree of heat, becomes a white calx, which will make a great ebullition and noise on being thrown into water, falling into a loose white powder at the bottom.

The lime we have in London is usually made of chalk, which is weaker than that made of stone. Hill, Mat. Medica.

They were now, like sand without lime, ill bound together, especially as many as were English, who were at a gaze, looking strange one upon another, not knowing who was faithful to their side.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

As when a lofty pile is rais'd,
We never hear the workmen praise'd,
Who bring the lime, or place the stones,
But all admire Inigo Jones.

Swift.

Lime is commonly made of chalk, or of any sort of stone that is not sandy, or very cold. Mortimer.

LIME Tree, or LINDEN. n. s. [linb, Saxon, tilia, Lat.]

1. The linden tree.

The flower consists of several leaves, placed orbicularly, in the form of a rose, having a long narrow leaf growing to the footstalk of each cluster of flowers, from whose cup rises the pointal, which becomes testicated, of one capsule, containing an oblong seed. The timber is used by carvers and turners. These trees continue sound many years, and grow to a considerable bulk. Sir Thomas Brown mentions one, in Norfolk, sixteen yards in circuit.

Miller.

For her the limes their pleasing shades deny,
For her the lilies hang their heads, and die.

Pope.

2. A species of lemon. [lime, French.]

Bear me, Pomona! to thy citron groves!
To where the lemon and the piercing lime,
With the deep orange glowing through the green,
Their lighter glories blend.

Thomson, Summer.

To LIME.† v. a. [gelman, Sax.]

1. To entangle; to ensnare.

With attendance, and with businesse,
Ben we lymied both more and lesse.

Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale.

Oh bosom, black as death!
Oh limed soul, that, struggling to be free,
Art more engaged.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Example, that so terrible shows in the wreck of maidenhood, cannot, for all that, dissuade succession, but that they are limed with the twigs that threaten them.

Shakespeare.

The bird that hath been limed in a bush,
With trembling wings misdoubteth every bush,
And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird,
Have now the fatal object in my eye,
Where my poor young was lim'd, was caught,
and kill'd.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

2. To smear with lime.

Myself have lim'd a bush for her,
And place a quire of such enticing birds,
That she will light to listen to their lays.

Shaks.

Those twigs in time will come to be limed, and then you are all lost if you do but touch them.

L'Estrange.

3. To cement. This sense is out of use.

I will not ruinate my father's house,
Who gave his blood to lime the stones together,
And set up Lancaster.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

4. To manure ground with lime.

Encouragement that abatement of interest gave to landlords and tenants, to improve by draining, marling, and liming.

Child.

All sorts of pease love limed or marled land.

Mortimer.

LI'MEBURNER.* n. s. [lime and burn.] One who burns stones to lime.

Huloet.

LI'MEHOUND.* n. s. [called also lym, limer, or limmer. See LYM, and LIM-MER. See also Cotgrave, "limier, a bloodhound." Holme, in his old Academy of Armory, deduces our word limer from the leam or string with which this kind of dog was led. And so in the Gentleman's Recreation: "The string wherewith we lead a grey-hound is called a leace; and that for a hound, a lyme," p. 16.] A limer, or large dog used in hunting the wild boar. Kersey.

But Talus, that could like a limehound wind her,

And all things secrete wisely could bewray,
At length found out, whereas she hidden lay.

Spenser, F. Q. v. ii. 25.

All the limehounds in the city should have drawn after you by the scent. B. Jonson, Barthol. Fair.

LI'MEKILN. n. s. [lime and kiln.] Kiln where stones are burnt to lime.

The counter gate is as hateful to me, as the reek of a lime kiln.

They were found in a lime kiln, and having passed the fire, each is a little vitrified.

Woodward.

LI'MESTONE. n. s. [lime and stone.] The stone of which lime is made.

Fire stone and lime stone, if broke small, and laid on cold lands, must be of advantage.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

LI'ME-TWIG.† See the first sense of LIME.
LI'METWIGGED.* adj. [from lime and twig.] Smeared with lime; prepared to entangle.

Not to have their consultations lime-twigged with quirks and sophisms of philosophical persons.

L. Addison, W. Barbary, (1671,) Pref.

LIME-WATER. n. s.

Lime-water, made by pouring water upon quick lime, with some other ingredients to take off its ill flavour, is of great service internally in all cutaneous eruptions, and diseases of the lungs.

Hill, Materia Medica.

He tried an experiment on wheat infused in lime water alone, and some in brandy and lime water mixed, and had from each grain a great increase.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

LI'MIT. n. s. [limite, French; limitor,
Latin.] Bound; border; utmost reach.

The whole limit of the mountain round about shall be most holy.

Ezod, xliii. 12.

We went, great emperor, by thy command,
To view the utmost limits of the land;
Ev'n to the place where no more world is found,
But foaming billows beating on the ground.

Dryden.

To LI'MIT. v. a. [limiter, French, from the noun.]

1. To confine within certain bounds; to restrain; to circumscribe; not to leave at large.

They tempted God, and limited the Holy One of Israel.

Psal. lxxviii. 41.

Thanks I must you con, that you
Are thieves profest; for there is boundless theft
In limited professions.

Shakespeare, Timon.

If a king come in by conquest, he is no longer a limited monarch.

Swift.

2. To restrain from a lax or general signification: as, the universe is here limited to this earth.

LIMITA'NEOUS. adj. [from limit.] Belonging to the bounds.

Dict.

LI'MITARY. adj. [from limit.] Placed at the boundaries as a guard or superintendant.

Then, when I am thy captive, talk of chains,
Proud limitary cherub! Milton, P. L.

LIMITATION.† n. s. [limitation, French; limitatio, Latin.]

1. Restriction; circumscription.

Limitation of each creature, is both the perfection and the preservation thereof. Hooker.

Am I myself,

But, as it were, in sort of limitation?

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

I despair, how this limitation of Adam's empire to his line and posterity, will help us to one heir. This limitation, indeed, of our author, will save those the labour, who would look for him amongst the race of brutes; but will very little contribute to the discovery amongst men. Locke.

If a king come in by conquest, he is no longer a limited monarch; if he afterwards consent to limitations, he becomes immediately king de jure. Swift.

2. Confinement from a lax or undeterminate import.

The cause of error is ignorance, what restraints and limitations all principles have in regard of the matter whereunto they are applicable. Hooker.

3. Limited time.

You have stood your limitation, and the tribunes Endue you with the people's voice.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

4. A certain precinct, in which friars were allowed to beg, or exercise their function.

Some [pulpits] have not had four sermons these fifteen or sixteen years, since friars left their limitations.

Bp. Gilling, Sermon before K. Edward VI. p. 25.

LIMITEDLY.* adv. [from limited.] With limitation.

Some person or number of persons were vested with a sovereign authority, subordinate to our Lord, to be managed in a certain manner, either absolutely according to pleasure, or limitedly according to certain rules.

Barrow, Unity of the Church.

LIMITER.* n. s. [from limit.]

1. One who restrains within certain bounds; that which circumscribes.

Calling the same god "Jovea terminalem," that is, Jupiter the limiter or the boulder of all things. Fotherby, Atheom. (1622) p. 176.

It appeareth, that the sun is not that infinite limiter, which giveth several gifts, and setteth several bounds, unto all other things. Ibid: p. 180.

A law so good and moral, the limiter of sin.

Milton, Tetrachordon.

2. A friar who had a licence to beg within a certain district, or whose duty was confined to a certain district. Obsolete.

Almost every fryer limitour caryeth it written in his bosome.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 69.

I mean me to disguise
In some strange habit after uncouth wize,
Or like a pilgrim, or a limiter.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

LIMITLESS.* adj. [limit and less.] Unbounded; unlimited.

Thou wilt crown

With limitless renown.

Sidney, Astrophel and Stella.

Now to this sea of city-commonwealth,

Limitless London, am I come obscur'd.

Davies, Wit's Pilgrimage, H. 4. b.

Ye never aime

A limitless desire to what may maim

The settled quiet of a peaceful state.

Browne, Brit. Past. ii. 4.

LIMMER.† n. s.

1. [limier, French.] A lime-hound. See

LIME-HOUND. "A limmer is a mungrel dog, half a cur, and half a hound or spaniel." Huloet. And thus Ainsworth calls this dog a mongrel. Mr. Tyrwhitt has admitted this word into his Glossary to Chaucer from the preceding one subjoined to Urry's edition of the old poet, and defines it "a blood-hound," with a reference, in proof of the assertion, to both words in the following lines; in which, however, the second usage of limmer means not the hound, but the lad or servant that led this kind of dog, which was accustomed to be so brought into the field.

There overtoke I a grete rout

Of hunters and of foresters,

And many relaes and liners,

That bided 'hem to the forest fast,

And I with 'hem; so at the last

I askid one lad, a lymere,

Say felowe, who shal huntin here?

Dreme of Chaucer, 360.

A lymer, or leamer, so called from the leam or line wherewith he is led, is a middle-sized hound between a harier and a greyhound both for kind, and frame of body, being active, light, and nimble.

Holme, Academy of Armory.

2. [limar, plural of lim, Icel. boughs of trees. See LIMBERS.] A thill or shaft. "Limmers, a pair of shafts." North. Grose.

TO LIMN. v. a. [enluminer, French, to adorn books with pictures.] To draw; to paint any thing.

Mine eye doth his effigies witness,

Most truly limn'd, and living in your face.

Shakespeare.

Emblems limned in lively colours.

Peacham.

How are the glories of the field spun, and by what pencil are they limned in their unaffected bravery?

Glanville.

LIMNER. n. s. [corrupted from enluminer, a decorator of books with initial pictures.] A painter; a picture-maker.

That divers limners at a distance, without either copy or design, should draw the same picture to an undistinguishable exactness, is more conceivable than that matter, which is so diversified, should frame itself so unerringly, according to the idea of its kind.

Glanville, Scepis.

Poets are limners of another kind,

To copy out ideas in the mind;

Words are the paint by which their thoughts are shown,

And nature is their object to be drawn. Glanville.

LIMOUS. adj. [limosus, Latin.] Muddy; slimy.

That country became a gained ground by the muddy and limous matter brought down by the Nilus, which settled by degrees unto a firm land.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

They esteemed this natural melancholick acidity to be the limous or slimy feculent part of the blood.

Floyer.

LIMP. adj. [limpio, Italian.]

1. Vapid; weak. Not in use.

The chub eats waterish, and the flesh of him is not firm, limp and tasteless.

Walton, Angler.

2. It is used in some provinces, and in Scotland, for limber, flexible.

TO LIMP.† v. n. [limp-healt, lame, Sax. lennen, limpen, to halt in one's gait.

Lye.] To halt; to walk lamely.

An old poor man,
Who after me hath many a weary step
Limp'd in pure love. Shakespeare, As you like it.
Son of sixteen,
Pluck the lin'd crutch from thy old limping sire.
Shakespeare.

How far

The substance of my praise doth wrong this shadow
In underprising it; so far this shadow

Doth limp behind the substance.

Shakspeare.

When Plutus, with his riches, is sent from Jupiter, he limps and goes slowly; but when he is sent by Pluto, he runs, and is swift of foot. Bacon.

Limping death, lash'd on by fate,

Comes up to shorten half our date. Dryden, Hor.

The limping smith observ'd the sudden'd feast,
And hopping here and there put in his word.

Dryden.

Can syllogism set things right?

No: majors soon with minors fight:

Or both in friendly consort join'd,

The consequence limps false behind.

Prior.

LIMP.* n. s. [from the verb.] Halt; the act of limping; a colloquial expression; as, he has a limp in his walking.

LIMPER.* n. s. [from limp.] One who limps in his walking. Sherwood.

Himself he tied, and wrapt his winges twain

In limy snares the subtil loops among. Spenser.

2. Containing lime.

A human skull covered with the skin, having been buried in some limy soil, was tanned, or turned into a kind of leather. Grew, Museum.

LIN.* n. s. [lyn, Welsh, a lake.] A mere or pool, from which rivers spring.

Drayton.

'Recount her rivers from their lins.

Drayton, Polyolb. Song 9.

TO LIN.* v. n. [linna, Icel. to cease; abliman, Sax. the same.] To yield; to cease; to give over. It is still a northern word.

Unto his foe he came,

Resolv'd in mind all suddenly to win,

Or soon to lose before he once would lin.

Spenser, F. Q.

For couer fire, and it will never linne

Till it breake forth; in like case, shame and sinne.

Mir. for Mag. p. 365.

Set a beggar on horseback, he'll never lin till he be a gallop.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.

LINCH.* n. s. A ledge; a rectangular projection; whence the term linch-pin, a pin with a linch. The derivations of the word linchpin, by our etymologists, it will be seen are now inadmissible.

Jennings's West Country Words. Mr.

Jennings, however, offers no etymology for linch; and I am still of opinion that the Saxon word, which I have produced under linchpin, is correct. Formerly, in agreement with my etymology, the word was linspin. See Cowell's Law Dict. in V. LINIO.

4 M 2

LINCHPIN.† n. s. [quasi links-pin, Skinner.—Su. Goth. lunta, paxillus axis. Dr. Jamieson.—It is the Sax. lȳnȳ, axis.] An iron pin, that keeps the wheel on the axle-tree. Dict.

LINE.† n. s. [linea, Latin; lin, Su. Goth.]

1. Longitudinal extension.

Even the planets, upon this principle, must gravitate no more towards the sun: so that they would not revolve in curve lines, but fly away in direct tangents, till they struck against other planets. Bentley.

2. A slender string.

Well sung the Roman bard; all human things, Of dearest value, hang on slender strings: O see the then sole hope, and in design Of heav'n our joy, supported by a line. Waller.
A line seldom holds to strain, or draws straight in length, above fifty or sixty feet. Mozon, Mech. Exercises.

3. A thread extended to direct any operations.

We as by line upon the ocean go, Whose paths shall be familiar as the land. Dryd.
4. The string that sustains the angler's hook.

Victorious with their lines and eyes, They make the fishes and the men their prize. Waller.

5. Lineaments, or marks in the hand or face.

12. Extension; limit.

13. Equator; equinoctial circle.

It were the greatest folly in the world to perplex one's self with that, which perchance will never come to pass: but if it should, then God, who sent it, will dispose it to the best; most certainly to his glory; which would satisfy us in our respects to him; and, unless it be our fault, as certainly to our good; which, if we be not strangely unreasonable, must satisfy in reference to ourselves and private interests. Besides all this, in the very dispensation God will not fail to give such allays, which, like the cool gales under the line, will make the greatest heats of suffering very supportable. Hammond, in Fell's Life of him, § 2.

When the sun below the line descends, Then one long night continued darkness joins. Creech.

14. Progeny; family, ascending or descending. [lin, old French.]

He chid the sisters When first they put the name of king upon me, And bade them speak to him; then prophet-like, They hail'd him father to a line of kings. Shaks.
He sends you this most memorable line, In every branch truly demonstrative, Willing you overlook this pedigree. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Was lineal of the lady Ermengere.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

O that your brows my laurel had sustain'd!
Well had I been depos'd if you had reign'd:
The father had descended for the son;
For only you are lineal to the throne. Dryden.

LI'NEALLY. adv. [from lineal.] In a direct line.

If he had been the person upon whom the crown had lineally and rightfully descended, it was good law. Clarendon.

LI'NEAMENT. n. s. [lineament, French; lineamentum, Latin.] Feature; discriminating mark in the form.

Noble York

Found that the issue was not his begot:
Which well appeared in his lineaments,
Being nothing like the noble duke, my father.

Shakespeare.

Six wings he wore to shade
His lineaments divine. Milton, P. L.

Man he seems

In all his lineaments, though in his face
The glimpses of his father's glory shine.

Milton, P. R.

There are not more differences in men's faces, and the outward lineaments of their bodies, than there are in the makes and tempers of their minds; only there is this difference, that the distinguishing characters of the face, and the lineaments of the body, grow more plain with time, but the peculiar physiognomy of the mind is most discernible in children. Locke.

I may advance religion and morals, by tracing some few lineaments in the character of a lady, who hath spent all her life in the practice of both.

Swift.

The utmost force of boiling water is not able to destroy the structure of the tenderest plant: the lineaments of a white lily will remain after the strongest decoction. Arbutnot.

I have in a table
With curious punctuality set down
To a hair's breadth, how low a new-stamp'd courtier

May vail to a country gentleman, and, by Gradation, to his merchant, mercer, draper,
His linen-man and taylor.

Massinger, Emp. of the East.

LING. † The termination notes commonly diminution; as, kitling, and is derived from klein, German, little; sometimes a quality; as, firstling, in which sense Skinner deduces it from langen, old Teutonic, to belong. Johnson.

When Skinner and Johnson, after puzzling about the derivation of this termination, referred it to the old Teut. langen, or Germ. klien, they never adverted, that it was immediately derived from the Saxon ling, a common termination, used in the same manner, as in the old English and Scottish. See Sommer and Lye. G. Chalmers.

LING. n. s. [ling, Icelandick.]

1. Heath. This sense is retained in the northern counties; yet Bacon seems to distinguish them.

Than linger life away, and nourish woe.

Pope, Odys.

2. To hesitate; to be in suspense.
Perhaps thou lingerest, in deep thoughts detain'd
Of th' enterprize so hazardous and high.

Milton, P. R.

3. To remain long. In an ill sense.

Let order die,

And let this world no longer be a stage

To feed contention in a lingering act.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Ye brethren of the lyre, and tuneful voice,
Lament his lot; but at your own rejoice.
Now live secure, and linger out your days;
The gods are pleas'd alone with Purcel's lays.

Dryden.

Your very fear of death shall make ye try
To catch the shade of immortality;
Wishing on earth to linger, and to save
Part of its prey from the devouring grave. Prior.

Congreve, Way of the World.

LINGUA'CIOUS. adj. [linguax, Lat.] Full of tongue; loquacious; talkative.

LINGUADE'NTAL. † adj. [lingua and dens, Lat.] Uttered by the joint action of the tongue and teeth.

Ph and Bh, (or F and V), are labiodental; T and D are gingival; Th and Dh are linguadental.

Holder, Elem. of Speech, p. 71.

LI'NGUIST. n. s. [from lingua.] A man skilful in languages.

Though a linguist should pride himself to have all the tongues that Babel cleft the world into, yet, if he had not studied the solid things in them, as well as the words and lexicons, he were nothing so much to be esteemed a learned man, as any yeoman or tradesman competently wise in his mother dialect only. Milton on Education.

Our linguist received extraordinary rudiments towards a good education. Addison, Spect.

LI'NGWORT. n. s. An herb.

LI'NGY.* adj. This word has very opposite senses applied to it, as a northern expression; by Grose, in the sense of limber; which is repeated in the Craven Glossary with the additions of tall and flexible; but by Mr. Brockett, in the senses of active, strong, able to bear fatigue.

LINIMENT. n. s. [liniment, French; linimentum, Lat.] Ointment; balsam; unguent.

The nostrils, and the jugular arteries, ought to be anointed every morning with this liniment or balsam. Horney.

The wise author of nature hath provided on the rump two glands, which the bird catches hold upon with her bill, and squeezes out an oily pap or liniment, fit for the inunction of the feathers. Ray on Creation.

LINING. n. s. [from line.]

1. The inner covering of any thing; the inner double of a garment.

Was I deceived, or did a sable cloud,
Turn forth her silver lining on the night?

Milton, Comus.

The fold in the gristle of the nose is covered with a lining, which differs from the facing of the tongue. Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

The gown with stiff embroidery shining,
Looks charming with a slighter lining. Prior.

2. That which is within.

The lining of his coffers shall make coats
To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars. Shakspeare.

LINK. n. s. [gelencke, Germ.]

1. A single ring of a chain.

The Roman state, whose course will yet go on
The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs
Of more strong links asunder, than can ever
Appear in your impediment. Shakspeare, Coriol.

The moral of that poetical fiction, that the uppermost link of all the series of subordinate causes, is fastened to Jupiter's chair, signifies an useful truth. Hale.

Truths hang together in a chain of mutual dependance; you cannot draw one link without attracting others. Glanville.

While she does her upward flight sustain,
Touching each link of the continued chain,
At length she is oblig'd and forc'd to see
A first, a source, a life, a deity. Prior.

2. Any thing doubled and closed together.

Make a link of horse hair very strong, and fasten it to the end of the stick that springs. Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. A chain; any thing connecting.

Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shakspeare.

I feel

The link of nature draw me; flesh of flesh,
Bone of my bone thou art. Milton, P. L.

Fire, flood and earth, and air, by this were bound,
And love, the common link, the new creation crown'd. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

4. Any single part of a series or chain of consequences; a gradation in ratiocination; a proposition joined to a foregoing and following proposition.

The thread and train of consequences in intellectual ratiocination is often long, and chained together by divers links, which cannot be done in imaginative ratiocination by some attributed to brutes. Judge Hale.

5. A series: this sense is improper. Addison has used link for chain.

Though I have here only chosen this single link of martyrs, I might find out others among those names which are still extant, that delivered down this account of our Saviour in a successive tradition. Addison on the Christian Religion.

6. [from λινος] A torch made of pitch and hard.

O, thou art an everlasting bonfire light; thou hast saved me a thousand miles in links and torches, walking with thee in the night betwixt tavern and tavern. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Whereas history should be the torch of truth, he makes her in divers places a fuliginous link of lies. Hovell.

Round as a globe, and liquor'd every chink,
Goodly and great he sails behind his link. Dryd.

One that bore a link
On a sudden clapp'd his flaming cudgel,
Like linstock, to the horse's touch-hole. Hudibras.

7. Perhaps in the following passage it may mean lampblack.

There was no link to colour Peter's hat. Shakspeare..

TO LINK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To complicate; as, the links of a chain.

Descending tread us down
Thus drooping; or with linked thunderbolts Transfix us to the bottom of this gulph. Milton, P. L.

Against eating cares,
Lap me in soft Lydian airs;
Married to immortal verse,
Such as the meeting soul may pierce
In notes, with many a winding bout
Of linked sweetness long drawn out. Milton, L'Al.

2. To unite; to conjoin in concord.

They're so link'd in friendship,
That young prince Edward marries Warwick's daughter. Shakspeare.

3. To join; to connect.

Link towns to towns with avenues of oak,
Inclose whole downs in walls, 'tis all a joke. Pope.

So from the first eternal order ran,
And creature link'd to creature, man to man. Pope.

4. To join by confederacy or contract.

They make an offer of themselves into the service of that enemy, with whose servants they link themselves in so near a bond. Hooker.

Be advised for the best,
Ere thou thy daughter link in holy band
Of wedlock, to that new unknown guest. Spenser, F. Q.

Blood in princes link'd not in such sort,
As that it is of any pow'r to tye. Daniel, Civ. Wars.

5. To connect; as concomitant.

New hope to spring
Out of despair; joy, but with fear yet link'd. Milton, P. L.

God has link'd our hopes and our duty together. Decay of Chr. Piety.

So gracious hath God been to us, as to link together our duty and our interest, and to make those very things the instances of our obedience, which are the natural means and causes of our happiness. Tillotson.

6. To unite or concatenate in a regular series of consequences.

These things are linked, and, as it were, chained one to another: we labour to eat, and we eat to live, and we live to do good; and the good which we do is as seed sown, with reference unto a future harvest. Hooker.

Tell me which part it does necessitate?
I'll chuse the other; there I'll link th' effect;
A chain, which fools to catch themselves project! Dryden.

By which chain of ideas thus visibly linked together in train, i. e. each intermediate idea agreeing on each side with those two, it is immediately placed between, the ideas of men and self-determination appear to be connected. Locke.

TO LINK.* v. n. To be connected: with in.

All the productions of the earth link in with each other. Burke on Scarcity.

LINKBOY. } n. s. [link and boy.] A boy
LINKMAN. } that carries a torch to accommodate passengers with light.

What a ridiculous thing it was, that the continued shadow of the earth should be broken by sudden miraculous discusions of light, to prevent the officiousness of the linkboy! More.

Though thou art tempted by the linkman's call,
Yet trust him not along the lonely wall. Gay.

In the black form of cinder wench she came.
O may no linkboy interrupt their love! Gay, Trivia.

LINNET.* n. s. [linetpige, Saxon; believed to be from linet, flax, on the seed of which the bird feeds; linotte, French; linaria, Latin.] A small singing bird.

The swallows make use of celandine, the linnet of euphrasia, for the repairing of their sight. More, Antid. against Atheism.

Is it for thee the linnet pours his throat? Pope.

LINSEED.* n. s. [linpæb, Saxon; semen lini, Latin.] The seed of flax, which is much used in medicine.

The joints may be closed with a cement of lime, linseed oil, and cotton. Mortimer, Husbandry.

LINSEY.* n. s. [a corruption of linen.] Linsey-woolsey; stuff made of linen and wool mixed.

No matter for the stuff, whether linsey or woolsey. Bentley, Phil. Lips.

Here is a very great trade in worsted stockings, some linsies, and a coarse kind of cloth. Pennant.

LINSEY-WOOLSEY.* n. s. [a corruption of linen and wool.] Stuff made of linen and wool mixed; light or coarse stuff; hence what is mean, vile, unsuitable.

He gave them coats of linsey-woolsey; for, said he, that is good and warme for winter, and good and light for summer.

Bp. of Chichester, Two Serms. (1576.) sign. C.8.b. Barefooted and barelegged, only clothed in linsey-woolsey.

Homilies, Sermon. P. II. for Whitsunday.

If among the covetous there is linsey woolsey, as far as will make for their profit, so far, and no longer, they love God.

Loe, Bliss of Br. Beauty, (1614.) p. 15.

LINSEY-WOOLSEY.* adj. [linen and wool.] Made of linen and wool mixed. Vile; mean; of different and unsuitable parts. Luther himself being accounted a very papist, and the Lutheran an ass in a rochet, a linsey woolsey bishop.

Stapleton, Fort of the Faith, (1565.) fol. 102. b.

This sense may seem to have a ground from the like prohibition of linsey-woolsey garments, and the sowing of a field with mingled seed.

Gregory, Notes on Script. ch. 19. That linsie-woolsie intermixture of comick mirth with tragic seriousness.

Phillips, Theatr. Poet. Pref.

A lawless linsey-woolsey brother,
Half of one order, half another. Hudibras.

Peel'd, patch'd and pyebald, linsey-woolsey brothers,

Grave mummings! sleeveless some, and shirtless others. Pope, Dunciad.

LINSTOCK. n. s. [hunte or lente, Teutonic, lint and stock.] A staff of wood with a match at the end of it, used by gunners in firing cannon. Hammer.

The nimble gunner
With linstock now the devilish cannon touches,
And down goes all before him.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

The distance judg'd for shot of ev'ry size,
The linstocks touch, the pond'rous ball expires.

Dryden.

LINT.† n. s. [linteum, Latin; llyn, Welsh and Erse. Dr. Johnson. — It is the Sax. lincet.]

1. The soft substance commonly called flax.

2. Linen scraped into soft woolly substance to lay on sores.

I dressed them up with unguentum basilicum vitello ovi, upon pledges of lint.

Wiseman, Surgery.

LYNTEL. n. s. [linter, French.] That part of the door frame that lies cross the door posts over head.

Take a bunch of hyssop, and dip it in the blood that is in the basin, and strike the lintel and the two side posts.

Exod.

When you lay any timber on brick work, as lintels over windows, lay them in loam, which is a great preserver of timber.

Mason, Mech. Exercises.

Silver the lintals deep projecting o'er,
And gold the ringlets that command the door.

Pope, Odys.

LYON. n. s. [lion, French; leo, Latin.]
1. The fiercest and most magnanimous of fourfooted beasts.

Be lion-mettled; proud, and take no care
Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are;
Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The sphinx, a famous monster in Egypt, had the face of a virgin, and the body of a lion.

Peacham on Drawing.

They rejoice
Each with their kind, lion with lioness;
So fitly them in pairs thou hast combin'd.

Milton, P. L.

See lion-hearted Richard,
Piously valiant, like a torrent swell'd
With wintry tempests, that disdains all mounds,
Breaking away impetuous, and involves
Within its sweep trees, houses, men, he press'd
Amidst the thickest battle.

Philips.

2. A sign in the zodiack.

The lion for the honours of his skin,
The squeezing crab, and stinging scorpion shine
For aiding heaven, when giants dare'd to brave
The threatened stars.

Creech, Martius.

LYONESS. n. s. [feminine of lion.] A she lion.

Under which bush's shade, a lioness
Lay couching head on ground, which catlike watch

When that the sleeping man should stir.

Shakespeare.

The furious lioness,
Forgetting young ones, through the fields doth roar.

May.

The greedy lioness the wolf pursues,
The wolf the kid, the wanton kid the browze.

Dryden.

If we may believe Pliny, lions do, in a very severe manner, punish the adulteries of the lioness.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

LYONLEAF. n. s. [leontopetalon, Latin.] A plant.

Miller.

LYONLIKE.* } adj. [from lion.] Resembling a lion.

The anguish arm'd our armies with strength to strike,
And made us both encounter lion-like.

Mir. for Mag. p. 600.

King Richard's surname was Cœur-de-Lion, for his lion-like courage.

Camden, Rem.

Such lion-like terror is in that mild face, when it looks upon wickedness.

Bp. Hall, Contempt. B. 3.

Coveting to ride upon the lionly form of jurisdiction.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. ii.

LYON'S-MOUTH.

LYON'S-PAW.

LYON'S-TAIL.

LYON'S-TOOTH.

LIP. n. s. [lippe, Saxon.]

1. The outpart of the mouth, the muscles that shoot beyond the teeth, which are of so much use in speaking, that they are used for all the organs of speech.

Those happiest smiles

That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know
What guests were in her eyes. Shaks. K. Lear.

No falsehood shall defile my lips with lies,
Or with a veil of truth disguise.

Sandys, Paraph. on Job.

Her lips blush deeper sweets. Thomson, Spring.

2. The edge of any thing.

In many places is a ridge of mountains some distance from the sea, and a plain from their roots to the shore; which plain was formerly covered by the sea, which bounded against those hills as its first ramparts, or as the ledges or lips of its vessel.

Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

In wounds, the lips sink and are flaccid; a gleet followeth, and the flesh within withers.

Wiseman, Surgery.

3. To make a lip. To hang the lip in sulleness and contempt.

A letter for me! It gives me an estate of seven years' health; in which time I will make a lip at the physician.

Shakespeare.

To LIP. v. a. [from the noun.] To kiss. Obsolete.

A hand, that kings

Have lipt, and trembled kissing.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Oh! 'tis the fiend's arch mock,

To lip a wanton, and suppose her chaste. Shaks.

LIP-DEVOT.* n. s. [lip and devotion.] Devotion uttered by the lips without concurrence of the heart.

Lip devotion will not serve the turn; it undervalues the very thing it prays for. It is indeed the begging of a denial, and shall certainly be answered in what it begs. South, Serm. vi. 586.

LIP-GOOD.* adj. [lip and good.] Good in talk without practice.

Men are deceiv'd, who think there can be thrall
Beneath a virtuous prince. Wish'd liberty
Ne'er lovelier looks than under such a crown:

But when his grace is merely but lip-good,

And that no longer than he airs himself

Abroad in publick, there to seem to shun

The strokes and stripes of flatterers, which within

Are lechery unto him, and so feed

His brutish sense with their afflicting sound,

As dead to virtue, he permits himself

Be carried like a pitcher by the ears

To every act of vice: This is a case

Deserves our fear, and doth presage the nigh

And close approach of blood and tyranny.

B. Jonson, Sejanus.

LIP-LABOUR.† n. s. [lip and labour.] Action of the lips without concurrence of the mind; words without sentiments.

Christ calleth your Layne howres idleness, hypocresye, moche babylng, and lippe-laboure.

Bale, Yet a Course. &c. (1543.) fol. 24. b.

Fasting, when prayer is not directed to its own purposes, is but lip-labour.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Holy Living.

LIP-LABORIOUS.* adj. [from lip-labour.] Uttering words without sentiments; hypocritical.

The lower the times grew, the worse they were at the bottom: the Bramins grew hypocritical and lip-labourious.

Lord's Hist. of the Banians, (1630,) p. 86.

LIPOTHYMOUS. adj. [λεπθω and θυμός.]

Swooning; fainting.

If the patient be surprised with a lipothyמוש languor, and great oppression about the stomach and hypochonders, expect no relief from cordials.

Harvey on the Plague.

LIPOTHYMY. n. s. [λεπθοθυμία.] Swoon; fainting fit.

The senators falling into a lipothyמוש, or deep swooning, made up this pageantry of death with a representing of it unto life.

Bp. Taylor, Worthy Communicant.

In *lipothyמוש*es or swoonings, he used the friction of this finger with saffron and gold.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

LIPPED. adj. [from lip.] Having lips.

LIPPIITUDE. n. s. [lippitude, French; lippitudo, Latin.] Blearedness of eyes.

Disenses that are infectious are, such as are in the spirits and not so much in the humours, and therefore pass easily from body to body; such are pestilences and lippitudes.

Bacon.

LIP-WISDOM. n. s. [lip and wisdom.] Wisdom in talk without practice.

I find that all is but lip-wisdom, which wants experience; I now, woe is me, do try what love can do.

Sidney.

LIQUEABLE. adj. [from liquo, Latin.] That may be melted.

LIQUATION. n. s. [from liquo, Latin.]

1. The act of melting.

2. Capacity to be melted.

The common opinion hath been, that crystal is nothing but ice and snow concentered, and by duration of time, congealed beyond liquitation.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

To LIQUATE. v. n. [liquo, Latin.] To melt; to liquefy.

If the salts be not drawn forth before the clay is baked, they are apt to liquate.

Woodward on Fossils.

LIQUEFACTION. n. s. [liquefactio, Latin; liquefaction, French.] The act of melting; the state of being melted.

Heat dissolveth and melteth bodies that keep in their spirits, as in divers *liquefactiō*ns; and so doth time in honey, which by age waxeth more liquid.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The burning of the earth will be a true liquefaction or dissolution of it, as to the exterior region.

Burnet.

LIQUEFYABLE. adj. [from liquefy.] That may be melted.

There are three causes of fixation, the even spreading of the spirits and tangible parts, the closeness of the tangible parts, and the jejuneness or extreme comminution of spirits: the two first may be joined with a nature liquefyable, the last not.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To LIQUEFY. v. a. [liquefier, French; liquefacio, Latin.] To melt; to dissolve.

That degree of heat which is in lime and ashes, being a smothering heat, is the most proper, for it doth neither liquefy nor rarely; and that is true maturation.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To LIQUEFY. v. n. To grow liquid.

The blood of St. Januarius liquefied at the approach of the saint's head.

Addison on Italy.

LIQUESCENCY. n. s. [liquescentia, Latin.] Aptness to melt.

LIQUESCENT. adj. [liquescent, Latin.] Melting.

LIQUEUR.* n. s. [French.] A most affected and contemptible expression, much used of late for what is in fact a dram, a draught of some spirituous and high-flavoured liquid, by those whose gentility recoils at the vulgar phrase.

Know what conserves they choose to eat,
And what liqueurs to tipple.

Shenstone, To the Virgosi.

LIQUID. adj. [liquide, French; liquidus, Latin.]

1. Not solid; not forming one continuous substance; fluid.

Gently rolls the liquid glass. Dr. Daniel.

2. Soft; clear.

Her breast, the sugared nest
Of her delicious soul, that there does lie,
Bathing in streams of liquid melody. Crashaw.

3. Pronounced without any jar or harshness.

The many liquid consonants give a pleasing sound to the words, though they are all of one syllable. Dryden, Æn.

Let Carolina smooth the tuneful lay,
Lull with Amelia's liquid name the nine,
And sweetly flow through all the royal line. Pope, Hor.

4. Apparent; manifest.

If a creditor should appeal to hinder the burial of his debtor's corpse, his appeal ought not to be received, since the business of burial requires a quick dispatch, though the debt be entirely liquid. Ayliffe, Pargenon.

LIQUID. n. s. Liquid substance; liquor.

Be it thy choice, when summer heats annoy,
To sit beneath her leafy canopy,
Quaffing rich liquids. Philips.

TO LIQUIDATE. † v. a. [from liquid.] To clear away; to lessen debts.

If our epistolary accounts were fairly liquidated,
I believe you would be brought in considerable debtor. Id. Chesterfield.

LIQUIDATION.* n. s. [from To liquidate.] Act of lessening debts.

LIQUIDITY. n. s. [from liquid.] Subtlety; thinness.

The spirits, for their liquidity, are more incapable than the fluid medium, which is the conveyer of sounds, to persevere in the continued repetition of vocal airs. Glanville.

LIQUIDNESS. n. s. [from liquid.] Quality of being liquid; fluency.

Oil of anniseeds, in a cool place, thickened into the consistence of white butter, which, with the least heat, resumed its former liquidity. Boyle.

LIQUOR. n. s. [liquor, Latin; liqueur, French.]

1. Any thing liquid: it is commonly used of fluids inebriating, or impregnated with something, or made by decoction.

Nor envied them the grape
Whose head: that turbulent liquor fills with fumes. Milton, S. A.

Sin taken into the soul, is like a liquor poured into a vessel; so much of it as it fills, it also seasons. South, Serm.

2. Strong drink; in familiar language.

TO LIQUOR. v. a. [from the noun.] To drench or moisten.

Cart wheels squeak not when they are liquored. Bacon.

LIQUORICE.* n. s. See LICORICE.

LIQUORISH.* adj. See LICKEROUS.

LIRICONFANCY. n. s. A flower.

LI RIPOOP.* n. s. [liripion, liripipion, Fr. "Chaperon des docteurs de Sorbonne, longue robe de docteur, suivant Rabelais." Roquefort. Leri-ephippium, a contraction of cleri-ephippium, the tippet or hood of a clergyman. Littleton.] The hood of a graduate.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

In this letter the good primate doth not trouble his clergy with recommending a single virtue, or reproving a single vice; but he charges them, with great solemnity, not to wear short liripoops of silk, nor gowns open before, nor swords, nor daggers, nor embroidered girdles.

Henry, Hist. of Gr. Brit. vol. 6. (regn. H. VII.)

LI'SBON.* n. s. [from Lisbon in Portugal.]

1. A kind of white wine.

2. A kind of soft sugar.

LISH.* adj. Stout; active; strong; nimble.

A northern word. Grose, Crav. Dial. and Brockett.

LISNE. n. s. A cavity; a hollow.

In the lisne of a rock at Kingscote in Gloucestershire, I found a bushel of petrified cockles, each near as big as my fist. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

TO LISPE. † v. n. [phrp, Saxon; lispen, Belg. from the Gr. λίσπη γλῶσσα, Aristoph. in Ranis, a lisping, stuttering tongue; Casaubon and Upton: from blæsus, Lat. stammering, lisping; Wachter.] To speak with too frequent appulses of the tongue to the teeth or palate, like children.

Come, I cannot cog, and say, thou art this and that, like a many of these lisping hawthorn buds, that come like women in men's apparel, and smell like Bucklesbury in simpling time.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

They ramble not to learn the mode,
How to be drest, or how to lisp abroad. Cleveland.

Appulse partial, giving some passage to breath, is made to the upper teeth, and causes a lisping sound, the breath being strained through the teeth.

Holder, Elem. of Speech.

As yet a child, nor yet a fool to fame,

I lisp'd in numbers, for the numbers came. Pope.

TO LISPE.* v. a. To utter with a lisp; to express imperfectly, or with hesitation.

Scarce had she learnt to lisp a name

Of martyr. Crashaw.

LISP. n. s. [from the verb.] The act of lisping.

I overheard her answer, with a very pretty lisp,

O! Strephon, you are a dangerous creature. Tuller.

LI'SPER.† n. s. [from lisp.] One who lisps.

Huloet.

LI'SPINGLY.* adv. [from lisping.] With a lisp; imperfectly.

Shew him that T is close; but this lets breath; and with often trial he will hit on it, though at first it may be lispingly or imperfectly.

Holder, Elem. of Speech, p. 144.

LI'SSOM.* adj. [probably from lepan, Sax. to loose; lyfe, relaxation.] Limber;

supple; relaxed; loose; free. Pegge, without any etymology, confines this word to the north of England, where it is rather leetsome, that is lightsome; as in Cheshire and part of Yorkshire, where lissom means active, agile. See Wilbraham's Chesh. Gloss. and Craven Dialect.

Lissom, however, is common, in several parts of England, in the former meanings.

LIST.* n. s. [liste, French.]

1. A roll; a catalogue.

He was the ablest emperor of all the list. Bacon.

Some say the loadstone is poison, and therefore in the lists of poisons we find it in many authors. Brown.

Bring next the royal list of Stuarts forth,
Undaunted minds, that rul'd the rugged north. Prior.

2. [lice, French.] Enclosed ground in which tilts are run, and combats fought.

Till now alone the mighty nations strove,
The rest at gaze, without the lists did stand;
And threatning France, plac'd like a painted Jove,
Kept idle thunder in his lifted hand. Dryden.

Paris thy son, and Sparta's king advance,
In measur'd lists to toss the weighty lance;
And who his rival shall in arms subdue,
His be the dame, and his the treasure too. Pope, Iliad.

3. [lirt, Sax. the verge or border of any thing.] Bound; limit.

The ocean, overpeering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste
Than young Laertes in a riotous head
O'er-bears your officers. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

She within lists my ranging mind hath brought,
That now beyond myself I will not go. Davies.

4. [lyrtan, Saxon.] Desire; willingness; choice; pleasure. See LUST.

Alas, she has no speech!

—Too much;
I find it still when I have list to sleep. Shakespeare, Othello.

Nothing of passion or peevishness, or list to contradict, shall have any bias on my judgement. King Charles.

He saw false reynard where he lay full low;
I need not swear he had no list to crow. Dryden.

5. [lirt, Saxon, the same.] A strip of cloth.

A linen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot hose on the other, gartered with a red and blue list. Shakespeare.

Instead of a list of cotton, or the like fibre, we made use of a siphon of glass.

A list the cobbler's temple ties,
To keep the hair out of his eyes. Swift.

6. A border.

They thought it better to let them stand as a list, or marginal border, unto the Old Testament. Hooker.

TO LIST.† v. n. [lyrtan, Saxon.]

1. To chuse; to desire; to be disposed; to incline.

To fight in field, or to defend this wall,
Point what you list, I nought refuse at all. Spenser, F. Q.

Unto them that add to the word of God what them listeth, and make God's will submit unto their will, and break God's commandments for their own tradition's sake, unto them it seemeth not good. Hooker.

They imagine, that laws which permit them not to do as they would, will endure them to speak as they list. Hooker.

Let other men think of your devices as they list, in my judgement they bemere fancies. Whitgift.

Now by my mother's son, and that's myself,
It shall be moon, or star, or what I list. Shakspeare.

Kings, lords of times, and of occasions, may Take their advantage when, and how, they list. Daniel.

When they list, into the womb
That bred them they return; and howl, and gnaw
My bowels, their repast. Milton, P. L.

2. Used as an impersonal verb; it pleased. Frequent in our old writers.

When him list the prouder looks subdew,
He would them gazing blind, or turn to other
hew. Spenser, F. Q.

TO LIST. v. a. [from list, a roll.]

1. To enlist; to enrol or register.

For a man to give his name to Christianity in those days, was to list himself a martyr, and to bid farewell not only to the pleasures, but also to the hopes of this life. South.

They list with women each degen'rate name
Who dares not hazard life for future fame.

Dryden, En.

2. To retain and enrol soldiers; to enlist.
The lords would, by listing their own servants, persuade the gentlemen in the town to do the like.

Claarendon.

The king who raised this wall appointed a million of soldiers, who were listed and paid for the defence of it against the Tartars.

Temple.

Two hundred horse he shall command;
Though few, a warlike and well-chosen band,
These in my name are listed.

Dryden.

3. [From list; enclosed ground.] To enclose for combats.

How dares your pride presume against my
laws,

As in a listed field to fight your cause?

Unus'd! the royal grant.

Dryden, Kn. Tale.

4. [From list, a shred or border.] To sew together, in such a sort as to make a particoloured shew.

Some may wonder at such an accumulation of benefits, like a kind of embroidering or listing of one favour upon another.

Wotton, Life of Buckingham.

5. [Contracted from listen.] To hearken to; to listen; to attend.

Then weigh, what loss your honour may sus-tain,

If with too credent ear you list his songs;

Or lose your heart, or your chaste treasure open
To his unmaster'd importunity.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

I, this sound I better know;

List! I would I could hear mo.

B. Jonson.

- LISTED. adj.* Striped; particoloured in long streaks.

Over his head beholds

A dewy cloud, and in the cloud a bow conspicuous, with three listed colours gay,
Betokening peace from God, and covenant new.

Milton, P. L.

As the show'ry arch

With listed colours gay, or, azure, gules,
Delights, and puzzles the beholder's eyes.

Philips.
To LISTEN.† v. a. [hlytcan, and lytcan,
Sax.] To hear; to attend. Obsolete.

Lady, vouchsafe to listen what I say.

One cried, God bless us! and, amen! the other;

As they had seen me with these hangman's hands,

Listening their fear I could not say, amen.

Shakspeare.

He, that no more must say, is listened more Than they whom youth and ease have taught to glose.

Shakspeare.

The wonted roar was up amidst the woods,
And fill'd the air with barbarous dissonance,
At which I ceas'd and listen'd them a while.

Milton, Comus.

- To LISTEN. v. n. To hearken; to give attention.

Listen to me, and if you speak me fair,

I'll tell you news.

Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

Antigonus used often to go disguised, and listen
at the tents of his soldiers; and at a time heard some that spoke very ill of him: whereupon he said, If you speak ill of me, you should go a little farther off.

Bacon, Apophthegms.

Listen. O isles, unto me, and hearken, ye people.

Isa. xlix.

When we have occasion to listen, and give a more particular attention to some sound, the tympanum is drawn to a more than ordinary tension.

Holder, Elem. of Speech.

On the green bank I sat, and listen'd loo;

Nor till her lay was ended could I move,

But wish'd to dwell for ever in the grove.

Dryden.

He shall be receiv'd with more regard,
And listen'd to, than modest truth is heard.

Dryden.

To this humour most of our late comedies owe their success: the audience listens after nothing else.

Addison.

- LISTENER. n. s.* [from listen.] One that hearkens: a hearkener.

They are light of belief, great listeners after news.

Howell.

Listeners never hear well of themselves.

L'Estrange.

If she constantly attends the tea, and be a good listener, she may make a tolerable figure, which will serve to draw in the young chaplain.

Swift.

The hush word, when spoke by any brother in a lodge, was a warning to the rest to have a care of listeners.

Swift.

- LISTFUL.* adj.* [from list, in the sense of listen.] Attentive.

Thereto they both did frankly condescend

And to his doome with listful cares did both attend

Spenser, F. Q. v. i. 25.

- LISTLESS. adj.* [from list.]

1. Without inclination; without any determination to one thing more than another.

Intemperance and sensuality clog men's spirits, make them gross, listless, and unactive.

Tillotson.

If your care to wheat alone extend,

Let Maja with her sisters first descend,

Before you trust in earth your future hope,

Or else expect a listless, lazy crop.

Dryden, Virg.

Lazy lolling sort
Of ever listless loiterers, that attend

No cause, no trust.

Pope.

I was listless, and desponding.

Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

2. Careless; heedless: with of.

The sick for air before the portal gasp,

Or idle in their empty hives remain,

Benumb'd with cold, and listless of their gain.

Dryden.

- LISTLESSLY. adv.* [from listless.] Without thought; without attention.

To know this perfectly, watch him at play, and see whether he be stirring and active, or whether he lazily and listlessly dreams away his time.

Locke on Education.

- LISTLESSNESS.† n. s.* [from listless.] In-attention; want of desire.

It may be the palate of the soul is indisposed
by listlessness or sorrow.

Bp. Taylor.

This habit, [sloth,] rooted in the child, grows up and adheres to the man, producing a general listlessness and aversion from labour.

Bp. Berkeley, Word to the Wise.

- LIT*, the preterite of light; whether to light signifies to happen, or to set on fire, or guide with light.

Believe thyself, thy eyes,

That first inflam'd, and lit me to thy love,

Those stars that still must guide me to my joy.

Southerne.

I lit my pipe with the paper.

Addison, Spect.

- LYTANIE.† n. s.* [lytanie, French; λυτάνεια, Greek, from λυτάνω, to pray.] A form of supplicatory prayer.

Supplications, with solemnity for the appeasing of God's wrath, were, of the Greek church, termed lytanies and rogations of the Latin.

Hooker.

Recollect your sins that you have done that week, and all your life time; and recite humbly and devoutly some penitential lytanies.

Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

- LITE.* adj.* [lyt, Sax.] Little. Still so used in the north of England.

Our Lord Jesu Crist quitheth every good deed, be it never so lite.

Chaucer, Piers. Tale.

From this exploit he spar'd not great nor lite.

Fairfax, Tass. B. 11.

- LITE.* n. s.* A little; a small portion.
This also is a northern phrase.

Of their array, whoso list heare more,
I shal rehearse, so as I can, a lite.

Chaucer, Fl. and Leaf.

- LITERAL. adj.* [literal, French; litera,
Lat.]

1. According to the primitive meaning, not figurative.

Through all the writings of the antient fathers,
we see that the words, which were, do continue;
the only difference is, that whereas before they had a literal, they now have a metaphorical use, and are as so many notes of remembrance unto us, that what they did signify in the latter, is accomplished in the truth.

Hooker.

A foundation, being primarily of use in architecture, hath no other literal notation but what belongs to it in relation to an house, or other building, nor figurative, but what is founded in that, and deduced from thence.

Hammond.

2. Following the letter, or exact words.

The fittest for public audience are such as,
following a middle course between the rigour of literal translations and the liberty of paraphrasts, do with greater shortness and plainness deliver the meaning.

Hooker.

3. Consisting of letters; as, the literal notation of numbers was known to Europeans before the cyphers.

- LITERAL. n. s.* Primitive or literal meaning.

How dangerous it is in sensible things to use metaphorical expressions unto the people, and what absurd conceits they will swallow in their literals, an example we have in our profession.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

- LITERALISM.* n. s.* [from literal.] What accords with the letter or exact word.

If none of these considerations, with all their weight and gravity, can avail to the dispossessing him of his precious literalism, let some one or other entreat him but to read on.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. ii. 18.

- LITERALIST.* n. s.* [from literal.] One who adheres to the letter or exact word.

Let the extreme literalist sit down now, and revolve whether this in all necessity be not the due result of our Saviour's words; or, if he persist to be otherwise opinioned, let him well advise, lest thinking to gripe fast the Gospel, he be found instead with the canon law in his fist.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. ii. 20.

I shall substitute the sense of Mr. Mede, which the coarsest literalist cannot evade.

More, Myst. of Godl. p. 192.

- LITERALITY.† n. s.* [from literal.] Original meaning.

Not attaining the true deuteroscopic and second intention of the words, they are fain to omit their superconsequences, coherences, figures, or tropo-logies, and are not sometimes persuaded beyond their literalities.

Brown.

Those who are still bent to hold this obstinate literality.

Milton, Doct. and Dis. of Divorce, B. i. ch. 14.

- LITERALLY. adv.* [from literal.]

1. According to the primitive import of words; not figuratively.

That a man and his wife are one flesh, I can comprehend; yet literally taken, it is a thing impossible.

Swift.

2. With close adherence to words; word by word.

Endeavouring to turn his Nisus and Euryalus as close as I was able, I have performed that episode too literally; that giving more scope to Me-zentius and Lausus, that version, which has more of the majesty of Virgil, has less of his conciseness.

Dryden.

So wild and ungovernable a poet cannot be translated literally; his genius is too strong to bear a chain.

Dryden.

LITERARY.† adj. [literarius, Lat.] Respecting letters; appertaining to literature; regarding learning. Literary history is an account of the state of learning, and of the lives of learned men. Literary conversation is talk about questions of learning. Literary is not properly used of missive letters. It may be said, this epistolary correspondence was political oftener than literary.

He has long outlived his century, the term commonly fixed as the test of literary merit.

Johnson, Pref. to Shakespeare.
The former of these appears with too much distinction in the literary as well as fashionable world, to make it necessary I should enlarge upon this subject.

Mason, Life of Gray.
Soon after his [Dr. Johnson's] return to London, which was in February, 1764, was founded that club which existed long without a name, but at Mr. Garrick's funeral became distinguished by the title of the literary club. Sir Joshua Reynolds had the merit of being the first proposer of it, to which Johnson acceded; and the original members were Sir Joshua Reynolds, Dr. Johnson, Mr. Edmund Burke, Dr. Nugent, Mr. Beaulieu, Mr. Langton, Dr. Goldsmith, Mr. Chamier, and Sir John Hawkins. Boswell, Life of Johnson.

LITERATE.* adj. [literatus, Latin.] Learned.

Cockeram.
This is the proper function of literary elegance; to figure virtue in so fresh and lively colours, that our imagination may be so taken with the beauty of virtue, as it may invite our minds to make love to her in solitude.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. 1. (1649), p. 348.
In literate nations, though the pronunciation, and sometimes the words of common speech, may differ, as now in England, compared with the south of Scotland, yet there is a written diction, which pervades all dialects, and is understood in every province: But where the whole language is colloquial, he that has only one part, never gets the rest, as he cannot get it but by change of residence. Johnson, Journ. Western Isles.

LITERATI. n.s. [Italian.] The learned.

I shall consult some literati on the project sent me for the discovery of the longitude. Spectator.

LITERATOR.* n.s. [literator, Lat.] A petty schoolmaster.

In this age of light, they teach the people, that preceptors ought to be in the place of gallants. They systematically corrupt a very corruptible race, (for some time a growing nuisance amongst you,) a set of pert petulant literators, to whom, instead of their proper but severe unostentatious duties, they assign the brilliant parts of men of wit and pleasure, of gay, young, military sparks, and dangles at toilets.

Burke, Lett. to a Member of the Fr. Nat. Assembly.

LITERATURE. n.s. [literatura, Lat.] Learning; skill in letters.

This kingdom hath been famous for good literature; and if preferment attend deservers, there will not want supplies. Bacon.

When men of learning are acted by a knowledge of the world, they give a reputation to literature, and convince the world of its usefulness.

Addison, Freeholder.
LITH.* n.s. [lith, Sax. lithus, Gothick.] A joint; a limb. Obsolete.

Chaunteclere, loken in every lith.

Chaucer, N. Pr. Tale.
LITHARGE. n.s. [litharge, French; lithargyrum, Lat.]

Litharge is properly lead vitrified, either alone or with a mixture of copper. This recrement is of two kinds, litharge of gold, and litharge of silver.

It is collected from the furnaces where silver is separated from lead, or from those where gold and silver are purified by means of that metal. The litharge sold in the shops is produced in the copper works, where lead has been used to purify that metal, or to separate silver from it. Hill, Materia Medica.

I have seen some parcels of glass adhering to the test or cupel as well as the gold or litharge.

Boyle.
If the lead be blown off from the silver by the bellows, it will, in great part, be collected in the form of a darkish powder; which, because it is blown off from silver, they call litharge of silver.

Boyle.
LITHE.† adj. [lithē, Saxon; from lith, a joint. See LITH.] Limber; flexible; soft; pliant; easily bent.

To makin lithe that erst was hard.

Chaucer, House of Fame, B. 1.
The unwieldy elephant,
To make them mirth, us'd all his might, and wraith'd

His lithe proboscis. Milton, P. L.

To LITHE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To smooth; to soften; to palliate. Chaucer so uses it, Troil. and Cress. iv. 754. Obsolete; except that, in some parts of the north of England, it is applied to their way of mixing oatmeal with milk.

2. [lyda, Su. Goth.] To listen; to attend. "Lyth ye, that is, hark ye." Yorkshire Gloss. And so lithe in Cumberland.

LITHENESS. n.s. [from lithe.] Limbreness; flexibility.

LITHER.† adj. [from lithe.]

1. Soft; pliant.

Thou antick, death,
Two Talbots winged through the lither sky,
In thy despite shall 'scape mortality. Shakspeare.

2. [lyð, Saxon.] Bad; sorry; corrupt. It is in the work of Robert of Gloucester written luther. Dr. Johnson. — Chaucer also uses it in the sense of wicked; but its more general acceptation is that of slothful, lazy, idle, indisposed to do any thing: which the Saxon word warrants. It is used in the north of England.

Not lyther in businesse, fervente in spirite.

Woolton, Chr. Manual, (1576,) K. vi.
Winter making men lither and idle.

Barret, Alv. (1580.)

Lazy, lither, idle, slothful, careless, negligent.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

As strange must be the lithomancy, or divination, from this stone, whereby Helenus the prophet foretold the destruction of Troy.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

LITHONTRIPTICK. adj. [lithos and τριπτεω; lithontriptyque, Fr.] Any medicine proper to dissolve the stone in the kidneys or bladder.

LITHOTOMIST. n.s. [lithos and τέμνω.] A chirurgeon who extracts the stone by opening the bladder.

LITHOTOMY. n.s. [lithos and τέμνω.] The art or practice of cutting for the stone.

LITHE.* adj. [from lithe.] Pliable; bending easily. Huloet.

LITIGANT. n.s. [litigans, Latin; litigant, French.] One engaged in a suit of law.

The cast litigant sits not down with one cross verdict, but recommences his suit.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

The litigants tear one another to pieces for the benefit of some third interest. L'Estrange, Fab.

LITIGANT. adj. Engaged in a juridical contest.

Judicial acts are those writings and matters which relate to judicial proceedings, and are sped in open court at the instance of one or both of the parties litigant. Ayliffe, Parergon.

To LITIGATE.† v. a. [litigo, Latin.] To contest in law; to debate by judicial process; to bring into litigation.

What scruples, lest some future birth
Should litigate a span of earth. Shenstone.

To LITIGATE. v. n. To manage a suit; to carry on a cause.

The appellant, after the interposition of an appeal, still litigates in the same cause.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

LITIGATION. n.s. [litigatio, Latin; from litigare.] Judicial contest; suit of law.

Never one clergyman had experience of both litigations, that hath not confessed, he had rather have three suits in Westminster-hall, than one in the arches. Clarendon.

LITIGIOUS. adj. [litigiosus, French.]

1. Inclivable to law-suits; quarrelsome; wrangling.

Soldiers find wars, and lawyers find out still Litigious men, who quarrels move. Donne.

His great application to the law, had not infected his temper with any thing positive or litigious. Addison.

2. Disputable; controvertible.

In litigious and controverted causes, the will of God is to have them to do whatsoever the sentence of judicial and final decision shall determine.

Hooker.

No fences parted fields, nor marks nor bounds,
Distinguish'd acres of litigious grounds.

Dryden, Georg.

LITIGIOUSLY. adv. [from litigious.] Wranglingly.

LITIGIOUSNESS.† n.s. [from litigious.] A wrangling disposition; inclination to vexatious suits.

Dr. Smalridge, who succeeded him [Atterbury] both at Carlisle and Christchurch, is said to have lamented his hard fate, in being forced to carry water after him, to extinguish the flames which his litigiousness had every where occasioned.

Stackhouse.

LITTEN.* n.s. [lithun, Saxon, a burying ground; from lic, a corpse, lik, Su. Goth. and tun, Icel. tuna, Su. Goth. a field, an enclosed place.] A place where the dead are reposit: the church-litten is yet an expression in several parts of England.

LITTER. n.s. [litiere, French.]

Addison on Italy.

3. Want of dignity.

The angelick grandeur, by being concealed, does not awaken our poverty, nor mortify our littleness so much, as if it was always displayed.

Collier of Envy.

LIT'TORAL. adj. [littoralis, Latin.] Belonging to the shore.

LITURGICAL.* } adj. [liturgique, Fr. See

LITUR'GIC. } LITURGY.] Belonging to a formulary of publick devotions.

Which lesson, if it had been well pressed by those that take on them to be somewhat gifted above their brethren, and observed better by their zealous followers, we should have had little need then of such liturgical deprecations.

Bp. Prideaux, Euch. p. 228.

A tedious number of liturgical tautologies.

Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

Thus our liturgical version translates rightly, "The king shall rejoice."

Mason, on Church Musick, p. 188.

The rest of the liturgic hymns were supposed to be contaminated by their long and antient connection with the Roman missal.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 166.

LITURGY.† n. s. [liturgie, French; λειτουργία, Greek, from λείτος, publick, and εργον, work.] Form of prayers; formulary of publick devotions.

4 N 2

We dare not admit any such form of liturgy, as either appointeth no scripture at all, or very little, to be read in the church. Hooker.

The blessedness of mortal vigils began to be importuned, so that a great part of divine liturgy was addressed solely to her. Hewel.

It is the greatest solemnity of prayer, the most powerful liturgy and means of impetration in this world. Bp. Taylor.

To LIVE.† v. n. [Gothick, liban; Icel. lifá; Sax. liban, līpan, līpan; Germ. and Dutch, leven.]

1. To be in a state of animation; to be not dead.

Is't night's predominance, or the day's shame, That darkness does the face of earth intomb, When living day should kiss it? Shakspeare. Macbeth.
To save the living and revenge the dead, Against one warrior's arms all Troy they led. Dryden.

2. To pass life in any certain manner with regard to habits; good or ill, happiness or misery.

O death, how bitter is the remembrance of thee to a man that liveth at rest! Ecclus. xli. 1.

Dr. Parker, in his sermon before them, touched them so near for their living, that they went near to touch him for his life. Hayward.

The condition required of us is a conjuncture of all gospel graces rooted in the heart, though mixed with much weakness, and perhaps with many sins, so they be not wilfully lived and died in. Hammond.

If we act by several broken views, we shall live and die in misery. Addison, Spect.

If we are firmly resolved to live up to the dictates of reason, without any regard to wealth and reputation, we may go through life with steadiness and pleasure. Addison.

3. To continue in life.

Our high-plac'd Macbeth Shall live the course of nature, and pay his breath To time and mortal custom. Shakspeare.

See the minutes how they run;
How many makes the hour full compleat,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live. Shakspeare.

The way to live long must be, to use our bodies so as is most agreeable to the rules of temperance. Ray on the Creation.

4. To live emphatically; to be in a state of happiness.

What greater curse could envious fortune give Than just to die when I began to live? Dryden.

Now three-and-thirty rolling years are fled
Since I began, nor yet begin to live. Brown.
Live while you live, the epicure would say,
And seize the pleasures of the present day;
Live while you live, the sacred preacher cries,
And give to God each moment as it flies:
Lord, in my views let both united be;
I live in pleasure, when I live to thee, Doddridge, in Orton's Life of him.

5. To be exempt from death, temporal or spiritual.

My statutes and judgements, if a man do, he shall live in them. Lev. xviii. 5.

6. To remain undestroyed.

It was a miraculous providence that could make a vessel, so ill manned, live upon sea; that kept it from being dashed against the hills, or overwhelmed in the deeps. Burnet.

Mark how the shifting winds from west arise,
And what collected night involves the skies!
Nor can our shaken vessels live at sea,
Much less against the tempest force their way. Dryden.

How a vessel, formed according to the description given of the structure of the ark, could live, as the seaman's phrase is, in such a tempest of waters. Biblioth. Biblica, Orf. i. 230.

7. To continue; not to be lost.

Men's evil manners live in brass, their virtues We write in water. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.
Sounds which address the ear are lost and die In one short hour; but that which strikes the eye Lives long upon the mind; the faithful sight Engraves the knowledge with a beam of light. Watts.

The tomb with manly arms and trophies graces There high in air memorial of my name Fix the smooth oar, and bid me live to fame. Pope.

8. To converse; to cohabit; followed by with.

The shepherd swains shall dance and sing,
For thy delight each May morning.
If these delights thy mind may move,
Then live with me, and be my love. Shakspeare.

His goods were all seized upon, and a small portion thereof appointed for his poor wife to live upon. Knolles.

The number of soldiers can never be great in proportion to that of people, no more than of those that are idle in a country, to that of those who live by labour. Temple.

He had been most of his time in good service, and had something to live on now he was old. Temple.

11. To be in a state of motion or vegetation.

In a spacious cave of living stone,
The tyrant Æolus, from his airy throne,
With power imperial curbs the struggling winds. Dryden.

Cool groves and living lakes
Give after toilsome days a soft repose at night. Dryden.

12. To be unextinguished.

Pure oil and incense on the fire they throw:
These gifts the greedy flames to dust devour,
Then on the living coals red wine they pour. Dryden.

LIVE.† adj. [from alive.]

1. Quick; not dead.

If one man's ox hurt another that he die, they shall sell the live ox, and divide the money. Exodus.

2. Active; not extinguished.

A louder sound was produced by the impetuous eruptions of the halituous flames of the saltpetre, upon casting of a live coal upon it. Boyle.

By thee the various vegetative tribes
Wrapt in a filmy net, and clad with leaves,
Draw the live ether, and imbibe the dew. Thomson, Spring.

3. Vivid; spoken of colour.

Now from the virgin's cheek a fresher bloom
Shoots, less and less, the live carnation round;
Her lips blush deeper sweets. Thomson, Spring.

LIVE,* n. s. Life. Obsolete. See ALIVE.

LIVELESS.† adv. [from live.] Wanting life; rather, lifeless.

Description cannot suit itself in words,
To demonstrate the life of such a battle,
In life so liveless as it shews itself. Shaks. Hen. V.

A liveless, cadaverous, noisome soul.

Hammond, Works, iv. 562.

LIVELIHOOD.† n. s. [It appears to me corrupted from livelode. Dr. Johnson. — In the first sense, which is all that Dr. Johnson notices, this may be the case; but, in the second, it is from lively, and head, or hood, i. e. quality, character. See HOOD.]

1. Support of life; maintenance; means of living.

Ah! luckless babe, born under cruel star,
And in dead parents' baleful ashes bred;
Full little weenest thou what sorrows are,
Left thee for portion of thy livelthood. Spenser, F. Q.

That rebellion drove the lady from thence, to find a livelthood out of her own estate. Clarendon.

He brings disgrace upon his character to submit to the picking up of a livelthood in that strolling way of canting and begging. L'Estrange.

It is their profession and livelthood to get their living by practices for which they deserve to forfeit their lives. South.

They have been as often banished out of most other places; which must very much disperse a people, and oblige them to seek a livelthood where they can find it. Addison, Spect.

Trade employs multitudes of hands, and furnishes the poorest of our fellow-subjects with the opportunities of gaining an honest livelthood: the skilful or industrious find their account in it. Addison, Freetholder.

2. Living form; appearance of life. Spenser writes it lively-head.

If in that picture dead
Such life ye read, and virtue in vaine shew:
What mote ye weene, if the trew lively-head
Of that most glorious visage ye did view. Spenser, F. Q. ii. ix. 3.

The tyranny of her sorrow takes all livelthood from her cheek. Shakspeare, All's Well.

LIVELY.* adv. See LIVELY.

LIVELINESS.† n. s. [from lively.]

1. Appearance of life.

What hinders while we are living, and among the living, but that we may study to adorn our looks, so as may be most remote from a deathfulness, and most agreeable by their liveliness to those with whom we live. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsome, p. 70.

That liveliness which the freedom of the pencil makes appear, may seem the living hand of nature. Dryden, Dufrenoy.

2. Vivacity; sprightliness.

Give me that wit, whom praise excites, glory puts on, or disgrace grieves: he is to be nourished with ambition, pricked forward with honour, checked with reprehension, and never to be suspected of sloth: though he be given to play, it is a sign of spirit and liveliness. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

Extravagant young fellows, that have liveliness and spirit, come sometimes to be set right, and so make able and great men; but tame and low spirits very seldom attain to any thing. Locke on Education.

LIVELODE.† n. s. [live and lode, from lead; the means of leading life. Kelham places livelode among his old French words.] Maintenance; support; livelihood.

She gave like blessing to each creature

As well of wordly livelode as of life,
That there might be no difference nor strife. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Temporal goods they had, more than them needed reasonable to their necessary livelode. Fox, Acts and Mon. of W. Thorpe.

LIV'ELONG. adj. [live and long.]

1. Tedious; long in passing.

Many a time, and oft,

Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements,
Your infants in your arms; and there have sat
The livelong day, with patient expectation
To see great Pompey pass. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.
The obscure bird clamour'd the livelong night.

Shakespeare.

On a young and old come forth to play,

As a sun-shine holiday,

Till the livelong daylight fail. Milton, L' All.

Seek for pleasure to destroy

The sorrows of this livelong night. Prior.

How could she sit the livelong day,

Yet never ask us once to play? Swift.

2. Lasting; durable. Not used.

Thou, in our wonder and astonishment,

Hast built thyself a livelong monument.

Milton, Ess. on Shakespeare.

LIVELY. adj. [live and like. Sax. liphc.]

1. Brisk; vigorous; vivacious.

But wherefore comes old Manoh in such haste,
With youthful steps? much livelier than ere while
He seems; supposing here to find his son,
Or of him bringing to us some glad news?

Milton, S. A.

2. Gay; airy.

Dulness delighted, ey'd the lively dunce,

Remembering she herself was pertness once.

Pope.

Form'd by thy converse, happily to steer

From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.

3. Representing life.

Since a true knowledge of nature gives us pleasure, a lively imitation of it in poetry or painting must produce a much greater.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

4. Strong; energetick.

His faith must be not only living, but lively too;
it must be brightened and stirred up by a particular exercise of those virtues specifically requisite to a due performance of this duty.

South.

The colours of the prism are manifestly more full, intense, and lively, than those of natural bodies.

Newton, Opticks.

Imprint upon their minds, by proper arguments and reflections, a lively persuasion of the certainty of a future state.

Atterbury.

LIVELY. adv.

1. Briskly; vigorously.

They brought their men to the slough, who discharging lively almost close to the face of the enemy, did much amaze them.

Hayward.

2. With strong resemblance of life.

That part of poetry must needs be best,
which describes most lively our actions and passions,
our virtues and our vices.

Dryden, Pref. to his St. of Innocence.

In which time of remission of the higher powers,
the lower may advance, and more lively display themselves.

Glanville, Pre-exist. p. 115.

This sacrament of the eucharist so lively resembles, and so happily falls in with it, that it is indeed itself a supper, and is called a supper.

South, Serm. ii. 276.

LIVER. n. s. [from live.]

• One who lives.

Be thy affections undisturb'd and clear,
Guided to what may great or good appear,
And try if life be worth the liver's care. Prior.

• One who lives in any particular manner with respect to virtue or vice, happiness or misery.

If any loose liver have any goods of his own,
the sheriff is to seize thereupon.

Spenser on Ireland.

The end of his descent was to gather a church of holy christian livers over the whole world.

Hammond.

Here are the wants of children, of distracted persons, of sturdy wandering beggars and loose disorderly livers, at one view represented.

Atterbury.

LIVER. n. s. [liver, Saxon.] One of the entrails.

With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come:
And let my liver rather heat with wine,
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans.

Shakespeare.

Reason and respect

Makes livers pale, and lusthood dejected. Shaksp.

LIVERCOLOUR. adj. [liver and colour.]

Dark red.

The uppermost stratum is of gravel; then clay of various colours, purple, blue, red, livercolour.

Woodward.

LIVERED.* adj. Having a liver; as,
"white-livered." Sherwood. "Lily-livered." Shakespeare. Both these expressions were used to denote faint-hearted, cowardly, mean, dastardly, unmanly.

LIVERGROWN. adj. [liver and grown.]

Having a great liver.

I enquired what other casualties were most like the rickets, and found that livergrown was nearest.

Graunt.

LIVERWORT. n. s. [liver and wort; lichen.]

A plant.

That sort of liverwort which is used to cure the bite of mad dogs, grows on commons, and open heaths, where the grass is short, on declivities, and on the sides of pits. This spreads on the surface of the ground, and, when in perfection, is of an ash colour; but, as it grows old, it alters, and becomes of a dark colour.

Miller.

LIVERY. n. s. [from liver, French.]

1. The act of giving possession. Livery and seisen is delivery and possession.

She gladly did of that same habe accept,

As of her own by livery and seisen.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. vi. 97.

You do wrongfully seize Hereford's right,

Call in his letters patents that he hath

By his attorneys general to sue

His livery, and deny his offered homage. Shaksp.

2. Release from wardship.

Had the two houses first sued out their livery, and once effectually redeemed themselves from the wardship of the tumults, I should then suspect my own judgement.

King Charles.

3. The writ by which possession is obtained.

4. The state of being kept at a certain rate.

What livery is, we by common use in England know well enough, namely, that it is allowance of horse-meat, as they commonly use the word in stabling; as, to keep horses at livery; the which word, I guess, is derived of livering or delivering forth their nightly food. So in great houses, the livery is said to be served up for all night, that is, their evening allowance for drink; and livery is also called the upper weed which a serving man wears; so called, as I suppose, for that it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure. So it is apparent, that, by the word livery, is there meant horse-meat.

Spenser on Ireland.

5. The clothes given to servants; from the scarfs or ribbands, of chosen colours, given by the ladies of old to knights.

"To such [knights] as were victorious, prizes were awarded by the judges, and presented by the hands of the ladies — with ribbands, or scarfs, of chosen colours, called liveries. Those liveries are the ladies' favours spoken of in romance;

and appear to have been the origin of the ribbands, which still distinguish so many orders of knighthood." Brydson's Summary View of Heraldry. From the old cavaliers wearing the livery of their mistresses, the custom of people of quality making their servants wear a livery, to denote service, is supposed to be derived. Livery, in former days, thus seems also to have been used for a cockade.

My mind for weeds your virtue's livery wears.

Sidney.

Perhaps they are by so much the more loth to forsake this argument, for that it hath, though nothing else, yet the name of Scripture, to give it some kind of countenance more than the pretext of livery coats afforeth.

Hooker.

I think, it is our way,

If we will keep in favour with the king,

To be her men, and wear her livery.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Yet do our hearts wear Timon's livery,

That see I by our faces. Shakespeare, Timon.

Ev'ry lady cloth'd in white,

And crown'd with oak and laurel every knight,

Are servants to the leaf, by liveries known

Of innocence. Dryden, Fl. and Leaf.

On others int'rest her gay livery flings,

Int'rest that waves on party-colour'd wings;

Turn'd to the sun she casts a thousand dyes,

And as she turns the colours fall or rise.

Pope, Dunciad.

If your dinner miscarries, you were teized by the footmen coming into the kitchen; and to prove it true, throw a ladleful of broth on one or two of their liveries.

Swift.

6. A particular dress; a garb worn as a token or consequence of any thing.

Of fair Urania, fairer than a green,

Proudly bedeck'd in April's livery.

Sidney.

Mistake me not for my complexion,

The shadow'd livery of the burning sun,

To whom I am a neighbour, and near bred. Shaks.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,

Insect, or worm: those wad'd their limber fans,

For wings, and smallest lineaments exact,

In all the liveries deck'd of summer's pride,

With spots of gold and purple, azure, green.

Milton, P. L.

Now came still evening on, and twilight grey

Had in her sober livery all things clad.

Milton, P. L.

It is very proper and humane to put ourselves, as it were, in their livery after their decease, and wear a habit unsuitable to prosperity, while those we loved and honoured are mouldering in the grave.

Tatler, No. 184.

7. [In London.] The collective body of liverymen.

To *LIVERY. v. a. [from the noun.] To clothe in a livery; to dress in a garment betokening any thing.

His rudeness —

Did livery falseness in a pride of truth.

Shakespeare, Lover's Complaint.

A thousand liveried angels lackey her.

Milton, Comus.

Our youth, all liveried o'er with foreign gold,

Before her danc'd. Pope, Epil. to Sol.

The pair arrive; the liveried servants wait;

Their lord receives them at the pompous gate.

Parnell, Hermit.

LIVERYMAN. n. s. [livery and man.]

1. One who wears a livery; a servant of an inferiour kind.

The witnesses made oath, that they had heard some of the livymen frequently railing at their mistress. Arbutnot.

2. [In London.] A freeman of a company. LIVES. n. s. [the plural of life.]

So short is life, that every peasant strives, In a farm house or field, to have three lives. Bacon.

LIVID. adj. [lividus, Latin; livide, Fr.] Discoloured, as with a blow; black and blue.

It was a pestilent fever, not seated in the veins or humours, for that there followed no carbuncles, no purple or livid spots, the mass of the blood not being tainted. Bacon.

Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss:

O envy not the dead, they feel not bliss! Dryden. They beat their breasts with many a bruising blow, Till they turn'd livid, and corrupt the snow. Dryd.

LIVIDITY. n. s. [lividité, French; from livid.] Discolouration, as by a blow.

The signs of a tendency to such a state, are darkness or lividity of the countenance. Arbutnot on Aliments.

*LIVIDNESS. n. s. [from livid.] The state of being livid. Scott.

LIVING. participial adj.

1. Vigorous; active: as, a living faith.

2. Being in motion; having some natural energy, or principle of action: as, the living green, the living springs.

LIVING. n. s. [from live.]

1. Support; maintenance; fortune on which one lives.

The Arcadians fought as in unknown place, having no succour but in their hands; the Helots, in their own place, fighting for their livings, wives, and children. Sidney.

All they did cast in of their abundance; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living. St. Mark.

2. Power of continuing life.

There is no living without trusting somebody or other, in some cases. L'Estrange.

3. Livelihood.

For ourselves we may a living make. Spenser, Habb. Tale.

Then may I set the world on wheels, when she can spin for her living. Shakspeare.

Isaac and his wife, now dig for your life, Or shortly you'll dig for your living. Denham.

Actors must represent such things as they are capable to perform, and by which both they and the scribbler may get their living. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

4. Benefice of a clergyman.

Some of our ministers having the livings of the country offered unto them, without pains, will, neither for any love of God, nor for all the good they may do, by winning souls to God, be drawn forth from their warm nests. Spenser.

The parson of the parish preaching against adultery, Mrs. Bull told her husband, that they would join to have him turned out of his living for using personal reflections. Arbutnot.

LIVINGLY. adv. [from living.] In the living state.

In vain do they scruple to approach the dead, who livingly are cadaverous, or fear any outward pollution, whose temper pollutes themselves. Brown, Vulg. Err.

LIVRE. n. s. [Fr.] The sum by which the French reckon their money, equal nearly to our ten-pence.

LIXIVIAL. adj. [from lixivium, Lat.]

1. Impregnated with salts like a lixivium. The symptoms of the excretion of the bile vitiated, were a yellowish colour of the skin, and a lixivial urine. Arbutnot.

2. Obtained by lixivium.

Helmont conjectured, that lixivial salts do not pre-exist in their alcalizate form. Boyle.

LIXIVIALE. } adj. [lixivieux, French; LIXIVIATED. } from lixivium.] Making a lixivium.

In these the salt and lixivated serosity, with some portion of choler, is divided between the guts and the bladder. Brown.

Lixiviate salts to which pot-ashes belong, by piercing the bodies of vegetables, dispose them to part readily with their tincture. Boyle.

LIXIVIUM. n. s. [Latin.] Lye; water impregnated with alkaline salt, produced from the ashes of vegetables; a liquor which has the power of extraction.

I made a lixivium of fair water and salt of wormwood, and having frozen it with snow and salt, I could not discern any thing more like to wormwood than to several other plants. Boyle.

LIZARD. n. s. [lisarde, French; lacertus, Lat.] An animal resembling a serpent, with legs added to it.

There are several sorts of lizards; some in Arabia of a cubit long. In America they eat lizards; it is very probable likewise that they were eaten in Arabia and Judea, since Moses ranks them among the unclean creatures. Culmet.

Thou'dst like a foul mis-shapen stigmatic, Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided, As venomous toads, or lizards' dreadful stings. Shakspeare.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting, Lizard's leg, and owl's wing. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

LL.D. [legum doctor.] A doctor of the canon and civil laws.

Lo! interject. [la, Saxon. Dr. Johnson.—The imperative of look. So the common people say corruptly, "lo' you there now; la' you there." Where we now employ sometimes lo, with discrimination, our old English writers used indifferently lo, loke, loke, for this imperative. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. i. 478.] Look; see; behold. It is a word used to recal the attention generally to some object of sight; sometimes to something heard, but not properly; often to something to be understood.

Lo! within a ken our army lies. Shakspeare. Now must the world point at poor Catherine, And say, lo! there is mad Petruchio's wife. Shakspeare.

Lo! I have a weapon, A better never did itself sustain Upon a soldier's thigh. Shakspeare, Othello.

I am yours for ever. Thou didst utter, — Why lo' you now, I've spoke to the purpose twice. Shakspeare.

For lo' he sung the world's stupendous birth. Roscommon.

Lo! heav'n and earth combine To blast our bold design. Dryden, Albion.

LOACH. n. s. [loche, Fr.]

The loach is a most dainty fish; he breeds and feeds in little and clear swift brooks or rills, and lives there upon the gravel, and in the sharpest streams: he grows not to be above a finger long, and no thicker than is suitable to that length: he is of the shape of an eel, and has a beard of wattles like a barbel: he has two fins at his side, four at his belly, and one at his tail, dappled with many black or brown spots: his mouth, barbel-like, under his nose. This fish is usually full of eggs or spawn, and is by Gesner, and other physicians, commended for great nourishment, and to be very grateful both to the palate and stomach of sick persons, and is to be fished for with a small worm, at the bottom, for he seldom rises above the gravel. Walton, Angler.

LOAD. n. s. [hlād, Saxon; hlaban, to load.]

1. A burthen; a freight; lading.

Fair plant with fruit surcharg'd, Deigns none to ease thy load, and taste thy sweet? Milton, P. L.

Then on his back he laid the precious load, And sought his wonted shelter. Dryden, Nun's Tale.

Let India boast her groves, nor envy we The weeping amber, and the balmy tree; While by our oaks the precious loads are born, And realms commanded which these trees adorn. Pope.

2. Weight; pressure; encumbrance.

Jove lighten'd of his load. Pope.

3. Weight, or violence of blows.

Like lion mov'd they laid on load, And made a cruel fight. Chevy Chase.

Far heavier load thyself expect to feel From my prevailing arm. Milton, P. L.

And Mnesteus laid hard load upon his helm. Dryden.

4. Any thing that depresses.

How a man can have a quiet and cheerful mind under a great burden and load of guilt, I know not, unless he be very ignorant. Ray on Creation.

5. As much drink as one can bear.

There are those that can never sleep without their load, nor enjoy one easy thought, till they have laid all their cares to rest with a bottle. L'Estrange.

The thundering god, Ev'n he withdrew to rest, and had his load. Dryden.

To LOAD. v. a. preterite, loaded; par. loaden or laden. [hlaban, Sax.]

1. To burden; to freight.

At last, laden with honour's spoils, Returns the good Andronicus to Rome. Shaksp.

Your carriages were heavy loaden; they are a burden to the beast. Isa. xlv. 1.

2. To encumber; to embarrass.

He that makes no reflections on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales, fit in winter nights for the entertainment of others. Locke.

3. To charge a gun.

A mariner having discharged his gun and loading it suddenly again, the powder took fire. Wiseman.

4. To make heavy by something appended or annexed.

Thy dreadful vow, loaden with death, still sounds In my stunn'd ears. Addison, Cato.

LOAD. n. s. [more properly lode, as it was anciently written from læban, Saxon, to lead.] The leading vein in a mine.

The tin lay couched at first in certain strakes amongst the rocks, like the veins in a man's body, from the depth whereof the main load spreadeth out his branches, until they approach the open air. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Their manner of working in the lead mines, is to follow the load as it lieth. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

LOADER.† n. s. [from load.] One who loads.

Every vice is a loadstar, but that's a ten.

Dryden, Arg. to Jew. Sat. 6.

LO'ADMANAGE.* n. s. [labman, Saxon, a pilot or guide; and age, the French termination of nouns: it would have been more English, as Mr. Tyrwhitt has observed, to say lodemanship; as, seamanship, horsemanship, &c.] In the statute 3 Geo. I. c. 13. loadmanage is repeatedly used in the sense of pilotage. Chaucer describes his shipman's lodemanager, which the Glossary to Urry's edition of the poet calls "the skill or art of navigation."

LO'ADSMAN.† n. s. [lode and man; from to lead; Saxon, labman; Su. Goth. lootsman. See LOADSTAR.] He who leads the way; a pilot.

Asking them anon,
If they were brokin, or aught wo-begon,
Or had nede of lodemen.

Chaucer, Leg. of Hyp. and Medea.

Lodismen and mayeris, in all things redy.

March, Sec. Tale, or Hist. of Beryn.

LO'ADSTAR. n. s. [more properly, as it is in Maundeville, lodestar, from lædan, to lead.] The polestar; the cynosure; the leading or guiding star.

She was the loadstar of my life; she the blessing
Of mine eyes; she the overthrow of my desires,
And yet the recompence of my overthrow. Sidney.

My Helice, the loadstar of my life. Spenser.

O happy fair!

Your eyes are loadstars, and your tongue sweet air!
More tuneable than lark to shepherd's ear
When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds appear.

Shakespeare.

That clear majesty

Which standeth fix'd, yet spreads her heavenly worth,

Lodestone to hearts, and lodestar to all eyes. Davies.

LO'ADSTONE. n. s. [properly lodestone or leadingstone. See LOADSTAR.] The magnet; the stone on which the mariner's compass needle is touched to give it a direction north and south.

The loadstone is a peculiar and rich ore of iron, found in large masses, of a deep iron-grey where fresh broken, and often tinged with a brownish or reddish colour: it is very heavy, and considerably hard, and its great character is that of affecting iron. This ore of iron is found in England, and in most other places where there are mines of that metal. Hill, Mat. Medica.

The use of the loadstone was kept as secret as any of the other mysteries of the art. Swift.

LOAF.† n. s. [from hlaf or lar, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — So the M. Goth. hlaihs, hlaihs; Su. Goth. lef, as noticed by Serenius: to which Dr. Jamieson adds the Germ. leib; Iceland. hleif; lef; Fenn. leipa; Lappon. leab; Fris. leef, leaf; low Latin, leibo; Latin, libum. Mr. H. Tooke contends, that loaf is the past participle of the Saxon hlupan, to raise; and means merely raised; as the M. Goth. hlaihs is the same participle of hleiban, to raise or lift up. Dr. Jamieson refers the word to the Germ. leib, and the cognate terms denoting life; bread being almost universally considered as "the staff of life;" but at the same time admits the ingenuity of Mr. Tooke's theory as far as it applies to loaf; viz. "After the bread has been wetted, by which it becomes dough; then comes the leaven, which in the Saxon is termed hæf and hæpen; by which it becomes loaf." Div. of Purl. ii. 157. — Lye considers the Goth hleibjan, which strictly means to sustain, as derived from hlaihs, bread. And Leigh speaks of the Saxon loef, to sustain. See LORD.]

1. A mass of bread as it is formed by the baker: a loaf is thicker than a cake.

Easy it is

Of a cut loaf to steal a shive we know. Shakespeare.

The bread corn in the town sufficed not for six days: hereupon the soldiers entered into proportion; and, to give example, the lord Clinton limited himself to a loaf a day. Hayward.

With equal force you may break a loaf of bread into more and less parts than a lump of lead of the same bigness. Digby.

2. Any thick mass into which a body is wrought.

Your wine becomes so limpid, that you may bottle it with a piece of loaf sugar in each bottle. Mortimer.

LOAM.† n. s. [hm, laam, Saxon; limus, Latin; from λίμνη, a fen. Junius.] Fat, unctuous, tenacious earth; marl.

The purest treasure

Is spotless reputation: that away,

Men are but gilded loam or painted clay. Shaks.

Alexander returneth to dust; the dust is earth; of earth we make loam; and why of that loam might they not stop a beer barrel?

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

We wash a wall of loam; we labour in vain.

Hooker on Justification, § 19.

TO LOAM. v. a. [from the noun.] To smear with loam, marl, or clay; to clay.

The joist ends, and girders which be in the walls, must be loamed all over, to preserve them from the corroding of the mortar.

Mozon, Mech. Exercises.

LO'AMY.† adj. [from loam.]

1. Marly.

The mellow earth is the best, between the two extremes of clay and sand, if it be not loamy and binding. Bacon.

Auricular seedlings best like a loamy sand, or light moist earth; yet rich and shaded.

Evelyn, Kal.

2. Smeared with loam.

Fetters of gold are but fetters; and the peasant that from his loamy cottage is carried prisoner to a stately castle, though for his homely stall he hath the exchange of a princely building, yet he changes his golden liberty for iron shackles.

Hewitt, Sermon. (1658), p. 195.

LOAN.† n. s. [hlæn, Saxon. Dr. Johnson.

— Su. Goth. laen; vox usitatissima. Serenius. Icel. the same. M. Goth. laun, merces, remuneratio; leiguan, to lend; whence laena, Su. Goth. leenen, Dutch, and lænan, Saxon, to lend; of which last Mr. H. Tooke pronounces loan to be the past participle.] Any thing lent; any thing given to another, on condition of return or repayment.

The better such ancient revenues shall be paid, the less need her majesty ask subsidies, fifteens, and loans. Bacon.

You're on the fret,

Because, in so debauch'd and vile an age,

Thy friend and old acquaintance dares disown

The gold you lent him, and forswear the loan. Dryden.

TO LOAN.* v. a. [lænan, Saxon.] To lend. Not now in use. "Loned, mutuus, lent." Huloot.

He delivers up his people to their enemies, sometimes by way of location, loan, or letting; sometimes again by vendition, sale, or utter alienation: By way of location, or loaning them out: so we shall read in the Book of Judges; He did often let out his people to the oppressor for their sins.

Langley, Sermon. (1644.), p. 20.

LO'ANING.* n. s. See LONE, LONNIN.

LOATH.† adj. [lað, Saxon. Dr. Johnson.

— Almost all the citations given by Dr. Johnson, have loth; yet loath is certainly preferable for the sake of preserving the analogy between it and to loathe, unless it be thought better to write that word lothe. The original Saxon lað leaves this matter uncertain. Nares, Elem. of Orthoepey, p. 298.] Unwilling; disliking; not ready; not inclined.

These fresh and delightful brooks, how slowly they slide away, as loth to leave the company of so many things united in perfection! Sidney.

With lofty eyes, half loth to look so low,
She thanked them in her disdainful view.

Ne other grace vouchsafed them to show

Of princess worthy. Spenser, F. Q.

When he heard her answers loth, he knew

Some secret sorrow did her heart distract. Spenser, F. Q.

To speak so indirectly, I am loth;

I'd say the truth; but to accuse him so,

That is your part. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.

Long doth she stay, as loth to leave the land,

From whose soft side she first did issue make,

She tastes all places, turns to ev'ry hand,

Her flowery banks unwilling to forsake. Davies.

Then wilt thou not be loth

To leave this paradise, but shalt possess

A paradise within thee, happier far! Milton, P. L.

To pardon willing, and to punish loth;

You strike with one hand, but you heal with both:

Lifting up all that prostrate lie, you grieve

You cannot make the dead again to live. Waller.

When Æneas is forced to kill Lausus, the poet shews him compassionate, and is loth to destroy such a master-piece of nature. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

As some faint pilgrim standing on the shore,

First views the torrent he would venture o'er;

And then his inn upon the farther ground,

Loth to wade through, and lother to go round:

Then dipping in his staff does trial make

How deep it is; and, sighing, pulls it back. Dryden.

I know you shy to be oblig'd:

And still more loath to be oblig'd by me. Southern.

TO LOATHE.† v. a. [laðian, Saxon; to detest.]

1. To hate; to look on with abhorrence.

Parthenia had learned both liking and misliking, loving and loathing. Sidney.

They with their filthiness

Polluted this same gentle soil long time,

That their own mother loath'd their beastliness. Spenser.

How am I caught with an unwary oath,

Not to reveal the secret which I loath. Waller.

For thee the lion loathes the taste of blood,

And roaring hunts his female through the wood. Dryden.

Now his exalted spirit loaths

Incumbrances of food and cloaths. Swift.

2. To consider with the disgust of satiety.

Loathing the honey'd cakes, I long for bread.

Croley.

Our appetite is extinguished with the satisfaction, and is succeeded by loathing and satiety. Rogers.

3. To see food with dislike.

Loathing is a symptom known to attend disorders of the stomach; the cure must have regard to the cause. Quincy.

To LOATHING.† v. n.

1. To create disgust; to cause abhorrence. Obsolete, Dr. Johnson says, citing a corrupted passage from Spenser, viz. "And loathing paddocks," where the true reading is, "And loathed paddocks," i. e. detested paddocks, not paddocks creating disgust. See the edition of Spenser's Works in 1805, vol. i. p. 199.

2. To feel abhorrence or disgust.

The fish in the river shall die, and the river stink; and the Egyptians shall loathe to drink of the water. Exodus.

Why do I stay within this hated place,
Where every object shocks my loathing eyes? Rowe.

LO'ATHER.† n. s. [from loath.] One that loathes. Sherwood.

LO'ATHFUL. adj. [loath and full.]

1. Abhorring; hating.

Which he did with loathful eyes behold,
He would no more endure. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

2. Abhorred; hated.

Above the reach of loathful sinful lust,
Whose base effect, through cowardly distrust
Of his weak wings, dare not to heaven fly. Spenser.

LO'ATHING.* n. s. [from loath.] Disgust; disinclination; unwillingness; aversion to.

A loathing and detestation of the unjust and tyrannous rule of Harold. Spenser on Ireland.

I can give no reason,
More than a lodge'd hate, and a certain loathing,
I bear Antonio. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
In nuptial cinders this revives the fire,
And turns their mutual loathings to desire. Congreve, Jew. Stat. 11.

LO'ATHINGLY. adv. [from loath.] In a fastidious manner.

LO'ATHLINESS.* n. s. [from loathly.] What excites hatred or abhorrence.

The lesson [of matters historical] is as it were the mirror of man's life, expressing actually (and as it were at the eye) the beautie of virtue, and the deformitie and loathliness of vice.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 206. b.

The more ill savour and loathliness we can find in our bosom sins, the nearer we come to the purity of that Holy One of Israel, our Blessed Redeemer. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 188.

LO'ATHLY.† adj. [laðh, Saxon.] Hateful; abhorred; exciting hatred.

Thou art so loathly, and so old also.

Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale.

An huge great dragon, horrible in sight,
Bred in the loathly lakes of Tartary,
With murder's ravin. Spenser, F. Q.
The people fear me; for they do observe
Unfath'd heirs, and loathly birds of nature. Shakespeare.

Sour-cy'd disdain, and discord shall bestow
The union of your bed with weeds so loathly,
That you shall hate it. Shakespeare, Tempest.

LO'ATHLY. adv. [from loath.] Unwillingly; without liking or inclination.

The upper streams make such haste to have their part of embracing, that the nether, though loathly must needs give place unto them. Sidney.

Loathly opposite I stood

To his unnatural purpose. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
This shews that you from nature loathly stray,
That suffer not an artificial day. Donne.

LO'ATHNESS. n. s. [from loath.] Unwillingness.

The fair soul herself

Weigh'd between loathness and obedience,
Which end the beam should bow. Shaks. Tempest.

Should we be taking leave,
As long a term as yet we have to live,
The loathness to depart would grow. Shaks. Cymb.
After they had sat about the fire, there grew a general silence and loathness to speak amongst them; and immediately one of the weakest fell down in a swoon. Bacon.

LO'ATHSOME. adj. [from loath.]

1. Abhorred; detestable.

The fresh young fly

Did much disdain to subject his desire

To loathsome sloth, or hours in ease to waste. Spenser.

While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules
To loathsome sickness. Milton, P. L.

If we consider man in such a loathsome and provoking condition, was it not love enough that he was permitted to enjoy a being? South.

2. Causing satiety or fastidiousness.

The sweetest honey

Is loathsome in its own deliciousness,
And in the taste confounds the appetite. Shaks.

LO'ATHSOMELY.* adv. [from loathsome.]
So as to excite hatred or disgust.

What need I tell you how loathsomely deformed these fashions of the world make us to appear in the sight of God? Bp. Hall, Fashions of the World.

Neither disdaineth he to enter into the poorest cottage, though he even creep into it, and though it smell never so loathsomely.

Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 14.

LO'ATHSOMENESS.† n. s. [from loathsome.]
Quality of raising hatred, disgust, or abhorrence.

The loathsomeness of them [rags] offends me more than the stripes I have received.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Take her skin from her face, and thou shall see all loathsomeness under it.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 566.

The catcombs must have been full of stench and loathsomeness, if the dead bodies that lay in them were left to rot in open niches. Addison.

LOAVES, plural of loaf.

Democritus, when he lay a dying, caused loaves of new bread to be opened, poured a little wine into them; and so kept himself alive with the odour till a feast was past. Bacon.

LOB.† n. s. [perhaps of the same origin as looby. See Looby.]

1. Any one heavy, clumsy, or sluggish; a clown.

Find Esau such a lout or lob.

Interlude of Jacob and Esau, (1568.)

Farewell, thou lob of spirits, I'll begone,
Our queen and all her elves come here anon.

Shakespeare.

This is the wonted way for quacks and cheats to gull country lobs.

Bp. Gauden, Anti-Baal-Berith, (1661,) p. 12.

2. Lob's pound; a prison. Probably a prison for idlers or sturdy beggars.

Crowdore, whom in irons bound,

Thou basely thrust'st into lob's pound. Hudibras.

If he can once compass him, and get him in lob's-pound, he'll make nothing of him, but speak a few hard words to him, and perhaps bind him over to his good behaviour for a thousand years!

Addison, Drummer.

3. A big worm.

For the trout the dew worm, which some also call the lob worm, and the branding are the chief.

Waltom, Angler.

To LOB. v. a. To let fall in a slovenly or lazy manner.

The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks, —

— and their poor jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the hides and hips. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

LO'BBY. n. s. [laube, German.] An opening before a room.

His lobbies fill with 'tendance,

Rain sacrificial whisperings in his ear,
Make sacred even his stirrup. Shakspeare, Timon.

Before the duke's rising from the table, he stood expecting till he should pass through a kind of lobby between that room and the next, where were divers attending him. Wotton.

Try your back stairs, and let the lobby wait,
A stratagem in war is no deceit. King.

LO'BOCK.* n. s. [from lob.] A word of contempt for a sluggish, stupid, inactive person; a lob. It is still a northern word. Sherwood.

Now next, my gallant youths, farewell!

My lads that oft have cheer'd my heart!

My grief of mind no tongue can tell,

To think that I from you must part:

I now must leave you all, alas,

And live with some old lobcock ass!

Bretton, Works of a Young Wit, (1577.)

LOBE. n. s. [lobe French; λοβος.] A division; a distinct part; used commonly for a part of the lungs.

Nor could the lobes of his rank liver swell
To that prodigious mass for their eternal mend. Dryden.

Air bladders form lobuli, which hang upon the bronchia like bunches of grapes; these lobuli constitute the lobes, and the lobes the lungs.

Arbuthnot, on Aliments.

From whence the quick reciprocating breath,
The lobe adhesive, and the sweat of death. Sewel.

LO'BOILLY.* n. s. A kind of seafaring dish. Chambers. An odd mixture of spoon-meat. Exmore dialect. On board the ships of war, water-gruel is called loblolly, and the surgeon's servant or mate the loblolly-boy. Grose.

The first was a feast held every week at several houses; which they called a loblolly-feast, &c. which is as our water-gruel in England; at which feast each did strive to excel another in the difference of making it.

Lett. from the Summer Islands to Prynne, in his Discov. of New Lights, (1645,) p. 8.

LO'BFSTER.† n. s. [Sax. loppetpne, lopýrpe; and thus Barrett gives as our word lobster. Alv. 1580.] A crustaceous fish.

Those that cast their shell are the lobster, the crab, and craw-fish. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

It happeneth often that the lobster hath the great claw of one side longer than the other.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

LO'RULE.* n. s. A little lobe. Chambers.

LO'CAL. adj. [local, French; locus, Lat.]

1. Having the properties of place.

By ascending, after that the sharpness of death was overcome, he took the very local possession of glory, and that to the use of all that are his, even as himself before had witnessed, I go to prepare a place for you. Hooker.

A higher flight the vent'rous goddess tries,
Leaving material world, and local skies. Prior.

2. Relating to place.

The circumstance of local nearness in them unto us, might haply enforce in us a duty of greater separation from them than from those other.

Where there is only a local circumstance of worship, the same thing would be worshipped supposing that circumstance changed. Stillinger.

3. Being in a particular place.

Dream not of their flight,
As of a duel, or the local wounds
Of head, or heel.

Milton, P. L.

How is the change of being sometimes here,
sometimes there, made by local motion in vacuum,
without a change in the body moved?

Digby on Bodies.

LOCALITY.† n. s. [from local.] Existence
in place; relation of place, or distance.

That the soul and angels are devoid of quantity and dimension; and that they have nothing to do with grosser locality, is generally opinioned.

Glanville.

Fond Fancy's eye,

That only gives locality and form

To what she prizes best. Mason, Eng. Gard. B. 3.

These factions—weakened and distracted the locality of patriotism.

Burke, Thoughts on French Affairs.

LOCALLY.† adv. [from local.] With respect to place.

Being ascended into heaven he is locally there.

Confut. of N. Shanton, (1546.) B. iii. b.
O Saviour, whilst thou now sittest gloriously in heaven, thou dost no less impart thyself unto us, than if thou stoodst visibly by us, than if we stood locally by thee.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

Whether things in their natures so divers as body and spirit, which almost in nothing communicate, are not essentially divided, though not locally distant, I leave to the readers. Glanville.

TO LOCATE.* v. a. [loco, locatus, Lat.]
To place.

Under this roof the biographer of Johnson, and the pleasant tourist to Corsica and the Hebrides, passed many jovial joyous hours; here he has brilliant some of the liveliest scenes, and most brilliant passages, in his entertaining anecdotes of his friend Samuel Johnson.

Cumberland, Memoirs of himself.

LOCATION.† n. s. [location, old Fr.; locatio, Lat.] Situation with respect to place; act of placing; state of being placed.

Any determinate location or position of the body.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 6.

To say that the world is somewhere, means no more than that it does exist; this, though a phrase borrowed from place, signifying only its existence, not location. Locke.

LOCH.* n. s. [Gael. loch; Irish, lough;
Welsh, lugh; Sax. luh: Lat. lacus.]

A lake. Scottish. See LOUGH.

A lake or loch that has no fresh water running into it, will turn into a stinking puddle.

Cheyne, Phil. Principles.

LOCH.* n. s. [loch, French; but the word is originally Arabick.]

1. A liquid confection; a soft medicine, between a syrup and an electuary:
called lochet in our old lexicography;
and also lochock, or lohoch, as it is also in French. See LOCHOCK.

2. In the plural, loches, the evacuations consequent on the delivery of a woman in child-bed. λoχία, Greek.

LOCK.† n. s. [loc, Saxon, the lock of a door; also an enclosure; and a tuft of hair. Serenius deduces it from the Goth. lukan, and Sax. lucan, to shut up, to close; and so Mr. H. Tooke calls it the past participle of the latter. But Serenius also cites the West. Goth.
loocka, to shut.]

An instrument composed of springs and bolts, used to fasten doors or chests.

No gate so strong, no lock so firm and fast,
But with that piercing noise flew open quit or brast. Spenser, F. Q.

We have locks to safeguard necessities,
And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves.

Shakespeare.

As there are locks for several purposes, so are there several inventions in locks, in contriving their wards or guards. Mason.

2. The part of the gun by which fire is struck.

A gun carries powder and bullets for seven charges and discharges: under the breech of the barrel is one box for the powder, a little before the lock another for the bullets; behind the cock a charger, which carries the powder to the further end of the lock. Grevy, Museum.

3. A hug; a grapple.

They must be practised in all the locks and grips of wrestling, as need may often be in fight to tug or grapple, and to close. Milton on Education.

4. Any enclosure.

Sergesthus, eager with his beak to press

Between the rival galley and the rock,

Shuts up th' unwieldy centaur in the lock.

Dryden, Æn.

To destroy any sluice or lock on a navigable river, is made felony, to be punished with transportation for seven years. Blackstone.

5. A quantity of hair or wool hanging together.

Well might he perceive the hanging of her hair in locks, some curled, and some forgotten. Sidney.
A goodly cypress, who bowing her fair head over the water, it seemeth she looked into it, and dressed her green locks that running river. Sidney.

His grizly locks, long growing and unbound,
Disorder'd hung about his shoulders round. Spenser.

The bottom was set against a lock of wool, and the sound was quite dead. Bacon.

They nourish only a lock of hair on the crown of their heads. Sandys, Trav.

A lock of hair will draw more than a cable rope.

Grevy.

Behold the locks that are grown white

Beneath a helmet in your father's battles.

Addison, Cato.

Two locks that graceful hung behind
In equal curls, and well conspire'd, to deck
With shining ringlets her smooth ivory neck. Pope.

6. A tuft.

I suppose this letter will find these picking of daisies, or smelling to a lock of hay. Addison, Spect.

TO LOCK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut or fasten with locks.

The garden, seated on the level floor,
She left behind, and locking every door,
Thought all secure. Dryden.

2. To shut up or confine, as with locks.

I am lockt in one of them;

If you do love me, you will find me out. Shakspeare.

We do lock

Our former sample in our strong barr'd gates.

Shakspeare.

Then seek to know those things which make us
blest,

And having found them, lock them in thy breast.

Denham.

The frightened dame

The log in secret lock'd. Dryden, Ovid.

If the door to a council be kept by armed men, and all such whose opinions are not liked kept out, the freedom of those within is infringed, and all their acts are as void as if they were locked in. Dryden, Æn.

One conduces to the poets completing of his work; the other slackens his pace, and locks him up like a knight-errant in an enchanted castle.

Dryden, Ded. to the Æn.

The father of the gods
Confin'd their fury to those dark abodes,
And lock'd 'em safe within, oppress'd with mountain loads. Dryden, Æn.

If one third of the money in trade were locked up, must not the landholders receive one third less? Locke.

Always lock up a cat in a closet where you keep your china plates, for fear the mice may steal in and break them. Swift.

Your wine lock'd up, Plain milk will do the feat. Pope, Hor.

3. To close fast.

Death blasts his bloom, and locks his frozen eyes. Gay.

TO LOCK. v. n.

1. To become fast by a lock.

For not of wood, nor of enduring brass,

Doubly parted did it lock and close,

That when it locked none might through it pass.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. To unite by mutual insertion.

Either they lock into each other, or slip one upon another's surface; as much of their surface touches as makes them cohere. Boyle.

LOCKER. n. s. [from lock.] Any thing that is closed with a lock; a drawer.

I made lockers or drawers at the end of the boat.

Robinson, Crusoe.

LOCKET. n. s. [loquet, French.] A small lock; any catch or spring to fasten a necklace, or other ornament.

Where knights are kept in narrow lists,
With wooden lockets 'bout their wrists. Hudibras.

LOCKRAM.† n. s. [lock, Su. Goth. locks clipped off wool; and ramr, thick. Serenius.] A sort of coarse cloth.

The kitchen malkin pins

Her richest lockram 'bout her reechy neck,

Clambering the walls to eye him.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

LOCKRON. n. s. A kind of ranunculus.

LOCKSMITH.* n. s. [lock and smith.] A man whose trade is to make and mend
locks.

We may likewise see, in Plato's forenamed instances of his smiths and his wrights, how many several arts there be:—some goldsmiths, some braziers, some farriers, some locksmiths.

Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 193.

LOCKY.* adj. [from lock.] Having locks or tufts. Not in use. Sherwood.

LOCOMOTION.† n. s. [locus and motus,
Lat.] Power of changing place.

All progression, or animal locomotion, is performed by drawing on, or impelling forward, some part which was before at quiet.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Many in the set locomotions and movements of their days have measured the circuit of it, [the earth.] Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 33.

An excursion to London, upon the footing that locomotion then was, when an hundred miles were a journey of three days, was a matter of some importance. Graves, Recollec. of Shlenstone.

LOCOMOTIVE. adj. [locus and moveo,
Latin.] Changing place; having the power of removing or changing place.

I shall consider the motion, or locomotive faculty of animals. Derham, Phys. Theol.

In the night too, oft he kicks,
Or shews his locomotive tricks. Prior.

An animal cannot well be defined from any particular organical part, nor from its locomotive faculty, for some adhere to rocks.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

LOCOMOTIVITY.* n. s. [from locomotive.]
Power of changing place.

The most superb edifice that ever was conceived or constructed, would not equal the smallest insect, blest with sight, feeling, and locomotivity. Bryan.

LO'CUST. n. s. [locusta, Latin.] A devouring insect.

The Hebrews had several sorts of locusts which are not known among us: the old historians and modern travellers remark that locusts are very numerous in Africk, and many places of Asia; that sometimes they fall like a cloud upon the country, and eat up every thing they meet with. Moses describes four sorts of locusts. Since there was a prohibition against using locusts, it is not to be questioned but that these creatures were commonly eaten in Palestine and the neighbouring countries.

Calmet.

To-morrow will I bring the locusts into thy coasts.

Ezodius.

Air replete with the steams of animals, rotting, has produced pestilential fevers, such hath likewise been raised by great quantities of dead locusts.

Arbutnot on Air.

LO'CUST-TREE. n. s.

The locust-tree hath a papilionaceous flower, from whose calyx arises the pointal, which afterwards becomes an unicapsular hard pod, including roundish hard seeds, which are surrounded with a fungous stringy substance.

Miller.

LOCUTION.* n. s. [locutio, Lat. locution, Fr. Cotgrave.] Discourse; manner of speech; phrase.

Under the shadow of fygurate locution in his gloyre of the electe persons.

Bale on the Revel. P. ii. (1550.)

They found shifts as well in the one as the other; tropes, hyperbolical locutions, figures of eloquence, and such like toys.

Stapleton, Fort. of Faith, fol. 67. b.

He confesses it to be a way of locution made use of by very good authors.

Bp. Wren, Monarchy Asserted, p. 129.

LODESTAR. See LOADSTAR.

LODESTONE. See LOADSTONE.

To LODGE. v. a. [lozian, Saxon; loger, French.]

1. To place in a temporary habitation.

When he was come to the court of France, the king stiled him by the name of the duke of York; lodged him, and accommodated him, in a great state.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

2. To afford a temporary dwelling; to supply with harbour for a night.

Every house was proud to lodge a knight.

Dryden.

3. To place; to plant.

When on the brink the foaming boar I met, And in his side thought to have lodg'd my spear, The desperate savage rush'd within my force, And bore me headlong with him down the rock.

Otway.

He lodg'd an arrow in a tender breast, That had so often to his own been prest.

Addison, Ov.

In viewing again the ideas that are lodged in the memory, the mind is more than passive.

Locke.

4. To fix; to settle.

By whose fell working I was first advanc'd, And by whose pow'r I well might lodge a fear To be again displac'd.

Shakespeare.

I can give no reason, More than a lodg'd hate, and a certain loathing I bear Antonio.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

5. To place in the memory.

This cunning the king would not understand, though he lodged it, and noted it, in some particulars.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

6. To harbour or cover.

The deer is lodg'd, I've track'd her to her covert; Rush in at once.

Addison, Cato.

7. To afford place to.

The memory can lodge a greater store of images, than all the senses can present at one time.

Cheyne, Phil. Principles.

8. To lay flat.

Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down,

Though castles topple on their warders heads.

Shakespeare.

We'll make foul weather with despised tears; Our sighs, and they, shall lodge the summer corn, And make a dearth in this revolving land.

Shakespeare.

To LODGE. v. n.

1. To reside; to keep residence.

Care keeps his watch in ev'ry old man's eye, And where care lodgeth, sleep will never lie.

Shakespeare.

Something holy lodges in that breast, And with these raptures moves the vocal air To testify his hidden residence.

Milton, Comus.

And dwells such rage in softest bosoms then? And lodge such daring souls in little men? Pope.

2. To take a temporary habitation.

Why commands the king, That his chief followers lodge in towns about him, While he himself keepeth in the cold field?

Shakespeare.

I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say, he lies here, or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Thy father is a man of war, and will not lodge with the people.

Samuel.

3. To take up residence at night.

My lords

And soldiers, stay and lodge by me this night.

Shakespeare.

Oh, that I had in the wilderness a lodging place of wayfaring men, that I might leave my people!

Jeremiah.

Here thou art but a stranger travelling to thy country; it is therefore a huge folly to be afflicted, because thou hast a less convenient inn to lodge in by the way.

Bp. Taylor.

4. To lie flat.

Long cone wheat they reckon in Oxfordshire best for rank clays; and its straw makes it not subject to lodge, or to be mildew'd.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

LODGE.† n. s. [logis, French; lodge, Dan. a hut, a shed; log, Celt. a place.]

1. A small house in a park or forest.

He brake up his court, and retired himself, his wife and children, into a certain forest thereby, which he calleth his desert, wherein he hath built two fine lodges.

Sidney.

I found him as melancholy as a lodge in a warren.

Shakespeare.

He and his lady both are at the lodge, Upon the north side of this pleasant chace.

Shakespeare.

Thus at their shady lodge arriv'd, both stood, Both turn'd, and under open sky ador'd The God that made both sky, air, earth.

Milton, P. L.

Whenever I am turned out, my lodge descends upon a lowspirited family.

Swift.

2. Any small house appendant to a greater: as, the porter's lodge.

LODGEABLE.* adj. [from lodge; French, logeable.] Capable of affording a temporary dwelling.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

At the furthest end of the town eastward, the ambassadour's house was appointed, but not yet (by default of some of the king's officers) lodgable.

Sir J. Finett, Philox. (1656.) p. 164.

The house is old-fashioned and irregular, but lodgable and commodious.

Smollett, Humph. Clinker.

LO'DGEMENT. n. s. [from lodge; logement, French.]

1. Disposition or collocation in a certain place.

The curious lodgement and inoculation of the auditory nerves.

Derham.

2. Accumulation; collection.

An oppressed diaphragm from a mere lodgement of extravasated matter.

Sharp, Surgery.

3. Possession of the enemy's work.

The military pedant is making lodgements, and fighting battles, from one end of the year to the other.

Addison.

LO'DGER. n. s. [from lodge.]

1. One who lives in rooms hired in the house of another.

Base tyke, call'st thou me host? now I scorn the term; nor shall my Nell keep lodgers.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

There were in a family, the man and his wife, three children, and three servants or lodgers.

Graunt.

Those houses are soonest infected that are crowded with multiplicity of lodgers, and nasty families.

Harvey.

The gentlewoman begged me to stop; for that a lodger she had taken in was run mad.

Tatler.

Sylla was reproached by his fellow lodger, that whilst the fellow lodger paid eight pounds one shilling and five-pence halfpenny for the uppermost story, he paid for the rest twenty-four pounds four shillings and four-pence halfpenny.

Arbutnot.

2. One that resides in any place.

Look in that breast, most dirty D—! be fair; Say, can you find but one such lodger there?

Pope.

LO'DGING. n. s. [from lodge.]

1. Temporary habitation; rooms hired in the house of another.

I will in Cassio's lodging lose this napkin, And let him find it.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Let him change his lodging from one end of the town to another, which is a great adamant of acquaintance.

Bacon.

At night he came To his known lodgings, and his country dame.

Dryden.

He desired his sister to bring her away to the lodgings of his friend.

Addison, Guardian.

Wits take lodgings in the sound of Bow.

Pope.

2. Place of residence.

Fair bosom fraught with virtue's richest treasure,

The nest of love, the lodging of delight; The bower of bliss, the paradise of pleasure, The sacred harbour of that heavenly spirit.

Spenser.

3. Harbour; covert.

The hounds were uncoupled; and the stag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodgings.

Sidney.

4. Convenience to sleep on.

Their feathers serve to stuff our beds and pillows, yielding us soft and warm lodging.

Ray on Creation.

LOE.† n. s. See LOWE.

To LOFFE.* v. n. To laugh. See To LAUGH.

The whole quire hold their hips, and loffe.

Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

LOFT.† n. s. [loft, Welsh; or from lift. Dr. Johnson.—Lofst, Goth. cubile in supremā contagione; loefta, Su. evehere, sursum tollere. Serenius.—The past participle of hlifan, Sax. to raise, to elevate. Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. A floor.

Eutychus fell down from the first loft. Acts.
There is a traverse placed in a loft above.

Bacon.

2. The highest floor.

To lull him in his slumber soft,
A trickling stream from high rock tumbling down,
And ever drizzling rain upon the loft,
Mixt with a murmuring wind. Spenser, F. Q.

3. Rooms on high.

Passing through the spheres of watchful fire,
And hills of snow, and lofts of piled thunder.

Milton, Vac. Es.

A weasel once made shift to sink
In at a corn loft, through a chink.

Pope.

4. On LOFT. See ALOFT.

LOFTILY. adv. [from lofty.]

1. On high; in an elevated place.

2. Proudly; haughtily.

They speak wickedly concerning oppression;
they speak loftily. Psalm. lxxiii. 8.

3. With elevation of language or sentiment; sublimely.

My lowly verse may loftily arise,
And lift itself unto the highest skies.

Spenser, F. Q.

LOFTINESS. n. s. [from lofty.]

1. Height; local elevation.

2. Sublimity; elevation of sentiment.

Three poets in three distant ages born;
The first in loftiness of thought surpass'd,
The next in majesty; in both the last. Dryden.

3. Pride; haughtiness.

Augustus and Tiberius had loftiness enough in their temper, and affected to make a sovereign figure. Collier.

LOFTY. adj. [from loft, or lift.]

1. High; hovering; elevated in place.

Cities of men with lofty gates and towers.

Milton, P. L.

See lofty Lebanon his head advance,

See nodding forests on the mountains dance.

Pope, Messiah.

2. Elevated in condition or character.

Thus saith the high and lofty One. Isaiah.

3. Sublime; elevated in sentiment.

He knew
Himself to sing and build the lofty rhyme.

Milton, Lycidas.

4. Proud; haughty.

The eyes of the lofty shall be humbled. Isaiah.
Lofty and sour to them that lov'd him not;
But to those men that sought him, sweet as summer.

Shakespeare.

Man, the tyrant of our sex, I hate,

A lowly servant, but a lofty mate.

Dryden, Kn. Tale.

LOG.† n. s. [The original of this word is not known. Skinner derives it from lignan, Saxon, to lie; Junius from logge, Dutch, sluggish; perhaps the Latin, lignum, is the true original. Dr. Johnson.—It is from the Sax. lecgan, ponere, to lay. Laz, (a broad, and retaining the sound of the z) log, from the Saxon, corresponds with post from the Latin. We say, indifferently, "to stand like a post," or "to stand like a log," in our way. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 167.]

1. A shapeless bulky piece of wood.

Would the lightning had
Burnt up those logs that thou'rt injoin'd to pile.

Shakespeare.

The worms with many feet are bred under logs of timber, and many times in gardens, where no logs are. Bacon.

Some log, perhaps, upon the waters swam,
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd first a floating trough became,
And cross some riv'let passage did begin. Dryden.

2. A piece of wood, about seven or eight inches long, which, with its line, serves to measure the course of a ship at sea.

Log is a machine used to measure the ship's head way, or the rate of her velocity as she advances through the sea. It is composed by a reel and line, to which is fixed a small piece of wood forming the quadrant of a circle.

Hawkesworth, Voyages.

3. A Hebrew measure, which held a quarter of a cab, and consequently five-sixths of a pint. According to Dr. Arbuthnot it was a liquid measure, the seventy-second part of the bath or ephah, and twelfth part of the hin.

Calmet.

A meat offering mingled with oil, and one log of oil. Leviticus.

LOG-BOARD.* n. s. A table divided into five columns, containing an account of a ship's way measured by the log.

LOG-BOOK.* n. s. A register of a ship's way and other naval incidents.

LOG-LINE.* n. s. See the second sense of LOG.

To LOG.* v. n. In the language of the vulgar, to move to and fro. Used in Cornwall and Devon. Polwhele.

LOGARITHMICAL.* adj. [Fr. logarith- LOGARITHMICK. } mique.] Relating to logarithms.

Mr. Walter Warner made an inverted logarithmical table, whereas Briggs's table fills his margin with numbers, increasing by units, and over against them sets their logarithms, which because of incommensurability must needs be either abundant or deficient.

Aubrey, Anecd. ii. 579.

LOGARITHMS. n. s. [logarithme, Fr.
λόγος, and ἀριθμός.]

Logarithms which are the indexes of the ratios of numbers one to another, were first invented by Napier Lord Merchison, a Scottish baron, and afterwards completed by Mr. Briggs, Savilian professor at Oxford. They are a series of artificial numbers, contrived for the expedition of calculation, and proceeding in an arithmetical proportion, as the numbers they answer to do in a geometrical one: for instance,

0 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

1 2 4 8 16 32 64 128 256 512

Where the numbers above beginning with (0), and arithmetically proportional, are called logarithms. The additions and subtraction of logarithms answers to the multiplication and division of the numbers they correspond with; and this saves an infinite deal of trouble. In like manner will the extraction of roots be performed, by dissecting the loga-

ritms of any numbers for the square root, and trisecting them for the cube, and so on. Harris.

LOGGATS.† n. s. pl.

Loggats is the ancient name of a play or game, which is one of the unlawful games enumerated in the thirty-third statute of Henry VIII. It is the same which is now called kettle-pins, in which boys often make use of bones instead of wooden pins, throwing at them with another bone instead of bowling.

Hammer.

This is a game played in several parts of England even at this time. A stake is fixed into the ground; those, who play, throw loggats at it; and he, that is nearest the stake, wins. I have seen it played in different counties at their sheep-shearing feasts. Steevens.

It is probably from the word log: the game was so called from the loggats or wooden pins made use of in the play.

Whalley.

Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at loggats with them? Shakespeare, Hamlet.

LOGGERHEAD. n. s. [logge, Dutch, stupid, and head; or rather from log, a heavy motionless mass, as blockhead.]
A dolt; a blockhead; a thickskull.

Where hast been, Hal? —

With three or four loggerheads, amongst three or fourscore hogsheads. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Says this loggerhead, what have we to do to quench other people's fires? L'Estrange.

To fall to LOGGERHEADS. } To scuffle; to
To go to LOGGERHEADS. } fight without weapons.

A couple of travellers that took up an ass, fell to loggerheads which should be his master.

L'Estrange.

LOGGERHEADED. adj. [from loggerhead.]

Dull; stupid; doltish.

You loggerheaded and unpolish'd groom, what!
no attendance? Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

LOGICK. n. s. [logique, French; logica,
Latin, from λόγος.] The art of reasoning. One of the seven sciences.

Logick is the art of using reason well in our inquiries after truth, and the communication of it to others. Watts, Logick.

Talk logick with acquaintance,
And practise rhetoric in your common talk.

Shakespeare.

By a logick that left no man any thing which he might call his own, they no more looked upon it as the case of one man, but the case of the kingdom. Clarendon.

Here foam'd rebellious logick, gagg'd and bound,

There stript fair rhetoric languish'd on the ground. Pope.

LOGICAL. adj. [from logick.]

1. Pertaining to logick; taught in logick.

The heretic complained greatly of St. Augustine, as being too full of logical subtilties.

Hooker.

Those who in a logical dispute keep in general terms, would hide a fallacy.

Dryden, Pref. to Ann. Mir.

We ought not to value ourselves upon our ability in giving subtle rules, and finding out logical arguments, since it would be more perfection not to want them. Baker.

2. Skilled in logick; furnished with logick.

A man who sets up for a judge in criticism, should have a clear and logical head.

Addison, Spectator.

LOG'ICALLY. adv. [from logical.] According to the laws of logic.

How can her old good man
With honour take her back again?
From hence I logically gather,
The woman cannot live with either. Prior.

LOGICIAN. n. s. [logicien, French; logicus, Latin.] A teacher or professor of logic; a man versed in logic.

If a man can play the true logician, and have as well judgement as invention, he may do great matters. Bacon.

If we may believe our logicians, man is distinguished from all other creatures by the faculty of laughter. Addison.

Each staunch polemick stubborn as a rock,
Each fierce logician still expelling Locke,
Came whip and spur. Pope, Dunciad.

A logician might put a case that would serve for an exception. Swift.

The Arabian physicians were subtle men, and most of them logicians; accordingly they have given method, and shed subtilty upon their author. Baker.

LOG'MAN. n. s. [log and man.] One whose business is to carry logs.

For your sake

Am I this patient logman? Shakespeare, Tempest.

LOGOGRIPE.* n. s. [λόγος, discourse, and γρίπος, an enigma, from γρίφος, a net, Gr.] A sort of riddle.

Had I compil'd from Amadis de Gaul, —
Or spun out riddles, and weav'd fifty tomes,
Of logogripes, and curious palindromes, —
Thou then hadst had some colour for thy flames
On such my serious follies.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

LOGOMACHY.† n. s. [λογμαχία, Gr. logomachie, Fr.] A contention in words; a contention about words.

Forced terms of art did much puzzle sacred theology with distinctions, cavils, quiddities; and so transformed her to a mere kind of sophistry and logomachy. Howell.

The contentions of the eastern and western churches about this subject, are but a mere logomachy, or strife about words.

Bp. Bramhall, Schism Guarded, p. 403.

I shall not enter into a mere logomachy, or strife about sounds and phrases.

Trapp, Popery truly stated, P. ii. § 1.

LOGWOOD. n. s.

Logwood is of a very dense and firm texture; is the heart only of the tree which produces it. It is very heavy, and remarkably hard, and of a deep, strong, red colour. It grows both in the East and West Indies, but no where so plentifully as on the coast of the bay of Campeachy. Hill, Mat. Med.

To make a light purple, mingle ceruse with logwood water. Peacham on Drawing.

LO'HOCK. n. s.

Lo'hock is an Arabian name for those forms of medicines which are now commonly called eclegmas, lambatives, or linctuses. Quincy.

Lo'hocks and pectorals were prescribed, and venesection repeated. Wiseman, Surgery.

LOIN.† n. s. [llwyn, Welsh. Dr. Johnson. — Our word was originally lend; lends being the loins. See LENDS. Callander derives the Sax. and Germ. lendenu, and lenden, from leinga "to extend, the loins being the length of the trunk of the body."]

1. The back of an animal carved out by the butcher.

So have I seen in larder dark
Of veal a lucid loin,
Replete with many a brilliant spark,
As wise philosophers remark,
At once both stink and shine. Ld. Dorset.

2. Loins; the reins.

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb!
Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins!

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Virgin mother, hail!
High in the love of heaven! yet from my loins
Thou shalt proceed, and from thy womb the Son
Of God Most High. Milton, P. L.

A multitude, like which the populous north
Pour'd never from her frozen loins, to pass
Rhene, or the Danaw, when her barbarous sons
Came like a deluge on the south. Milton, P. L.

TO LOITER.† v. n. [leuteren, loiteren, Teut. to linger; lata, Gothick, tardy, slow.] To linger; to spend time carelessly; to idle.

Sir John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in the countries. Shakspeare.

Whence this long delay?

You loiter while the spoils are thrown away. Dryden.

If we have gone wrong, let us redeem the mistake; if we have loitered, let us quicken our pace, and make the most of the present opportunity. Rogers.

TO LO'ITER.* v. a. To consume in trifles; to waste carelessly.

Mark how he spends his time, whether he unactively loiters it away. Locke.

What have we found
In life's austerer hours, delectable
As the long day so loiter'd.

Hurdia, Village Curate.

LO'ITERER. n. s. [from loiter.] A lingerer; an idler; a lazy wretch; one who lives without business; one who is sluggish and dilatory.

Give gloves to thy reapers a largess to cry,
And daily to loiterers have a good eye.

The poor, by idleness or unthriftiness, are riotous spenders, vagabonds, and loiterers. Hayward.

Where hast thou been, thou loiterer?

Though my eyes clos'd, my arms have still been open'd.

To search if thou wert come. Otway.

Providence would only enter mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry, that we live not like idle loiterers, and truants. More.

Ever listless loiterers, that attend
No cause, no trust, no duty, and no friend.

Pope.

TO LOLL.† v. n. [Of this word the etymology is not known. Perhaps it might be contemptuously derived from lollard, a name of great reproach before the Reformation; of whom one tenet was, that all trades not necessary to life are unlawful. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius, with great probability, cites the Iceland, lolla, to be slowly moved, loll, a slow step, as the origin of our word.]

1. To lean idly; to rest lazily against any thing.

So hangs and lolls, and weeps upon me: so shakes and pulls me. Shakespeare, Othello.

He is not loiting on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Close by a softly murmuring stream,
Where lovers used to loll and dream. Hudibras.
To loll on couches, rich with cytron steds,
And lay your guilty limbs in Tyrian beds.

Dryden.

Void of care he lolls supine in state,
And leaves his business to be done by fate.

Dryden.

But wanton now, and loiting at our ease,
We suffer all the inveterate ills of peace. Dryden.

A lazy loiting sort
Of ever listless loiterers. Pope, Dunciad.

2. To hang out. Used of the tongue hanging out in weariness or play.

The triple porter of the Stygian seat,
With loiting tongue lay fawning at thy feet.

Dryden.

With harmless play amidst the bowls he pass'd
And with his loiting tongue assay'd the taste.

Dryden.

TO LOLL. v. a. To put out. Used of the tongue exerted.

All authors to their own defects are blind,
Hast thou but, Janus-like, a face behind,
To see the people, when play mouths they make,
To mark their fingers pointed at thy back,
Their tongues loll'd out a foot. Dryden, Pers.

By Strymon's freezing streams he sat alone,
Trees bent their heads to hear him sing his wrongs,

Fierce tigers couch'd around, and loll'd their fawning tongues. Dryden, Virg.

LOLLARD.* n. s. [lollaerd, Teut. lol, LOTLER.] lardus, low Latin. Some contend, that this word was derived from Walter Lolhard, a German, who began to dogmatize at the beginning of the fourteenth century; others, from the Germ. loben, to praise, and herr, Lord, because the lollards travelled about from place to place, singing holy hymns; Chaucer, from lolum, cockle or tares, as if these persons were the tares sown in Christ's vineyard; and others from the old Germ. hullen or lollen, to sing, and the termination hard, with which many of the high Dutch words end; from the manner, as already stated, of their singing hymns, or, as some think, from their custom also of chanting requiems to the souls of the dead. Du Cange believes the word to be of German origin; and agrees with Killian's lollaerd, (mussitator), a numbler of prayers, lollen, signifying also to mumble, to hum.] A name given to the first reformers of the Roman Catholic religion in England; a reproachful appellation of the followers of Wicliffe. See LOLLARDY.

I smell a loller in the wind, quoth he: —
He shal no gospel glosen here ne teche: —
He wolde sowen som diffcultee,
Or springen coele in our clene corne:
And therefore, hoste, I warne thee beforne.
Chaucer, Shipm. Prolog.

They are of him [the pope] cursed with book, bell, and candle, out of his heaven, as Pasquin calleth, and this natural life, as lollards and hereticks not worthy the benefite of temporall quiet.

Anderson, Expos. on Benedictus, (1573,) fol. 59.

In his lectures he [H. Crompe] called the heretics lollards. Fox, Acts and Mon. of Wicliffe.

Dr. Wiclif dying at Lutterworth Dec. 31, 1384, his followers were soon after distinguished, or rather reproached, by the nickname of lollards.

Lewis, Life of Bp. Pecock, p. 10.

LO'LLARDY.* n. s. [from lollard.] The doctrine of lollards; a name given to what, before the Reformation, was deemed heresy.

Beware that thou be not oppressed

With anticrist's lollardie. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.
The spirit of popery, not Christianity, was to be seen in the zeal of the enemies to lollardy.

Young on Idolat. Corruptions, ii. 331.

To LO'LOP.* v. n. To move heavily; to walk in a heavy, lounging manner; to lean idly; and in a general sense to idle. A low word, formed from loll, and used in many places. See Craven Dial. Brackett, and Moore.

LOMBARDICK.* adj. [from the Lombards.] Applied to one of the ancient alphabets derived from the Roman, and relating to the manuscripts of Italy.

Writing in Italy was uniform until the irruption of the Goths, when it was disfigured by the taste of that barbarous people. In 569, the Lombards having possessed themselves of all that part of the empire, except Rome and Ravenna, introduced another form of writing, which is termed Lombardic. As the popes used the Lombardic manner in their bulls, the appellation of Roman was sometimes given to it in the eleventh century. Though the dominion of the Lombards continued no longer than about two hundred and six years, the name of their writing was still current beyond the Alps, from the seventh century to the beginning of the thirteenth, and then ceased.

As to the Lombardic character, we have not a book that I know of, written in it, I mean agreeable to the specimens of it in Mabillon de Re diplomatique; nor did I ever see any in any other place. In Sir J. Cotton's (I perceive by your catalogue) there be several. — Several of our MSS. are said by Dr. Langbain to be written in Lombardic letters; but they are the common text or square hand, about 400 years old, vastly different from Mabillon, as I suppose yours are also.

H. Wadley to Dr. Smith, (1697), Aubrey's Anec. i. 85.

LOMP. n. s. A kind of roundish fish.

LO'NDONER.* n. s. [from London.] A native of London; an inhabitant of London.

What was the speech amongst the Londoners Concerning the French journey.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

The felicity of Queen Elizabeth may be much imputed to the rare temper and moderation of men's minds in those days; for the pulse of the common people, and Londoners, did beat nothing so high as it did afterwards, when they grew pampered with so long peace and plenty.

Hovell, Lett. iv. 12.

Some Londoners, whom they extolled to the skies for their wit, I knew, passed in town for silly fellows.

Addison, Freehold, No. 22.

LO'NDONISM.* n. s. A mode of expression said to be peculiar to London.

The subject is, to shew, that the humble and accepted dialect of London, the Londonisms, as I may call them, are far from being reproachable in themselves, however they may appear to us not born within the sound of Bow-bell.

Pegge, Anec. of the Eng. Language.

LO'NE.† adj. [contracted from alone.]

1. Solitary; unfrequented; having no company.

Like to a lonely dragon; that his fen

Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen.

Shakspeare.

Why thus close up the stars

That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd their lamps

With everlasting oil, to give due light

To the mislead and lonely traveller? Milton, Com.

Time has made you dote, and vainly tell

Of arms imagin'd, in your lonely cell. Dryden, Æn.

2. Addicted to solitude.

When, fairest princess,

You lonely thus from the full court retire,

Love and the graces follow to your solitude. Rowe.

LO'NENESS.† n. s. [from lone.] Solitude; dislike of company.

One that doth wear away himself in loneness.

Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess.

Those that would make loneness acceptable, by advising men, as through a prospective, to behold the greatness of structures and bravery of courts, through the humility of a cottage.

Sir R. Tempest on Solitariness, p. 95.

I can love both fair and brown, —

Her who loves loneness best. Donne, Poems, p. 7.

If of court-life you knew the good,

You would leave loneness. Ibid. p. 131.

LO'NESOME.† adj. [from lone.] Solitary; dismal.

They dance as they were wood,

Around an huge black goat, in lonesome wood,

By shady night, far from or house or town.

More, Pre-exist. of the Soul, st. 49.

You either must from the rest disturb,

Or roll around the heavens the solar orb;

Else what a dreadful fate will nature wear!

How horrid will these lonesome seats appear!

Blackmore.

LO'NESOMELY.* adv. [from lonesome.] In a dismal or solitary manner.

LO'NESOMENESS.* n. s. [from lonesome.]

State or quality of being lonesome.

The darkness and lonesomeness of the night, is no improper similitude; 'tis a pretty emblem of our mortality.

Killingbeck, Serm. p. 96.

LONG.† adj. [long, French; longus, Lat.]

Dr. Johnson. — The past participle of the Sax. langian, extendere, producere. Nor can any other derivation be found for the Latin longus. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 374. — Mr. Tooke has omitted to notice the M. Goth. lagg, logg, of which the first g is pronounced like our n; and from which long should seem to be immediately derived.]

Who did them meditate all his life long. Spenser, F. Q.

Some say, that ever 'gainst that season comes,
Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
The bird of dawning singeth all night long,
And then they say no spirit walks abroad,
The nights are wholesome, then no planets strike,
No fairy takes, no witch hath power to charm,
So hallow'd, and so gracious is the time. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

He fed me all my life long to this day. Gen. xlviii. 15

Forty years long was I grieved with this generation. Psalms.

7. Owing to; in consequence of: an abbreviation of along; not from the Sax. gelanz, a fault, as Dr Johnson has hastily asserted, but from ge-lanz, long of; not meaning by the fault, by the failure, as he has further mistated it; and not a substantive, as he makes it. See the seventh sense of ALONG.

But if it is along on me,
That ye unadvanced be,
Or els if it be long on you,
The soth shall be proved now.

Respective and wary men had rather seek quietly their own, and wish that the world may go well, so it be not long of them, than with pains and hazard make themselves advisers for the common good. Hooker.

Maine, Bloys, Poitiers, and Tours are won away, Long all of Somerset, and his delay. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

Pye, Carmen Seculare.

LOOM. n. s. A bird.

A loom is as big as a goose; of a dark colour, dappled with white spots on the neck, back, and wings; each feather marked near the point with two spots; they breed in Farr Island.

Grew, Museum.

LOON. n. s. [This word, which is now used only in Scotland, is the English word loam. See LOWN.] A sorry fellow; a scoundrel; a rascal.

Thou cream-fac'd fool!

Where got'st thou that goose loom?

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The false loom, who could not work his will
By open force, employ'd his flattering skill;
I hope, my lord, said he, I not offend;
Are you afraid of me that are your friend?

Dryden.

This young lord had an old cunning rogue, or, as the Scots call it, a false loom of a grandfather, that one might call a Jack of all trades.

Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

LOOP.† n. s. [from loopen, Dutch, to run. Dr. Johnson. — Hibern. lup, amentum; Icel. lope, pensum lanificii, lippa, filum digitis ducere. Serenius.]

1. A double through which a string or lace is drawn; an ornamental double or fringe.

Nor any skill'd in loops of fingering fine,
Might in their diverse cunning ever dare
With this, so curious network, to compare.

Spenser.

Make me to see't, or at least to prove it,
That the probation bear no hinge, nor loop,
To hang a doubt on.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Bind our crooked legs in loops
Made of shells, with silver loops. B. Jonson.
An old fellow shall wear this or that sort of cut in his clothes with great integrity, while all the rest of the world are degenerated into buttons, pockets, and loops. Addison.

2. A small aperture, in ancient castles, to spy the enemy, or to fire ordnance from, or to admit light.

Some at the loops durst scarce outpeep.

Fairfax, Tass. xi. 32.

LO'OPED. adj. [from loop.] Full of holes.

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,
That 'bide the pelting of this pitiless storm!
How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you
From seasons such as these? Shakespeare, K. Lear.

LO'OPHOLE. n. s. [Loop and hole.]

1. Aperture; hole to give a passage.

The Indian herdsman, shunning heat,
Shelters in cool, and tonds his pasturing herds;
At loopholes cut through thickest shade.

Milton, P. L.

Ere the blabbing Eastern scout
The nice morn on the Indian steep,
From her cabin'd loophole peep. Milton, Comus.

Walk not near your corner house by night; for there are blunderbusses planted in every loophole, that go off at the squeaking of a fiddle.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

2. A shift; an evasion.

Needless, or needful, I not now contend,
For still you have a loophole for a friend. Dryden.

LO'OPHOLED. adj. [from loophole.] Full of holes; full of openings, or void spaces.

This uneasy loophol'd gaol,
In which y' are hamper'd by the fetlock,
Cannot but put y' in mind of wedlock. Hudibras.

LOORD.† n. s. [loerd, Dutch; lourdaut, French; lurdan, Erse; a heavy, stupid, or witless fellow. D. Trevox derives lourdaut from lorde or lourde, a village in Gascoigny, the inhabitants of which were formerly noted robbers, say they. But dexterity in robbing implies some degree of subtilty, from which the Gascoigns are so far removed, that they are awkward and heavy to a proverb. The Erse imports some degree of knavery, but in a ludicrous sense, as in English, you pretty rogue; though in general it denotes reproachful heaviness, or stupid laziness. Spenser's Scholiast says, loord was wont, among the old Britons, to signify a lord; and therefore the Danes, that usurped their tyranny here in Britain, were called, for more dread than dignity, lurdans, i. e. lord Danes, whose insolence and pride was so outrageous in this realm, that if it fortune'd a Briton to be going over a bridge, and saw the Dane set foot upon the same, he must return back till the Dane was clean over, else he must abide no less than present death; but being afterward expelled, the name of lurdane became so odious unto the people whom they had long oppressed, that, even at this day, they use for more reproach to call the quartan ague the fever lurdane. So far the Scholiast, but erroneously. From Spenser's own words, it signifies something of stupid dullness rather than magisterial arrogance. Macbean. — Dr. Johnson might have added to the remark of Macbean, that stupidity was a principal feature in the lurdane's character:

"In every house lord Dane did then rule all;

"Whence laysiae lozels LURDANES DOW we call."

Mir. for Magistrates, p. 588.

Loord indeed is no other than the Teutonic word luyard, or loer, loerd, an idle, slothful fellow; hence the Fr. lourd, stupid, blockish; Ital. lorido, foul, filthy, lordone, a "lubberly, slovenly, filthy fellow," Florio, 1598. Serenius makes the Goth. lor, filth, the origin. See also LURDAN.] A drone.

Siker, thou'st but a lazy loord,
And rekes much of thy swinke,
That with fond terms and witless words

To blear mine eyes dost think. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

LOOS.* n. s. [los, old Fr. Lacombe; laus, Latin. Mr. H. Tooke, however, considers this word as the past participle of the Sax. hlpan, to celebrate, and as the origin of the Lat. laus.] Praise; renown. Obsolete.

Hercules that had the grete loos. Chaucer.
That much he feared, least reproachfull blame
With foule dishonour him mote blot therefore;

Besides the losse of so much loos and fame,
As through the world thereby should glorifie his name. Spenser, F. Q. vi. xii. 12.

To LOOSE. v. a. [lejan, Sax.]

1. To unbind; to untie any thing fastened. The shoes of his feet I am not worthy to loose.

Canst thou loose the bands of Orion? Acts.
Who is worthy to loose the seals thereof? Job.

This is to cut the knot when we cannot loose it. Rev. v. 2.
Burnet.

2. To relax. The joints of his loins were loosed. Daniel.

3. To unbind any one bound. Loose him, and bring him to me. St. Luke.

4. To free from imprisonment. The captive hasteneth that he may be loosed. Isaiah.

He loosed, and set at liberty, four or five kings of the people of that country, that Berok kept in chains. Abbot.

5. To free from any obligation. Art thou loosed from a wife? seek not a wife. 1 Cor.

6. To free from any thing that shackles the mind. Ay; there's the man, who, loos'd from lust and pelf, Less to the pretor owes than to himself. Dryden, Pers.

7. To free from any thing painful. Woman, thou art loosed from thy infirmity. St. Luke.

8. To disengage. When heaven was nam'd, they loos'd their hold again,
Then sprung she forth, they follow'd her again. Dryden.

To LOOSE. v. n. To set sail; to depart by loosing the anchor.

Ye should have hearkened, and not have loosed from Crete. Acts.

The emperor, loosing from Barcelona, came to the port of Mago, in the island of Minorca. Knolles, Hist.

Loosing thence by night, they were driven by contrary winds back into his port. Ralegh.

LOOSE.† adj. [from the verb.]

1. Unbound; untied. If he should intend his voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakespeare.

Lo! I see four men loose walking. Dan. iii. 25.

2. Not fast; not fixed. Those few that clashed might rebound after the collision; or if they cohered, yet by the next conflict might be separated again, and so on in an eternal vicissitude of fast and loose, though without ever consociating into the bodies of planets. Bentley.

3. Not tight; as, a loose robe. If ever I said loose-bodied gown, sew me in the skirts of it. Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

The Greek historian sets her [Boadicea] in the field, on a high heap of turves, in a loose-bodied gown declaiming, a spear in her hand. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 2.

4. Not crouded; not close. With extended wings a host might pass,
With horse and chariots, rank'd in loose array. Milton, P. L.

5. Wanton; not chaste. Fair Venus seem'd unto his bed to bring Her, whom he waking evermore did ween
To be the chasteest flower that ay did spring
On earthly branch, the daughter of a king,
Now a loose leman to vile service bound. Spenser, F. Q.

When loose epistles violate chaste eyes,
She half consents who silently denies.

Dryden, Ovid.

6. Not close; not concise; lax.

If an author be loose and diffuse in his style, the translator needs only regard the propriety of the language.

Felton.

7. Vague; indeterminate; not accurate.

It is but a loose thing to speak of possibilities, without the particular designs; so is it to speak of lawfulness without the particular cases.

Bacon, Holy War.

It seems unaccountable to be so exact in the quantity of liquor where a small error was of little concern, and to be so loose in the doses of powerful medicines.

Arbuthnot.

8. Not strict; not rigid.

Because conscience, and the fear of swerving from that which is right, maketh them diligent observers of circumstances, the loose regard whereof is the nurse of vulgar folly.

Hooker.

9. Unconnected; rambling.

I dare venture nothing without a strict examination; and am as much ashamed to put a loose indigested play upon the publick, as to offer brass money in a payment.

Dryden.

Vario spends whole mornings in running over loose and unconnected pages, and with fresh curiosity is ever glancing over new words and ideas, and yet treasures up but little knowledge.

Watts on the Mind.

10. Lax of body; not costive.

What hath a great influence upon the health, is going to stool regularly: people that are very loose have seldom strong thoughts or strong bodies.

Locke on Education.

11. Disengaged; not enslaved.

Their prevailing principle is, to sit as loose from pleasures, and be as moderate in the use of them, as they can.

Atterbury.

12. Disengaged from obligation: commonly with from; in the following line with of.

Now I stand

Loose of my vow; but who knows Cato's thoughts?

Addison.

13. Free from confinement.

They did not let prisoners loose homeward.

Isaiah.

Wish the wildest tempests loose;

That thrown again upon the coast,

I may once more repeat my pain.

Prior.

14. Remiss: not attentive.

15. To break LOOSE. To gain liberty.

If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination which keeps us from chusing the worse, be liberty, madmen and fools are only the freemen.

Locke.

Like two black storms on either hand,
Our Spanish army and the Indians stand;
This only space betwixt the clouds is clear,
Where you, like day, broke loose from both appear.

Dryden.

16. To let LOOSE. To set at liberty; to set at large; to free from any restraint.

And let the living bird loose into the open field.

Lev. xiv.

We ourselves make our fortunes good or bad; and when God lets loose a tyrant upon us, or a sickness, if we fear to die, or know not to be patient, the calamity sits heavy upon us.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

In addition and division, either of space or duration, it is the number of its repeated additions or divisions that alone remains distinct, as will appear to any one who will let his thoughts loose in the vast expansion of space, or divisibility of matter.

Locke.

If improvement cannot be made a recreation, they must be let loose to the childish play they fancy; which they should be weaned from, by being made surfeit of it.

Locke.

LOOSE.† n. s. [the past participle of liusan, Goth. lyran, Saxon; amittere, dimittere. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 254.]

1. Liberty; freedom from restraint.

Come, and forsake thy cloying store,

And all the busy pageantry

That wise men scorn, and fools adore:

Come, give thy soul a loose, and taste the pleasures of the poor.

Dryden, Hor.

Lucia, might my big-swoln heart

Vent all its griefs, and give a loose to sorrow,

Marcia could answer thee in sighs.

Addison, Cato.

The fiery Pegasus disdains

To mind the rider's voice, or hear the reins;

When glorious fields and opening camps he views,

He runs with an unbounded loose.

Prior.

Poets should not, under a pretence of imitating the antients, give themselves such a loose in lyrics, as if there were no connection in the world.

Felton on the Classics.

2. Dismission from any restraining force.

Air at large maketh no noise, except it be sharply percussed; as in the sound of a string, where air is percussed by a hard and stiff body, and with a sharp loose.

Bacon.

Their arrows finely pair'd, for timber and for feather,

With birch and brazil piec'd, to fly in any weather;

And shot they with the round, the square, or forket pile,

The loose gave such a twang, as might be heard a mile.

Drayton, Polyol. S. 26.

Lo'OSELY. adv. [from loose.]

1. Not fast; not firmly; easily to be disengaged.

I thought your love eternal: was it ty'd

So loosely, that a quarrel could divide?

Dryden, Aur.

2. Without bandage.

Her golden locks for haste were loosely shed

About her ears.

Spenser, F. Q.

3. Without union or connection.

Part loosely wing the region, part more wise

In common, rang'd in figure, wedge their way.

Milton, P. L.

He has within himself all degrees of perfection that exist loosely and separately in all second beings.

Norris.

4. Irregularly.

A bishop, living loosely, was charged that his conversation was not according to the apostles' lives.

Camden.

5. Negligently; carelessly.

We have not loosely through silence permitted things to pass away as in a dream.

Hooker.

The chiming of some particular words in the memory, and making a noise in the head, seldom happens but when the mind is lazy, or very loosely and negligently employed.

Locke.

6. Unsolidly; meanly; without dignity.

A prince should not be so loosely studied, as to remember so weak a composition.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

7. Unchastely.

The stage how loosely does Astræa tread,
Who fairly puts all characters to bed?

Pope.

To Lo'OUSEN. v. n. [from loose.] To part; to tend to separation.

When the polypus appears in the throat, extract it that way, it being more ready to loosen when pulled in that direction than by the nose.

Sharp, Surgery.

To Lo'OUSEN. v. a. [from loose.]

1. To relax any thing tied.

2. To make less coherent.

After a year's rooting, then shaking doth the tree good, by loosening of the earth.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. To separate a compages.

From their foundation loosing to and fro,
They pluck'd the seated hills with all their load.

Milton, P. L.

She breaks her back, the loosen'd sides give way,
And plunge the Tuscan soldiers in the sea.

Dryden, Æn.

4. To free from restraint.

It resolves those difficulties which the rules beget; it loosens his hands, and assists his understanding.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

5. To make not costive.

Fear looseth the belly; because the heat retiring towards the heart, the guts are relaxed in the same manner as fear also causeth trembling.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Lo'OUSENESS. n. s. [from loose.]

1. State contrary to that of being fast or fixed.

The cause of the casting of skin and shell should seem to be the looseness of the skin or shell, that sticketh not close to the flesh.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Latitude; criminal levity.

A general looseness of principles and manners hath seized on us like a pestilence, that walketh not in darkness, but wasteth at noon-day.

Atterbury.

3. Irregularity; neglect of laws.

He endeavoured to win the common people, both by strained curtesy and by looseness of life.

Hayward.

4. Lewdness; unchastity.

Courtly court he made still to his dame,
Pour'd out in looseness on the grassy ground,
Both careless of his health and of his fame.

Spenser.

5. Diarrhœa; flux of the belly.

Taking cold moveth looseness by contraction of the skin and outward parts.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

In pestilent diseases, if they cannot be expelled by sweat, they fall likewise into looseness.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Fat meats, in phlegmatick stomachs, procure looseness and hinder retention.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

from laube, German, a leaf; by Serenius from the Goth. hleipa; Helsing. dial.

lop, cortex, leopa, decorticare.

1. To cut the branches of trees.

Gentle niece, what stern ungentle hands

Have lopp'd and hev'd, and made thy body bare

Of her two branches, those sweet ornaments?

Shakspeare.

Like to pillars,

Or hollow'd bodies, made of oak or fir,

With branches lopp'd, in wood or mountain fell'd.

Milton, P. L.

The plants, whose luxury was lopp'd,

Or age with crutches underprop'd.

Cleveland.

The oak, growing from a plant to a great tree,

and then lopp'd, is still the same oak.

Locke.

The hook she bore, instead of Cynthia's spear,

To lop the growth of the luxuriant year.

Pope.

2. To cut any thing.

The gardener may lop religion as he pleases.

Howell.

So long as there's a head,

Hither will all the mounting spirits fly;

Lop that but off.

Dryden, Sp. Friar.

All that denominated it paradise was lopp'd off by the deluge, and that only left which it enjoyed in common with its neighbour countries.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

Rhyme sure in needless bonds the poet ties,

Procrustes like, the ax or wheel applies,

To lop the mangled sense, or stretch it into size.

Smith.

LOP.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. That which is cut from trees.

Or sicker thy head very tottles is,
So on thy corbe shoulder it leans amiss;
Now thyself hath lost both top and top,
Als my budding branch thou wouldest crop.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Nor should the boughs grow too big, because they give opportunity to the rain to soak into the tree, which will quickly cause it to decay, so that you must cut it down, or else both body and top will be of little value.

Mortimer.

2. [loppe, Saxon.] A flea.

LOPE. pret. of leap. Obsolete.

With that sprang forth a naked swain,
With spotted wings like peacock's train,
And laughing lope to a tree.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

LOPPER.† n. s. [from lop.] One that cuts trees. [arborator, Latin.] Huloet.

Hence lopper on the hautie hill
Shall sing with voice on high.

Huloet, Tr. of Virg.

LOPPERED.† adj. Coagulated; as, loppered milk. Ainsworth. Thus it is still called in Scotland. Dr. Johnson. It is lappered in Scotland, and loppered in Lancashire. Radically the same, Dr. Jamieson says, with the Icel. hlapp, coagulum, liquor coagulatus, from hlæpe, coagulo.

LOPPINGS.* n. s. pl. [from lop.] Tops of branches lopped off. Cotg. and Sherwood.

LOQUACIOUS. adj. [loquax, Latin.]

1. Full of talk; full of tongue.

To whom sad Eve,
Confessing soon; yet not before her judge
Bold, or loquacious, thus abash'd reply'd.

Milton, P. L.

In council she gives licence to her tongue,
Loquacious, bawling, ever in the wrong.

Dryden.

2. Speaking.

Blind British bards, with volant touch
Traverse loquacious strings, whose solemn notes
Provoke to harmless revels.

Philips.

3. Apt to blab; not secret.

LOQUACIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from loquacious.]
Loquacity; too much talk.

LOQUACITY.† n. s. [loquacité, French.
Cotgrave; loquacitas, Latin.] Too much talk.

Why loquacity is to be avoided, the wise man gives sufficient reason, for in the multitude of words there wasteth not sin.

Ray on Creation.

Too great loquacity, and too great taciturnity by fits.

Arbutnot.

LORD.† n. s. [hlaford, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — "lavardur, Icel. herus, dominus; à laefe, lave, area, horreum; à lad, terra, et warda; ali, nec incommodé." Serenius. Thus Verelius derives lavardur, from lad, land, and vard, a guardian; and the G. Andr. considers the word quasi lavagardr, horrei œconomus, from lave, a barn, a storehouse. Others view loaf as the origin of this word. See LADY. Junius thus deduces it from hlaf, and ord, initium, origo, q. d. he who administers bread; Stiernhielm, from hlaf, and ward, an host. Mr. H. Tooke, observing that hlaf is the past participle of the Saxon hlifan, to raise, says that hlaford is a compound word of hlaf, raised or elevated, and ord, (ortus,) source, origin, birth. Lord therefore means high-born, or of an exalted origin. Div. of Purl. ii. 158. A learned commentator of elder times has made the following remark on lord: "Adonai, lord, is of the former word Eden, a base or pillar which sustaineth any thing: this title sheweth, that the Lord, who created all things, doth also sustain and preserve them. Our English word lord hath much like force, being contracted of the old Saxon laford, which cometh of laef, to sustain." Leigh's Critica Sacra, edit. 1650. p. 4. col. 1.]

1. Monarch; ruler; governor.

Man over man

He made not lord. Milton, P. L.
Of Athens he was lord. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

We have our author's only arguments to prove, that heirs are lords over their brethren.

Locke.

They call'd their lord Actæon to the game,
He shook his head in answer to the name.

Addison.

O'er love, o'er fear, extends his wide domain,
Unconquer'd lord of pleasure and of pain.

Vanity of Human Wishes.

2. Master; supreme person.

But now I was the lord

Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
This house, these servants, and this same myself
Are yours, my lord.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

3. A tyrant; an oppressive ruler.

Now being assembled into one company, rather without a lord than at liberty to accomplish their misery, they fall to division.

Hayward.

'Tis death to fight, but kingly to control
Lord like at ease, with arbitrary power,
To peel the chiefs, the people to devour.

Dryden.

4. A husband.

I oft in bitterness of soul deplor'd
My absent daughter, and my dearer lord.

Pope, Odys.

5. One who is at the head of any business; an overseer.

Grant harvest lord more by a penny or two,
To call on his fellows the better to doo.

Tusser, Husb.

6. A nobleman.

Thou art a lord, and nothing but a lord.

Shaks.

7. A general name for a peer of England.

Nor were the crimes objected against him so clear, as to give convincing satisfaction to the major part of both houses, especially that of the lords.

King Charles.

8. A baron, as distinguished from those of higher title.

9. An honorary title applied to officers, as lord chief justice, lord mayor, lord chief baron.

10. A ludicrous title, given by the vulgar to a humpbacked person; traced, however, the Greek λοπδδδ, crooked. See Du Cange in V. LURDUS. And Whiter's Etym. Magn. p. 338.

TO LORD. v. n. To domineer; to rule despotically: with over before the subject of power.

Unrighteous lord of love! what law is this,
That me thou makest thus tormented be?
The whiles she lordeth in licentious bliss
Of her free will, scorning both thee and me.

Spenser.

I see them lording it in London streets. Shaks.
Those huge tracks of ground they lorded over,
begat wealth, wealth ushered in pride.

Hovell, Voc. Forest.

They had by this possess'd the towers of Gath,
And lorded over them whom now they serve.

Milton, S. A.

I should rather choose to be tumbled into the dust in blood, bearing witness to any known truth of our Lord, than by a denial of truths, through blood and perjury, wade to a sceptre, and lord it in a throne.

South.

But if thy passions lord it in thy breast,
Art thou not still a slave?

Dryden, Pers.

The valour of one man the afflicted throne
Imperial, that once lorded o'er the world, Sustain'd.

Philips.

The civilizers! the disturbers say,
The robbers, the corrupters of mankind!
Proud vagabonds! who make the world your home,
And lord it where you have no right.

Philips, Briton.

TO LORD.* v. a. To invest with the dignity and privileges of a lord.

He being thus lorded,
Not only with what his revenue yielded,
But what my power might else exact, — like one,
Who having, unto truth, by telling of it,
Made such a sinner of his memory,
To credit his own lie, — he did believe
He was the duke.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

The Yorkshire men happily may like his (lord Ewre,) being lorded.

Second Narrat. of the late Parl. &c. (1658), p. 20.

LO'RDING.† n. s. [from lord.]

1. Sir; master; an ancient mode of address.

Now, lordings, trewely,
Ye ben to me welcome right hertly,
Listen, lordings, if ye list to weet
The cause.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

He call'd the worthies then, and spake them so:
Lordings, you know I yielded to your will.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. A little lord; a lord in contempt or ridicule.

I'll question you
Of my lord's tricks, and yours, when you were boys,
You were pretty lordings then!

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

As if they would turn the world upside down, and put the steeple into the bell, and bell into the clapper, beggars on horseback, and lordings lackey.

Favour, Anlig. over Novelty, (1619), p. 514.

To lording proud, I tune my lay,
Who feast in bower or hall;
Though dukes they be, be to dukes I say,
That pride will have a fall.

Swift.

LO'RDLIKE.* adj. [lord and like.]

1. Befitting a lord.
Feare to lose the lordlike lyvynge of thys worlde.
Confut. of N. Shaxton, (1546), D. v. b.

2. Haughty; proud; insolent.

Lordlike at ease, with arbitrary power,
To peel the chiefs, the people to devour.

Dryden, Iliad.

LO'RDLING. n. s. A diminutive lord.
Traulus, of amphibious breed,
By the dam from lordlings sprung,
By the sire exhal'd from dung.

Swift.

LO'RDLINESS.† n. s. [from lordly.]

1. Dignity; high station.
Thou vouchsafest here to visit me,
Doing the honour of thy lordliness
To one so weak.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

2. Pride; haughtiness.
Balaam being also the false prophet, and set here for the pope and his clergy, agrees excellently well with the lordliness of him in this Pergamenian period, wherein he trode upon the necks of emperours, and kicked their crowns off with his feet.

More, on the Seven Churches, Pref.

LO'RDLY. adj. [from lord.]

1. Befitting a lord.

Lordly sins require lordly estates to support them.

South.

2. Proud; haughty; imperious; insolent.

Bad, as yourself, my lord;
An't like your lordly, lord protectorship! Shaksp.
Of me as of a common enemy,
So dreaded once, may now exasperate them,
I know not; lords are lordliest in their wine.

Milton, S. A.

Expect another message more imperious,
More lordly thundering than thou well wilt bear.

Milton, S. A.

Every rich and lordly swain,
With pride wou'd drag about her chain. Swift.
LO'RDLY. adv. Imperiously; despotically;
proudly.

So when a tiger sucks the bullock's blood,
A famish'd lion, issuing from the wood,
Roars lordly fierce, and challenges the food.

Dryden.

LO'RDSHIP. n. s. [from lord.]

1. Dominion; power.

Let me never know that any base affection should get any lordship in your thoughts. Sidney.
It being set upon such an insensible rising of the ground, it gives the eye lordship over a good large circuit. Sidney.

They which are accounted to rule over the Gentiles, exercise lordship over them, and their great ones exercise authority upon them.

St. Mark, x. 42.

Needs must the lordship there from virtue slide.
Fairfax.

2. Seignior; domain.

How can those grants of the king be avoided without wronging of those lords which had those lands and lordships given them.

There is lordship of the fee wherein the master doth much joy, when he walketh about his own possessions. Wotton.

What lands and lordships for their owner know
My quondam barber, but his worship now.

Dryden.

3. Title of honour used to a nobleman not a duke.

I assure your lordship,
The extreme horror of it almost turn'd me
To air, when first I heard it.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

I could not answer it to the world, if I gave not your lordship my testimony of being the best husband now living. Dryden.

4. Titular compellation of judges, and some other persons in authority and office.

LORE.† n. s. [lope, learning, Sax. from læpan, to learn.]

1. Lesson; doctrine; instruction.

And, for the modest lore of maidenhood
Bids me not sojourn with these armed men.
Oh whether shall I fly?

The law of nations, or the lore of war. Fairfax.
Calm region once,

And full of peace: now tost, and turbulent!
For understanding rul'd not; and the will Heard not her lore! but in subjection now
To sensual appetite. Milton, P. L.

The subtle fiend his lore
Soon learn'd, now milder, and thus answer'd smooth. Milton.

Lo! Rome herself, proud mistress now no more
Of arts, but thund'r'd against heathen lore.

Pope.

2. Workmanship.

In her right hand a rod of peace she bore,
About the which two serpents wren wound,
Entray'd mutually in lovely lore.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. iii. 42.

Spenser, F. Q.

LO'REL.† n. s. [from leopan, Sax.] An abandoned scoundrel, Obsolete. Dr.
Johnson. — It is the Cornish term for a vagrant. Sometimes it is, in our lexicography, explained by lozel; both indeed originally meaning what we now call,
"a lost man;" and is rendered into the Latin perditus, perditissimus. See LOSEL.
Every lorell shapeth hym to finde newe fraudes.

Chaucer, Boeth.

Siker thou speak'st like a lewd lorell

Of heaven to deemen so:

How be I am but rude and borrell,

Yet nearer ways I know. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Her wisdom did admire, and hearkned to her loring. Spenser, F. Q. v. vii. 42.

LO'RRIOT.† n. s. [loriot, French.] The bird called witwal. [galgulus.] Colgrave.
LORN.† pret. part. and pass. [lopen, Sax.
from leopan.] Left; forsaken; lost.

I curse the stound

That ever I cast to have lorn this ground.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept.

Who after that he had fair Una lorn,
Through light misdeeming of her loyalty.

Spenser, F. Q.

But thou, lorn stream whose sullen tide,
No sedge-crown'd sisters now attend,
Now waft me from the green hill's side,
Whose cold turf bids the buried friend.

Coltins on the Death of Thomson.

LO'SABLE. adj. [from lose.] Subject to privation.

Consider whether motion, or a propensity to it,
be an inherent quality belonging to atoms in general, and not losable by them. Boyle.

To LOSE.† v. a. pret. and part. lost.
[Gothick, liusan; Sax. leopan, lopian.]

1. To forfeit by unsuccessful contest: the contrary to win.

I fought the battle bravely which I lost,
And lost it but to Macedonians. Dryden.

The lightn'd coursers ran;
They rush'd, and won by turns, and lost the day.

Dryden.

2. To forfeit as a penalty. In this sense is Paradise lost.

Fame — few, alas! the casual blessing boast,
So hard to gain, so easy to be lost! Pope.

3. To be deprived of.

He lost his right hand with a shot, and, instead thereof, ever after used a hand of iron.

Knolles, Hist.

Who conquer'd him, and in what fatal strife
The youth, without a wound, could lose his life.

Dryden.

The Trojan honour and the Roman boast,
Admir'd when living, and ador'd when lost.

Dryden.

We should never lose sight of the country, though sometimes entertained with a distant prospect of it. Addison.

6. To miss, so as not to find.

Venus wept the sad disaster
Of having lost her favourite dove. Prior.

7. To separate or alienate. It is perhaps in this sense always used passively, with to before that from which the separation is made.

But if to honour lost 'tis still decreed
For you my bowl shall flow, my flock shall bleed;
Judge and assert my right, impartial Jove.

Pope, Odys.

When men are openly abandoned, and lost to all shame, they have no reason to think it hard, if their memory be reproached. Swift.

8. To ruin; to send to perdition.

In spite of all the virtue she can boast,
The woman that deliberates is lost. Addison.

9. To bewilder, so that the way is no longer known.

I will go lose myself,
And wander up and down to view the city. Shakspere.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unprepared and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

When the mind pursues the idea of infinity, it uses the ideas and repetition of numbers, which are so many distinct ideas, kept best by number from running into a confused heap, wherein the mind loses itself. Locke.

But rebel wit deserts thee oft in vain,
Lost in the maze of words he turns again. Pope.

10. To deprive of.

How should you go about to lose him a wife he loves with so much passion. Temple

11. Not to employ; not to enjoy.

The happy have whole days, and those they use,
The unhappy have but hours, and these they lose.

Dryden.

His seely back the bunch has got
Which Edwin lost before. Parnel.

To LOSE, v. n.

1. Not to win.

We'll hear poor rogues
Talk of court news, and we'll talk with them too,
Who loses, and who wins; who's in, who's out. Shakespeare.

2. To decline; to fail.

Wisdom in discourse with her
Loses discountenance, and like folly shews. Milton, P. L.

LO'SEL, † n. s. [from the Sax. lopan, to perish, to be lost. What occasion is there for pronouncing this a corruption of lorel, when the derivation is so clear? Mr. Douce supposes the similarity of the letters r and z, in ancient manuscripts, to have occasioned the two words lorel, and lozel, or lozel.] A scoundrel; a sorry worthless fellow. A word now obsolete.

Such lozels and scatterlings cannot easily, by any sheriff, be gotten, when they are challenged for any such fact. Spenser on Ireland.

A lozel wandering by the way,
One that to bounty never cast his mind,
Ne thought of honour ever did essay
His baser breast. Spenser, F. Q.
Be not with work of lozels' wit defam'd,
Ne let such verses poetry be named.

By Cambridge a towne I do know,
Whose losses by lozels doth shew
More heere then is needful to tell. Tusser, Husb.
A gross hag!
And, lozel, thou art worthy to be hang'd,
That wilt not stay her tongue. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

The rude hand of many an idle lozel, that dares adventure to portray that sacred beauty.
Loe, Bl. of Br. Beauty, (1614), p. 51.

LO'SENGER,  n. s.* [from the Sax. leapunge, lying; lozengier, Fr. a beguiler, Cotgrave.] A deceiver; a flatterer. Obsolete. Cockeram.

Alas! ye lordes, many a false flatur
Is in your court, and many a lozengour.
Chaucer, Non. Pr. Tale.

LO'SER, n. s. [from lose.] One that is deprived of any thing; one that forfeits any thing; one that is impaired in his possession or hope: the contrary to winner or gainer.

With the losers let it sympathize,
For nothing can seem foul to those that win. Shakespeare.

No man can be provident of his time that is not prudent in the choice of his company; and if one of the speakers be vain, tedious, and trifling, he that hears, and he that answers, are equal losers of their time. Ep. Taylor, Holy Living.

It cannot last, because that act seems to have been carried on rather by the interest of particular countries, than by that of the whole, which must be a loser by it. Temple.

A bull with gilded horns,
Shall be the portion of the conquering chief,
A sword and helm shall cheer the loser's grief. Dryden.

Losers and malecontents, whose portion and inheritance is a freedom to speak. South.

LO'SING,  n. s.* [lojng, Saxon.] Loss; diminution.

The fear of the Lord goeth before the obtaining of authority: but roughness and pride is the losing thereof. Eccus. x. 21.

LOSS, † n. s. [loj, Sax. from the verb leorjan, to lose.]

1. Detriment; privation; diminution of good: the contrary to gain.

The only gain he purchased was to be capable of loss and detriment for the good of others. Hooker.

An evil natured son is the dishonour of his father that begat him; and a foolish daughter is born to his loss. Eccus.

The abatement of price of any of the landholder's commodities, lessens his income, and is a clear loss. Locke.

2. Miss; privation.

If he were dead, what would betide of me?
— No other harm but loss of such a lord.
— The loss of such a lord includes all harms. Shakespeare.

3. Deprivation; forfeiture.

Loss of Eden, till one greater man Restore it, and regain. Milton, P. L.

4. Destruction.

Her fellow ships from far her loss desried;
But only she was sunk, and all were safe beside. Dryden.

There succeeded an absolute victory for the English, with the slaughter of above two thousand of the enemy, with the loss but of one man, though not a few hurt. Bacon.

5. Fault; puzzle: used only in the following phrase.

Not the least transaction of sense and motion in man, but philosophers are at a loss to comprehend. South, Serm.

Reason is always striving, and always at a loss, while it is exercised about that which is not its proper object. Dryden.

A man may sometimes be at a loss which side to chose with. Baker on Learning.

6. Useless application.

It would be loss of time to explain any farther our superiority to the enemy in numbers of men and horse. Addison.

LO'SSFUL,  adj.* [loss and full.] Detrimental; noxious.

Aught that might be lossful or prejudicial to us. Ep. Hall, Rem. p. 277.

LO'SSLESS,  adj.* [loss and less.] Exempt from loss.

Rebellion rages in our Irish province; but, with miraculous and lossless victories of few against many, is daily discomfited and broken. Milton, Apol. for Smectymnus.

LOST, participial adj. [from lose.] No longer perceptible.

In seventeen days appear'd your pleasing coast,
And woody mountains, half in vapours lost. Pope, Odys.

LOT, † n. s. [hlaut, Gothick; hlot, Saxon; lot, Dutch. Dr. Johnson.—The past participle of the Sax. hlutan, to cover. Mr. H. Tooke.—“The English word lot cometh of the Hebrew laat, to hide or cover, or to lie hid; because a lot is of obscure and doubtful things.” Leigh, Critica Sacra, 1650, p. 119. col. 1.]

1. Fortune; state assigned.

Kala, at length conclude my lingering lot:
Disdain me not, although I be not fair,
Who is an heir of many hundred sheep,
Doth beauty keep which never sun can burn,
Nor storms do turn. Sidney.

Our own lot is best; and by aiming at what we have not, we lose what we have already. L'Estrange.

Prepar'd I stand; he was but born to try
The lot of man, to suffer and to die. Pope, Odys.

2. A die, or any thing used in determining chances.

Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats; one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for the scapegoat. Lev. xvi. 8.

Their tasks in equal portions she divides,
And where unequal, there by lots decides. Dryden, Virg.

Ulysses bids his friends to cast lots, to shew, that he would not voluntarily expose them to so imminent danger. Broome.

3. A chance. See LOTTERY.

If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks
My name hath touch'd your ears; it is Menenius. Shakespeare, Coriol.

4. A portion; a parcel of goods as being drawn by lot: as, what lot of silks had you at the sale?

5. Proportion of taxes; as to pay scot and lot.

Anone cometh another—
And with her doth bryng
Mele, salt, or other thing,
Her earnest girdle, her wedding ring,
To pay for hir scot,
As cometh to her lot. Skelton, Poems, p. 131.

To LOT,  v. a.* [from the noun.]

1. To assign; to set apart.
A just reward, such as all times before
Have ever lotted to those wretched folks. Sackville, Gorboduc.

They appoint no time for their release, but patiently abide his lotted leisure. Anderson, Expos. on Benedictus, (1573), fol. 54. b.

2. To distribute into lots; to catalogue: as, the goods are lotted.

3. To portion.

Some sense, and more estate, kind Heaven
To this well lotted peer hath given. Prior.

LOTE tree, or Nettle tree, † n. s. [lote, Fr. Cotgrave.]

1. A plant. See LOTOS.

The leaves of the lote tree are like those of the nettle. The fruit of this tree is not so tempting to us, as it was to the companions of Ulysses: the wood is durable, and used to make pipes for wind instruments: the root is proper for hafts of knives, and was highly esteemed by the Romans for its beauty and use. Miller.

Next comes the Lote-tree, in whose dusky hue,
Her black and sun-burnt country you might view. Tate's Cowley.

2. A little muddy fish, like an eel; an eel-pout: also a small scaled fish.

LOTH,  See LOATH*.

LO'TOS, † n. s. [Latin.] See LOTE.

The trees around them all their food produce,
Lotos, the name divine, nectareous juice. Pope, Odys.

There appear to have been two distinct species of lotus designed by the term, [lotos], because Herodotus and Pliny, in particular, describe a marked difference between them: the one being an aquatic plant, whose root and seeds were eaten, in Egypt; the other, the fruit of a shrub or small tree, on the sandy coast of Lybia.

Rennel on the Geograph. of Herodotus.

LO'TION. n. s. [lotio, Latin; lotion, Fr.]

A lotion is a form of medicine compounded of aqueous liquids, used to wash any part with.

Quincy.
In lotions in women's cases, he orders two portions of hellebore macerated in two cotsyls of water.

Arbutnot on Coins.

LO'TTERY.† n. s. [lotterie, Fr. from lot.]

1. A game of chance; a sortilege; distribution of prizes by chance; a play in which lots are drawn for prizes.

Let high sighted tyranny range on,
Till each man drop by lottery.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.
The lottery that he hath devised in these three chests of gold, silver, and lead, will never be chosen by any but whom you shall rightly love.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Fortune, that with malicious joy
Does man, her slave, oppress,
Still various and unconstant still,
Promotes, degrades, delights in strife,
And makes a lottery of life.

Dryden, Hor.
Every warrior may be said to be a soldier of fortune, and the best commanders to have a lottery for their work.

2. Allottery; allotment. Not now in use.

If beauty, wisdom, modesty, can settle
The heart of Antony, Octavia is
A blessed lottery to him.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Fainting under
Fortune's false lottery.

Beaumont and Fl. Hon. Man's Fortune.

LO'VABLE.* adj. [from love.] Amiable;

worthy to be loved.

Sherwood.

LO'VAGE. n. s. [levisticum, Latin.] A plant.

LOUD.† adj. [hlud, Sax. the past participle of the verb to low, or to bellow; hlopan, behlopan, lowed, low'd. What we now write loud, was formerly, and more properly, written low'd. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 39. Su. Goth. liud;

Teut. lyude; Germ. laut.]

1. Noisy; striking the ear with great force.

They were instant with loud voices, requiring that he might be crucified.

St. Luke, xxiii. 23.

The numbers soft and clear,
Gently steal upon the ear;

Now louder, and yet louder rise,
And fill with spreading sounds the skies.

Pope, St. Cecilia.

2. Clamorous; turbulent.

She is loud and stubborn; her feet abide not in her house.

Proverbs.

LOUD.* adv. Noisily; so as to strike the ear with great force.

The guests loud laughing, who can then be heard?

Davies, Wü's Pilgrim, sign. V. 2.

Contending on the Lesbian shore,
His prowess Philomelides confess'd,

And loud acclaiming Greeks the victor bless'd.

Pope.

LO'UDLY. adv. [from loud.]

1. Noisily; so as to be heard far.

The soldier that philosopher well blam'd
Who long and loudly in the schools declaim'd.

Denham.

2. Clamorously; with violence of voice.

I read above fifty pamphlets, written by as many presbyterian divines, loudly disclaiming toleration.

Swift.

LO'UDNESS. n. s. Noise; force of sound;
turbulence; vehemence or furiousness of clamour.

Had any disaster made room for grief, it would have moved according to prudence, and the proportions of the provocation: it would not have sallied out into complaint or loudness.

South.

TO LOVE. v. a. [lupan, Sax.]

1. To regard with passionate affection, as that of one sex to the other,

Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love.

— It is to be made all of sighs and tears;

It is to be made all of faith and service;

It is to be made all of fantasy;

All made of passion, and all made of wishes;

All adoration, duty, and obedience;

All humbleness, all patience, all impatience,

All purity, all trial, all observance.

Shakspeare.

I could not love I'm sure

One who in love were wise.

Cowley.

The jealous man wishes himself a kind of deity to the person he loves; he would be the only employment of her thoughts.

Addison.

2. To regard with the affection of a friend.

None but his brethren he, and sisters, knew,
Whom the kind youth prefer'd to me,

And much above myself I lov'd them too.

Cowley.

3. To regard with parental tenderness.

He that loveth me shall be loved of my father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him.

St. John.

4. To be pleased with; to delight in.

Wit, eloquence, and poetry,

Arts which I lov'd.

Cowley.

He lov'd my worthless rhimes, and, like a friend

Would find out something to commend.

Cowley.

5. To regard with reverent unwillingness to offend.

Love the Lord thy God with all thine heart.

Deut. vi. 5.

TO LOVE.* v. n. To delight; to take pleasure.

Fish used to salt water delight more in fresh;

we see that salmon and smelts love to get into rivers, though against the stream.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people will have it so.

Jerem. v. 31.

LOVE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The passion between the sexes.

Hearken to the birds love-learned song,

The dewy leaves among! Spenser, Epithalam.

While idly I stood looking on,

I found the effect of love in idleness.

Shakspeare.

My tales of love were wont to weary you;

I know you joy not in a love discourse.

Shakspeare.

I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye,

That lik'd, but had a rougher task in hand

Than to drive liking to the name of love.

Shakspeare.

What need a vermilion-tinctur'd lip for that,

Love-darting eyes, or tresses like the morn?

Milton, Comus.

Love quarrels oft in pleasing concord end,
Not wedlock treachery, endang'ring life.

Milton, S. A.

A love potion works more by the strength of charm than nature.

Collier on Popularity.

You know you are in my power by making love.

Dryden.

Let mutual joys our mutual trust combine,

And love, and love-born confidence be thine.

Pope.

Cold is that breast which warm'd the world before,

And these love-darting eyes must roll no more.

Pope.

2. Kindness; good-will; friendship.

What love, think'st thou, I sue so much to get?

My love till death, my humble thanks, my prayers;

That love which virtue begs, and virtue grants.

Shakspeare.

God brought Daniel into favour and tender love with the prince.

Dan. i. 9.

The one preach Christ of contention, but the other of love.

Phil. i. 17.

By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another.

St. John, xiii. 35.

Unwearied have we spent the nights,

Till the Ledeian stars, so fam'd for love,

Wonder'd at us from above.

Cowley.

3. Courtship.

Demetrius

Made love to Nedar's daughter Helena,

And won her soul.

Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

If you will marry make your loves to me,

My lady is bespoken.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The enquiry of truth, which is the love-making or wooing of it; the knowledge of truth, the preference of it; and the belief of truth, the enjoying of it, is the sovereign good of human nature.

Bacon, Essays.

4. Tenderness; parental care.

No religion that ever was, so fully represents the goodness of God, and his tender love to mankind, which is the most powerful argument to the love of God.

Tillotson.

5. Liking; inclination to: as the love of one's country.

In youth, of patrimonial wealth possess'd,

The love of science faintly warm'd his breast.

Fenton.

6. Object beloved.

Open the temple gates unto my love.

Spenser, Epithal.

If that the world and love were young,

And truth in every shepherd's tongue;

These pretty pleasures might me move,

To live with thee, and be thy love.

Raleigh.

The banish'd never hopes his love to see.

Dryden.

The lover and the love of human kind.

Pope.

7. Lewdness.

He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,

But on his knees at meditation.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

8. Unreasonable liking.

The love to sin makes a man sin against his own reason.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

Men in love with their opinions may not only suppose what is in question, but allege wrong matter of fact.

Locke.

9. Fondness; concord.

Come, love, and health to all! —

Then I'll sit down: give me some wine; fill full.

Shakspeare.

Shall I come unto you with a rod, or in love,

and in the spirit of meekness?

1 Cor. iv. 21.

10. Principle of union.

Love is the great instrument of nature, the bond and cement of society, the spirit and spring of the universe: love is such an affection as cannot so properly be said to be in the soul, as the soul to be in that: it is the whole man wrapt up into one desire.

South.

11. Picturesque representation of love.

The lovely babe was born with every grace:

Such was his form as painters, when they show

Their utmost art, on naked loves bestow.

Dryden, Ovid.

12. A word of endearment.

'Tis no dishonour, trust me, love, 'tis none;

I would die for thee.

Dryden, Don Sebastian.

13. Due reverence to God.

I know that you have not the love of God in you.

St. John.

Love is of two sorts, of friendship and of desire; the one betwixt friends, the other betwixt lovers; the one a rational, the other a sensitive love: so our love of God consists of two parts, as esteeming of God, and desiring of him.

Hammond.

The love of God makes a man chaste without the laborious arts of fasting, and exterior disciplines; he reaches at glory without any other arms but those of love.

Bp. Taylor.

14. A kind of thin silk stuff. Ainsworth.

This leaf held near the eye, and obverted to the light, appeared so full of pores, with such a transparency as that of a sieve, a piece of cypress, or love hood.
Boyle on Colours.

LO'VEAPPLE.† n. s. A plant. Miller.
Love-apple, though its flower less fair appears,
Its golden fruit deserves the name it bears.
Tate's Cowley.

LO'VEDAY.* n. s. [love and day.] A day, in old times, appointed for the amicable settlement of differences. "Si ante judicium capiat dies amoris." Bracton. And, "agayn the fourme of a love-day taken between the same parties." Rot. Parl. 13 H. 4. n. 13. Tyrwhitt.

In lovedays, there coude he mochel help.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.
I can holde lovedayes, and here a reve's rekyngne.
Vis. of P. Plowman.

This day, all quarrels die, Andronicus; —
I do remit these young men's heinous faults:
Lavinia, though you left me like a churl,
I found a friend; and sure as death I swore,
I would not part a bachelor from the priest.
Come, if the emperor's court can feast two brides,
You are my guest, Lavinia, and your friends:
This day shall be a loveday, Tamora.
Titus Andronicus.

LOVEFA'VOUR.* n. s. [love and favour.] Something given to be worn in token of love.

Deck'd with love-favours. Bp. Hall, Sat. i. 2.

LOVE-IN-IDELNESS.* n. s. A kind of violet.

A little western flower, —
Before, milk-white; now purple with love's wound:
And maidens call it love-in-idelness.
Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

LO'VEKNOT. n. s. [love and knot.] A complicated figure, by which affection interchanged is figured.

LO'VELESS.* n. s. [love and lass.] Sweetheart; lass beloved.

So soone as Tython's love-lass can display
Her opall colours in her Eastern throne.
Mir. for Mag. p. 776.

LO'VELESS.* adj. [love and less.] 1. Without love; void of the passion between the sexes.

He wanted nothing but a lady, on whom he might bestow his service and affection; for the knight-errant that is loveless, resembles a tree that wants leaves and fruit, or a body without a soul.
Shelton, Tr. of D. Quixote, i. 1.

Ye loveless bards, intent with artful pains
To form a sigh, or to contrive a tear,
Forego your Pindus! Shenstone, Eleg. 1.

2. Without endearment; without tenderness.

Not in the bought smiles
Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unendear'd.
Milton, P. L.

3. Void of kindness.

How rules therein thy breast so quiet state,
Spite leagu'd with mercy, love with loveless hate?
P. Fletcher, Pisc. Eccl. iii. 14.

LO'VELETTER. n. s. [love and letter.] Letter of courtship.

Have I escaped loveletters in the holiday time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them?
Shakespeare.

The children are educated in the different notions of their parents; the sons follow the father, while the daughters read loveletters and romances to their mother.
Addison, Spect.

LOVE-lies-a-bleeding.* n. s. A kind of amaranth. See the first sense of AMARANTH.

LO'VELILY. adv. [from lovely.] Amia- bly; in such a manner as to excite love.

Thou look'st

Lovely dreadful. Otway, Ven. Preserved.

LO'VELINESS. n. s. [from lovely.] Amia- bleness; qualities of mind or body that excite love.

Carrying thus in one person the only two bands of good-will, loveliness and lovingness. Sidney.

When I approach

Her loveliness, so absolute she seems,
That what she wills to do, or say,
Seems wisest, virtuousest, discreetest, best.
Milton, P. L.

If there is such a native loveliness in the sex, as to make them victorious when they are in the wrong, how resistless is their power when they are on the side of truth?
Addison.

LO'VELOCK.* n. s. [love and lock.] A term for a particular sort of curl, worn by the men of fashion in the reigns of Elizabeth and James the First; against which Prynne wrote a laborious pamphlet in 1628, maintaining that utter ruin must be the portion of his countrymen, if they did not leave off to nourish their lovelocks! See also TO CALAMISTRATE. The mode continued beyond the date of Prynne's ridiculous indignation. Lily seems to have somewhat anticipated, in the following passage, part of the vogue of the present times.

How, sir, will you be trimmed? will you have your beard like a spade or a bodkin? a penthouse on your upper lip, or an alley on your chin? a low curl on your head like a bull, or dangling like a spaniel? your mustachoes sharpe at the endes, like shoemakers' aules, or hanging down to your mouth, like goates flakes? your lovelocks wreathed with a silken twist, or shaggie to fall on your shoulders?
Lily, Mils. (1592).

Prodigal in apparel, "pure lotus," neat combed and curled, with powdered hairs, "compatus et calamistratus," with a long lovelock, a flower in his ear, perfumed gloves.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 539.

LO'VELORN. adj. [love and lorn.] For- saken of one's love.

The love-lorn nightingale,
Nightly to thee her sad song mourneth well.
Milton, Comus.

LO'VELY. adj. [from love. Sax. luplic.] Amiable; exciting love.

The breast of Hecuba,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier
Than Hector's forehead. Shakespeare, Coriol.
Saul and Jonathan were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in their death they were not di- vided.
5 Sam.

The flowers which it had press'd
Appeared to my view,
More fresh and lovely than the rest,
That in the meadows grew. Denham.
The Christian religion gives us a more lovely character of God than any religion ever did.
Tillotson.

The fair
With cleanly powder dry their hair;
And round their lovely breast and head
Fresh flow'rs their mingl'd odours shed. Prior.
LO'VELY.* adv. [luplice, Sax.] Charming- ly; beautifully.

The defecated liquor —
Spouts into subject vessels, lovely clear.
Philips, Cider, B. 2.

LO'VEMONGER. n. s. [love and monger.] One who deals in affairs of love.

Thou art an old lovenmonger, and speakest skill- fully. Shakespeare.

LO'VEQUICK.* adj. [love and quick.] With the eagerness of love.

[She] sees not him her soul desir'd to see;
And yet hope spent makes her not leave to look:
At last her lovequick eyes, which ready be,
Fasten on one. Daniel, Civ. War, B. 2.

LO'VER. n. s. [from love.]

1. One who is in love.
Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit. Shakespeare.

Let it never be said, that he whose breast
Is fill'd with love, should break a lover's rest. Dryden.

2. A friend; one who regards with kind- ness.

I tell thee, fellow,
Thy general is my lover: I have been
The book of his good act, whence men have read
His fame unparallel'd, haply amplified. Shakespeare.

3. One who likes any thing.
To be good and gracious, and a lover of know- ledge, are amiable things.
Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

LO'VER.† n. s. An opening. See LOU- VER.

LOVESE'CRET. n. s. [love and secret.] Se- cret between lovers.

What danger, Arimant, is this you fear?
Or what lovesecret which I must not hear?
Dryden, Aur.

LO'VESHAF†.* n. s. [love and shaft.] The arrow of Cupid.

A certain aim he took
At a fair vestal throned by the west,
And loos'd his loveshaft smartly from his bow.
Shakespeare, Mils. N. Dream.

LO'VESICK. adj. [love and sick.] Disor- dered with love; languishing with amo- rous desire.

See, on the shore inhabits purple spring,
Where nightingales their lovesick ditty sing.
Dryden.

To the dear mistress of my lovesick mind,
Her swain a pretty present has design'd.
Dryden, Virg.

Of the reliefs to ease a lovesick mind,
Flavia prescribes despair. Granville.

LO'VESOME.† adj. [lupume, Sax. sweet, agreeable.] Lovely. Adopted by Dry- den from Chaucer. A word not now perhaps in use.

Nothing new can spring
Without thy warmth, without thy influence bear,
Or beautiful or lovesome can appear. Dryd. Luc.

LO'VESONG. n. s. [love and song.] Song expressing love.

Poor Romeo is already dead!
Stabb'd with a white wench's black eye,
Run through the ear with a lovesong. Shakespeare.
Lovesong weeds and satyrick thorns are grown,
Where seeds of better arts were early sown. Donne.

LO'VESUIT. n. s. [love and suit.] Courtship.

His lovesuit hath been to me

As fearful as a siege. Shakespeare, Cymb.

LO'VETALE. n. s. [love and tale.] Narrative of love.

The lovetale
Infected Sion's daughters with like heat;
Whose wanton passions in the sacred porch
Ezekiel saw. Milton, P. L.
Cato's a proper person to entrust
A lovetale with. Addison.

LO'VETHOUGHT. n. s. [love and thought.] Amorous fancy.

Away to sweet beds of flowers,
Love thoughts lie rich when canopied with bowers.
Shakespeare.

LOVETO'KEN.* n. s. [lufetacin, Sax.] A present in token of love.

Thou hast given her rhymes,
And interchang'd lovetokens with my child.
Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

LO'VETOY. n. s. [love and toy.] Small presents given by lovers.
Has this amorous gentleman presented himself with any *lovetoy*s, such as gold snuff-boxes?
Arbutnot and Pope.

LO'VETRICK. n. s. [love and trick.] Art of expressing love.

Other disports than dancing jollities!
Other lovetricks than glancing with the eyes.
Donne.

LOUGH.† n. s. [Welsh, lloch; Irish, lough, loch, an inlet of water, a large collection of water, a lake. Lough has been adopted into the Irish maps from the English surveyors, who could not pronounce the Irish word loch. G. Chalmers. The word, however, is also the Icel. laug, and Su. Goth. log, a lake. Hence our lough. See also Ihre in V. LAG.] A lake; a large inland standing water.

A people near the northern pole that won,
Whom Ireland sent from loughs and forests here,
Divided far by sea from Europe's shore. Fairfax.
Lough Ness never freezes. Phil. Trans.

LOUGH.* pret. of to laugh. Laughed. See also Too LOFFE.

Eche of hem at other's sinne lough.

After that he [Lazarus] was restored to the miseries of this life agayne, he never lough, but was in contynuall heavyness.
Chaucer, Pard. Tale.
By. Fisher.

LO'VING. part. adj. [from love.]

1. Kind; affectionate.

So loving to my mother,
That he would not let ev'n the winds of heaven
Visit her face too roughly. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
This earl was of great courage, and much loved of his soldiers, to whom he was no less loving again. Hayward.

2. Expressing kindness.

The king took her in his arms till she came to herself, and comforted her with loving words.
Esth. xv. 8.

LO'VING-KINDNESS. n. s. Tenderness; favour; mercy. A scriptural word.

Remember, O Lord, thy tender mercies, and thy loving-kindnesses. Ps. xlv. 6.
He has adapted the arguments of obsequy to the imperfection of our understanding, requiring us to consider him only under the amiable attributes of goodness and lovingkindness, and to adore him as our friend and patron. Rogers.

LO'VINGLY. adv. [from loving.] Affectionately; with kindness.

The new king, having no less lovingly performed all duties to him dead than alive, pursued on the siege of his unnatural brother, as much for the revenge of his father as for the establishing of his own quiet. Sidney.

It is no great matter to live lovingly with good-natured and meek persons; but he that can do so with the froward and perverse, he only hath true charity. By. Taylor.

LO'VINGNESS.† n. s. [from loving.] Kindness; affection.

Carrying thus in one person the only two bands of good-will, loveliness, and lovingness. Sidney.

VOL. II.

Solyman, by cunning spite
Of Russia's witchcrafts, from his heart had banish'd,
Justice of kings, and lovingness of fathers.
Ld. Brooke, Mustapha.

LOUIS D'OR.† n. s. [French.] A golden coin of France, valued at about twenty shillings; first struck in 1640; and in 1700 rated in England at the value of seventeen shillings. See Leake on English money.

If he is desirous to change a louis d'or, he must consider of it. Spectator.

LOUND.* adj. See LOWND.

To LOUNGE.† v. n. [lunderen, Dutch, to loiter. Dr. Johnson. — We have in our old dictionaries a lunge or lungis, which was used for a lubber, an idle fellow. See Barret, Sherwood, and even Bailey. This is the French longis, which Menage explains by "homme musart, et qui envoyé en quelque endroit met un long temps à revenir;" and thus deduces it from the Lat. longus. Cotgrave's longis is a dreaming, drowsy fellow. Hence lounge, which however is of no great age in our language.] To idle; to live lazily.

We louned about the room among a parcel of two-legged things so much below our notice, as not to be worth our attention, or even our regarding that we had engrossed theirs. Student, i. 143.

LO'UNGER.† n. s. [from lounge.] An idler.
I will roar aloud, and spare not, to the terror of at present a very flourishing society of people called loungers; gentlemen, whose observations are mostly itinerant, and who think they have already too much good sense of their own to be in need of staying at home to read other people's.

Guardian, No. 124.

If she is still followed by the same idle tribe of gaping loungers, I may venture to pronounce her a celebrated Oxford beauty. Student, i. 257.

To LOUR.* v. n. To be clouded; to frown.
See To LOWER. But lour ought to be the orthography.

LO'URDAN.* See LURDAN.

LOUSE. n. s. plural lice. [lur, Saxon; luy, Dutch.] A small animal, of which different species live on the bodies of men, beasts, and perhaps of all living creatures.

There were lice upon man and beast.

Exod. viii. 18.

Frogs, lice, and flies must all his palace fill
With loath'd intrusion. Milton, P. L.

It is beyond even an atheist's credulity and impudence to affirm, that the first men might proceed out of the tumours of trees, as maggots and flies are supposed to do now, or might grow upon trees; or perhaps might be the lice of some prodigious animals whose species is now extinct.

Bentley.

Not that I value the money the fourth part of the skip of a louse, Swift.

To LOUSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To clean from lice.

As for all other good women, that love to do but little work, how handsome it is to louse themselves in the sunshine, they that have been but a while in Ireland can well witness.

Spenser on Ireland.

You sat and lous'd him all the sun-shine day.

Swift.

LO'USEWORT. n. s. The name of a plant, called also rattle and cock's comb.

LO'USILY. adv. [from louse.] In a paltry, mean, and scurvy way.

LO'USINESS.† n. s. [from lousy.] The state of abounding with lice.

Trees (especially fruit-bearers) are infested with the measels—to this commonly succeeds lousiness. Evelyn, ii. 7. 6.

LO'USY.† adj. [from louse.]

1. Swarming with lice; over-run with lice
Let him be daub'd with lace, live high, and
whore,
Sometimes be lousy, but be never poor.

Dryden, Juv.

Sweet-briar and gooseberry are only lousy in dry times, or very hot places.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. Mean; low born; bred on the dung-
hill.

I pray you now remembrance on the lousy
knave mine host.

A lousy knave, to have his gibes and his mockeries. Shakespeare.

3. Mean, contemptible, applied to things.

A title it is mete for soche lowsye larning as this is. Bale, Yet a Course, &c. fol. 15.

LOUT.† n. s. [Joet, Teut. Lye, and Dr. Johnson. — The past participle of to low; lowed; low'd, low't, t for d; the lout is a lowed person. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 345, 346. — So Spelman and Junius considered the Saxon, hlutan, to bow, as the origin of this substantive, from the homage or obeisance required by the superior from an inferiour. But the derivation of our word is much more probably, as Dr. Jamieson has also noticed, from the Germ. leute, common people, a servant; Sax. leob.] A mean awkward fellow; a bumpkin; a clown.

Pamela, whose noble heart doth disdain, that the trust of her virtue is reposed in such a lout's hands, had yet, to shew an obedience, taken on shepherdish apparel. Sidney.

This lout, as he exceeds our lords, the odds is, that we scarce are men, and you are gods.
Shakespeare.

I have need of such a youth,
That can with some discretion do my business;
For 'tis no trusting to yon foolish lout. Shakspr.
Thus wail'd the louts in melancholy strain.
Gay, Past.

To LOUT.† v. n. [hlutan, Sax. to bend; luta, Su. Goth. But Mr. Tooke considers it to be nothing more than the past participle of to low; "to do, or to bear one's self, as the lowed person, i. e. the lout, does."] To pay obeisance; to bend; to bow; to stoop; to submit. Not obsolete, as Dr. Johnson asserts; being yet used in the north of England.

I serve, I bow, I looke, I loute,
Myn eie foloweth hir aboute.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

So louted he unto his lord. Spenser, Shep. Cal.
He fair the knight saluted, louting low,
Who fair him quitted, as that courteous was.

Spenser, F. Q.

Under the sand-bag he was seen,
Louting low, like a for'ster green. B. Jonson.
The palmer, grey with age, with countenance
louting low,

His head ev'n to the earth before the king did bow.

Drayton.

To LOUT.† v. a. This word seems in Shakspeare to signify, to overpower.
Dr. Johnson. — It does; and is counted nanced by the following passage, which has escaped the notice of the commentators; where it evidently means to subject.

For few there were that were so much redoubted,
Whom double fortune lifted up and louted.
Mir. for Mag. p. 303.

I am louted by a traitor villain,
And cannot help the noble chevalier.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

LO'UTISH. adj. [from lout.] Clownish; bumpkin.

This loutish clown is such, that you never saw so ill-favoured a visar; his behaviour such, that he is beyond the degree of ridiculous. Sidney.

LO'UTISHLY.† adv. [from lout.] With the air of a clown; with the gait of a bumpkin; like a lubber. Huloet.

LO'UTISHNESS. * n. s. [from loutish.] Clownishness; behaviour of a bumpkin.

Incivility and rusticity is not suttishness, except it be accompanied with lurdan-like loutishness.

World of Wonders, (1608.) p. 24.

LO'UVER. * n. s. [from l'ouvert, French, an opening.] An opening for the smoke to go out at in the roof of a cottage. In the north of England, an opening at the top of a dove-cote. Written also lover and loover. See Barret's Aliv. 1580.

But darkness dred and daily night did hover
Through all the inner parte wherein they dwelt,
Ne lightened was with window, nor with lover,
But with continuall candle light, which delt
A doubtful sense of things.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. x. 42.

An envious man having caught his neighbour's pigeons in a net, plucked off their tails, and let them go; which, though they could fly forward home, yet were soon after found dead in the devocate, famish'd for want of food, as unable to fly up perpendicularly, and so out at the lover.

Fuller's Worthies in Northamptonshire.

The ancient manner of building in Cornwall was, to set hearths in the midst of rooms for chimneys, which vented the smoke at a lover in the top.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

LOW.† adj. [lau, Dan. lo, Icel. laeg, Dutch; lag, Su. Goth. from the Goth. ligan, to lie, according to some.]

1. Not high.

Their wandering course now high, now low,
then hid,

Progressive retrograde. Milton, P. L.

2. Not rising far upwards.

It became a spreading vine of low stature.
Ezek. xvii. 6.

3. Not elevated in place or local situation.

O mighty Caesar! do'st thou lie so low?
Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils,
Shrunk to this little measure?

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

Equal in days and nights, except to those
Beyond the polar circles; to them day
Had unbrightened shone, while the low sun,
To recompense his distance, in their sight
Had rounded still th' horizon, and not known
Or east or west. Milton, P. L.

Whatever is washed away from them is carried down into the lower grounds and into the sea, and nothing is brought back.

Burnet, Th. of the Earth.

4. Descending far downwards; deep.

The lowest bottom shook of Erebus.

Milton, P. L.

So high as heav'd th' tumid hilts, so low,
Down sunk a hollow bottom, broad and deep,
Capacious bed of waters. Milton, P. L.

His volant touch
Instinct through all proportions low and high,
Fled and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue.

Milton, P. L.

5. Not deep; not swelling high; shallow: used of water.

As two men were walking by the sea-side at low water, they saw an oyster, and both pointed at it together.

L'Estrange.

It is low ebb sure with his accuser, when such peccadillos are put in to swell the charge.

Atterbury.

6. Not of high price: as, corn is low.

7. Not loud; not noisy.

As when an open air we blow,
The breath, though strain'd, sounds flat and low:
But if a trumpet take the blast,
It lifts it high, and makes it last. Waller.

The theatre is so well contrived, that, from the very deep of the stage, the lowest sound may be heard distinctly to the farthest part of the audience; and yet, if you raise your voice as high as you please, there is nothing like an echo to cause confusion. Addison on Italy.

8. In latitudes near to the line.

They take their course either high to the north, or low to the south. Abbot, Desc. of the World.

9. Not rising to so great a sum as some other accumulation of particulars.

Who can imagine, that in sixteen or seventeen hundred years' time, taking the lower chronology, that the earth had then stood, mankind should be propagated no farther than Judea?

Burnet, Th. of the Earth.

10. Late in time: as, the lower empire.

11. Dejected; depressed.

His spirits are so low his voice is drown'd,
He hears as from afar, or in a swoon,
Like the deaf murmur of a distant sound. Dryden.

Though he before had gall and rage,
Which death or conquest must assuage;
He grows dispirited and low,
He hates the fight, and shuns the foe. Prior.

12. Impotent; subdued.

To be worst,
The lowest, most dejected, thing of fortune,
Stands still in esperance. Shakespeare.

Why but to awe,
Why but to keep ye low and ignorant.

Milton, P. L.

To keep them all quiet, he must keep them in greater awe and less splendor; which power he will use to keep them as low as he pleases, and at no more cost than makes for his own pleasure.

Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

13. Not elevated in rank or station; abject.

He woos both high and low, both rich and poor. Shakespeare.

Try in men of low and mean education, who have never elevated their thoughts above the spade. Locke.

14. Dishonourable; betokening meanness of mind: as low tricks.

Yet sometimes nations will decline so low
From virtue, which is reason, that no wrong,
But justice, and some fatal course annexed,
Deprives them of their outward liberty,
Their inward lost. Milton, P. L.

15. Not sublime; not exalted in thought or diction.

He has not so many thoughts that are low and vulgar, but, at the same time, has not so many thoughts that are sublime and noble.

Addison, Spect.

In comparison of these divine writers, the noblest wits of the heathen world are low and dull. Felton on the Classics.

16. Submissive; humble; reverent.

I bring them to receive
From thee their names, and pay their fealty
With low subjection. Milton, P. L.
From the tree her step she turn'd;
But first low reverence done, as to the pow'r
That dwelt within. Milton, P. L.

17. A term applied to certain members of the church, in contradistinction to high. See the 24th sense of HIGH.

LOW. adv.

1. Not aloft; not on high.

There under ebon shades and low-brow'd rocks,
As ragged as thy locks,
In dark Cimberian desert ever dwell. Milton, L'Al.

My eyes no object met
But low-hung clouds, that dip themselves in rain,
To shake their fleeces on the earth again. Dryden.
No luxury found room
In low-roof'd houses, and bare walls of lome. Dryden.

Vast yellow offsprings are the German's pride;
But hotter climates narrower frames obtain,
And low-built bodies are the growth of Spain. Creech.

We wandering go through dreary wastes,
Where round some mouldering tow'r pale ivy
creeps,
And low-brow'd rocks hang nodding o'er the deeps. Pope.

2. Not at a high price; meanly. It is chiefly used in composition.

Proud of their numbers and secure in soul!
The confident and over-lusty French;
Do the low-rated English play at dice? Shakespeare, Hen. V.

This is the prettiest low-born lass, that ever
Ran the greensward; nothing she does or seems,
But smacks of something greater than herself,
Too noble for this place. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.
Whenever I am turned out, my lodge descends upon a low-spirited creeping family. Swift.
Corruption, like a general flood,
Shall deluge all; and avarice creeping on,
Spread like a low-born mist, and blot the sun. Pope.

3. In times approaching towards our own.

In that part of the world which was first inhabited, even as low down as Abraham's time, they wandered with their flocks and herds. Locke.

4. With a depression of the voice.

Lucia, speak low, he is retir'd to rest. Addison, Cato.

5. In a state of subjection.

How comes it that, having been once so low brought, and thoroughly subjected, they afterwards lifted up themselves so strongly again? Spenser on Ireland.

To Low.† v. a. [from the adjective.] To sink; to make low. Probably misprinted for lower. Dr. Johnson.—Swift perhaps chose to adopt the old verb, of which Dr. Johnson has offered no other notice than the last of the following citations; where it is certainly a justifiable word.

Ech that enhaushit him schal be lowid; and he that mekith him schal be highed. Wicliffe, St. Luke, xiv.

He that high hearts loweth
With fyrie darts, which he throweth,
Cupido. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

The value of guineas was lowed from one-and-twenty shillings and sixpence to one-and-twenty shillings. Swift.

To Low. v. n. [hlopan, Saxon. The adjective low, not high, is pronounced low, and would rhyme to no: the verb low, to bellow, low; and is by Dryden rightly rhymed to now.] To bellow as a cow.

Doth the wild ass bray when he has grass? or loweth the ox over his fodder? Job, vi. 5.

Fair to graze his shield, but lo now,
With horns exalted stands, and seems to low.

Dryden.

Had he been born some simple shepherd's heir,
The lowing herd, or fleecy sheep his care. Prior.

LOW.* n. s. [lohe, German.] Flame; fire; heat. Yet used in the north and west of England. See also LOW-BELL.

LOW-BELL.* n. s. [lohe, German; lez, Sax.; or log, Icelandic, a flame, and bell.] A kind of fowling in the night, in which the birds are awakened by a bell, and lured by a flame into a net. Low denotes a flame in Scotland, and some parts of England.

In a still evening, about eight of the clock, when the moon shines not, take your lowbell of a moderate size, that it may be well managed by one man in one hand.

The Experienced Fowler, (1697,) p. 97.
Her beauty, and her drum, to foes
Did cause amazement double:
As timorous larks amazed are
With light, and with a lowbell.

Ballad of St. George for England.

To LOW-BELL.* v. a. [from the noun.] To scare as with a lowbell.

To be thus lowbelled with panic frights, to be thus tremblingly dismayed where there is no place of fear — is a mighty disproportion of men's faculties. Hammond, Works, iv. 579.

LOWE.† The termination of local names.

Lowe, loe, comes from the Saxon hleap, a hill, heap, or barrow; and so the Gothick hlaiw is a monument or barrow.

Gibson's Camden.

Hence Dunber-hlap, Houndslow, canum tumulus; Leob sive Lube-hlap, Ludlow, populi tumulus; Wepe-hlap, Merlow or Marlow, mariscis circumdatus tumulus,
&c. Lye, ed. Manning, in V. hlap.

To LOW-ER. v. a. [from low.]

1. To bring low; to bring down by way of submission.

As our high vessels pass their watery way,
Let all the naval world due homage pay;
With hasty reverence their top-honours lower,
Confessing the asserted power. Prior.

2. To suffer to sink down.

When water issues out of the apertures with more than ordinary rapidity, it bears along with it such particles of loose matter as it met with in its passage through the stone, and it sustains those particles till its motion begins to remit, when by degrees it lowers them, and lets them fall.

Woodward.

3. To lessen; to make less in price or value.

The kingdom will lose by this lowering of interest, if it makes foreigners withdraw any of their money. Locke.

Some people know it is for their advantage to lower their interest. Child on Trade.

To LOW-ER. v. n. To grow less; to fall;
to sink.

The present pleasure,
By revolution low'ring, does become
The opposite of itself. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

To LOW-ER.† v. n. [It is doubtful what was the primitive meaning of this word:
if it was originally applied to the appearance of the sky, it is no more than to grow low, as the sky seems to do in dark weather: if it was first used of the countenance, it may be derived from the Dutch loeren, to look askance: the ow sounds as ou in hour; in the word lower, when it means to grow, or make low, the ow sound as o in more. Dr. Johnson. —

The word is primarily perhaps from the Saxon hleape, the face, the front, the brow; and should be written lowr.
Chaucer uses lowre in the sense of to be discontented.]

1. To appear dark, stormy, and gloomy; to be clouded.

Now is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious summer by this sun of York;
And all the clouds that lowered upon our house,
In the deep bosom of the ocean buried.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

The lowering spring, with lavish rain,
Beats down the slender stem and bearded grain.

Dryden.

When the heavens are filled with clouds, and all nature wears a lowering countenance, I withdraw myself from these uncomfortable scenes. Addison.

The dawn is overcast, the morning lowers,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day.

Addison, Cato.

If on St. Swithin's feast the welkin lowers,
And every penthouse streams with hasty showers,
Twice twenty days shall clouds their fleeces drain.

Gay.

2. To frown; to pout; to look sullen.

There was Diana when Actæon saw her, and one of her foolish nymphs, who weeping, and withal lowering, one might see the workman meant to set forth tears of anger. Sidney.

He mounts the throne, and Juno took her place,
But sullen discontent sat lowering on her face;
Then, impotent of tongue, her silence broke,
Thus turbulent in rattling tone she spoke.

Dryden.

LOW-ER.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Cloudiness; gloominess.

The gladsome sun hath not so many flowers;
Nor Autumn ripen'd grapes; nor Winter's lowers
So many nipping winds.

Summary of Du Bart. (1621), Pref.

2. Cloudiness of look.

Philoelea was jealous for Zelmane, not without so mighty a lower as that face could yield. Sidney.

LOW-ERINGLY.† adv. [from lower.] With cloudiness; gloomily. Sherwood.

LOW-ERMOST. adj. [from low, lower, and most.] Lowest.

Plants have their seminal parts uppermost, living creatures have them lowermost.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

It will also happen, that the same part of the pipe which was now lowermost, will presently become higher, so that the water does ascend by descending; ascending in comparison to the whole instrument, and descending in respect of its several parts. Wilkins, Dædalus.

LOW-ERY.* adj. [from lower.] Threatening to be wet or stormy; overcast. Used in many places. See also Brockett and Moore.

LOW-ING.* n. s. [from To low.] The cry of black cattle.

The lowing of the oxen which I hear.

1 Sam. xv. 14.

The maids of Argos, who, with frantick cries,
And imitated lowings, fill'd the skies. Roscommon.

LOWLAND. n. s. [low and land.] The country that is low in respect of neighbouring hills; the marsh.

What a devil is he?

His errand was to draw the lowland damps,

And noisome vapours, from the foggy fens,
Then breathe the baleful stench with all his force.

Dryden.

No nat'ral cause she found from brooks or bogs,
Or marshy lowlands, to produce the fogs. Dryden.

LOW-LIHOOD.* n. s. [lowly, and hood or head.] Humble or low state. Obsolete.

For who can fain in under lowlihood,
Ne faillith not to findin grace and spede.

Chaucer, Compl. of the Bl. Knight.

LOW-ILY. adv. [from lowly.]

1. Humbly; without pride.

2. Meanly; without dignity.

LOW-LINESS. n. s. [from lowly.]

1. Humility; freedom from pride.

Lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face.

Shakespeare.

The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude;
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Eve

With lowliness majestic, from her seat,
And grace, that won who saw to wish her stay,
Rose. Milton, P. L.

If with a true Christian lowliness of heart, and a devout fervency of soul, we perform them, we shall find, that they will turn to a greater account to us, than all the warlike preparations in which we trust. Atterbury.

2. Meanness; want of dignity; abject depression.

They continued in that lowliness until the division between the two houses of Lancaster and York arose. Spenser.

The lowliness of my fortune has not brought me to flatter vice; it is my duty to give testimony to virtue. Dryden.

LOW-LY.† adj. [from low.]

1. Humble; meek; mild.

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for
I am meek and lowly in heart. St. Matt. xi. 29.

He did bend to us a little, and put his arms abroad: we of our parts saluted him in a very lowly and submissive manner, as looking that from him we should receive sentence of life or death.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

With cries they fill'd the holy fane;
Then thus with lowly voice Ilioneus began.

Dryden.

The heavens are not pure in his sight, and he charges even his angels with folly; with how lowly a reverence must we bow down our souls before so excellent a Being, and adore a Nature so much superiour to our own! Rogers.

2. Mean; wanting dignity; not great.

For from the natal hour distinctive names,
One common right the great and lowly claims.

Pope.

3. Not lofty; not sublime.

For all who read, and reading not disdain,
These rural poems, and their lowly strain,
The name of Varus oft inscrib'd shall see.

Dryden, Silenus.

4. Not elevated in local situation; low.

Where Ufens glides along the lowly lands.

Dryden, Æn.

LOW-LY. adv. [from low.]

1. Not highly; meanly; without grandeur;
without dignity.

I will show myself highly fed, and lowly taught;
I know my business is but to the court. Shakespeare.

'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glistening grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

2. Humbly; meekly; modestly.

Heaven is for thee too high
To know what passes there; be lowly wise;
Think only what concerns thee, and thy being.

Milton, P. L.

Another crowd

Prefer'd the same request, and lowly bow'd. Pope.
LOWN.† n. s. [lūn, Irish; loen, Dutch, a stupid drone. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. H. Tooke calls it, like lout, the past participle of to low. — Dr. Jamieson conjectures the Saxon læpen, Goth. leygands, a traitor, a betrayer, as the origin of our lown.] A scoundrel; a rascal. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says. It still means a heavy, stupid fellow, according to Grose, in the north of England.

King Stephen was a worthy peer,
His breeches cost him but a crown;
He held them sixpence all too dear;
With that he call'd the taylor lown.

Old Song in Shakspeare.

We should soon have both lord and lown, if the peevish baggage would but give way to customers.

Shakspeare, Pericles.

LOWND.* adj. [logn, Icel. lugn, Su. Goth. serenity of the air. See Dr. Jamieson, in V. LOWN.] Calm and mild; out of the wind; under cover or shelter. Used in several parts of the north of England; and sometimes written, like its original, lun.

LOWNESS. n. s. [from low.]

1. Contrariety to height; small distance from the ground.

They know

By the height, the lowness, or the mean, if dearth,
Or foison follow. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

The lowness of the bough where the fruit cometh, maketh the fruit greater, and to ripen better; for you shall even see, in apricots upon a wall, the greatest fruits towards the bottom.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

In Gothic cathedrals, the narrowness of the arch makes it rise in height, the lowness opens it in breadth.

Addison.

2. Meanness of character or condition, whether mental or external.

Nothing could have subdu'd nature
To such a lowness but his unkind daughter.

Shakspeare.

Now I must

To the young man send humble treaties,
And palter in the shift of lowness. Shakspeare.

3. Want of rank; want of dignity.

The name of servants has of old been reckoned to imply a certain meanness of mind, as lowness of condition.

South.

4. Want of sublimity; contrary to loftiness of style or sentiment.

His style is accommodated to his subject, either high or low; if his fault be too much lowness, that of Persius is the hardness of his metaphors.

Dryden.

5. Submissiveness.

The people were in such lowness of obedience as subjects were like to yield, who had lived almost four-and-twenty years under so poltick a king as his father.

Bacon.

6. Depression; dejection

Hence that poverty and lowness of spirit to which a kingdom may be subject, as well as a particular person.

Swift.

LOWSPIRITED. adj. [low and spirit.] Dejected; depressed: not lively; not vivacious; not sprightly.

Severity carried to the highest pitch breaks the mind: and then in the place of a disorderly young fellow, you have a lowsprited mad creature.

Locke.

LOWT.* } See LOUT, and TO LOUT.
TO LOWT.

LOWTHOUGHTED. adj. [low and thought.] Having the thoughts with-held from sublime or heavenly meditations; mean of sentiment; narrow-minded.

Above the smoke and stir of this dim spot,
Which men call earth, and with lowthoughted care,
Strive to keep up a frail and feverish being.

Milton, Comus.

O grace serene! Oh virtue heavenly fair,
Divine oblivion of lowthoughted care!
Fresh blooming hope, gay daughter of the sky,
And faith our early immortality. Pope.

LOXODROMICK. n. s. [λοξος and δρόμος.]

Loxodromick is the art of oblique sailing by the rhomb, which always makes an equal angle with every meridian; that is when you sail, neither directly under the equator, nor under one and the same meridian, but across them: hence the table of rhumbs, or the transverse tables of miles, with the table of longitudes and latitudes, by which the sailor may practically find his course, distance, latitude, or longitude, is called loxodromick.

Harris.

LOYAL.† adj. [loyal, French; lael, old French; legalis, Lat. Roquefort, Gloss. Supplem.]

1. Obedient; true to the prince.

Of Gloster's treachery,

And of the loyal service of his son,
When I inform'd him, then he call'd me sot.

Shakspeare.

The regard of duty in that most loyal nation overcame all other difficulties.

Knolles.

Loyal subjects often seize their prince,

Yet mean his sacred person not the least offence.

Dryden.

2. Faithful in love; true to a lady, or lover.

Hail, wedded love! — by thee

Founded in reason loyal, just, and pure,
Relations dear, and all the charities
Of father, son, and brother, first were known.

Milton, P. L.

There Laodamia with Evadne moves,
Unhappy both, but loyal in their loves.

Dryden, Æn.

LOYALIST. n. s. [from loyal.] One who professes uncommon adherence to his king.

The cedar, by the instigation of the loyalists, fell out with the homebians. Howell, Voc. Forest.

LOYALLY. adv. [from loyal.] With fidelity; with true adherence to a king; with fidelity to a lover.

The circling year I wait, with ampler stores,
And fitter pomp, to hail my native shores;
Then by my realms due homage would be paid,
For wealthy kings are loyally obey'd.

Pope, Odyssey.

LOYALTY. n. s. [loiauté, French.]

1. Firm and faithful adherence to a prince.

Though loyalty, well held, to fools does make
Our faith meer folly; yet he that can endure
To follow with allegiance a fall'n lord,
Does conquer him that did his master conquer.

Shakspeare.

He had never had any veneration for the court,
but only such loyalty to the king as the law required.

Clarendon.

Abdiel, faithful found—
Unshaken, uneduc'd, unterrified,
His loyalty he kept.

Milton, P. L.

For loyalty is still the same,
Whether it win or lose the game;

True as the dial to the sun,
Although it be not shone upon. Hudibras.

2. Fidelity to a lady, or lover.

LOZEL.* See LOSEL.

LOZENGE.† n. s. [lozenge, French. Of unknown etymology. Dr. Johnson. — Morin mentions, from Menage, Scaliger's conjecture of losanges or lausanges being a corruption of lauranges, "à cause de leur ressemblance à une feuille de laurier:" but proposes at the same time a conjecture of his own as to the derivation: "peut-être a-t-on dit losange pour loxangle, comme on dit acutangle, obtusangle. Dans ce cas, il viendrait du Gr. λοξος, oblique, et du Lat. angulus, q. d. angle oblique."] 1. A rhomb.

The best builders resolve upon rectangular squares, as a mean between too few and too many angles; and through the equal inclination of the sides, they are stronger than the rhomb or losenge.

Wotton, Architecture.

2. Lozenge is a form of a medicine made into small pieces, to be held or chewed in the mouth till melted or wasted.

3. A cake of preserved fruit: both these are so denominated from the original form, which was rhomboidal.

4. A four-cornered figure, in heraldry, like a pane of glass in old casements, in which the arms of women are now usually painted.

Ypainted all with amorettes,
And with lozings, and scotchons.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 893.

LO'ZENGED.* adj. [lozengé, Fr.] Having the shape of a lozenge.

Cotgrave.

LO'ZENGY.* adj. In heraldry, having the field or charge covered with lozenges.

LP. a contraction for lordship.

LU. n. s. A game at cards. See LOO.

Ev'n mighty pam who kings and queens o'er-threw,
And mow'd down armies in the fights of lu.

Pope.

LU'BBARD. n. s. [from lubber.] A lazy sturdy fellow.

Yet their wine and their victuals those cur-mudgeon lubbards

Lock up from my sight, in cellars and cupboards.

Swift.

LU'BBER.† n. s. [of this word the best derivation seems to be from lubberd, said by Junius to signify in Danish fat. Dr. Johnson. — Lubber is the same as looby, and lob; Icel. lubboe, "hirsutus et incomptus nebulo." Serenius. Huloet calls a lout "a lowber, or lourdeine, rusticus, tardus, &c." And Minshew combines in one "a lobbe, lubber, lobcocke, and clowne;" giving them the Greek origin of high, λαβητήρ. But See LOB.] A sturdy drone; an idle, fat, bulky losel; a booby.

For tempest and showers deceiveth a many,
And lingering lubbards loose many a penie.

Tusser, Hesh.

These chase the smaller shoals of fish from the main sea into the heavens, leaping up and down, puffing like a fat lubber out of breath.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder,
As if his feet were on brave Hector's breast,
And great Troy shrinking.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.
A notable lubber thou reportest him to be.

Shakespeare.

Tell how the drudging goblin sweat;
His shadowy flail bath thresh'd the corn,
That ten day labourers could not end;
Then lies him down the lubber fiend?

Milton, L'Al.

Venetians do not more uncouthly ride,
Than did your lubber state mankind bestide.

Dryden.

How can you name that superannuated lubber?

Congreve.

LUBBERLY.† adj. [from lubber.] Lazy and bulky; awkward.

I came at Eton to marry Mrs. Anne Page;
and she's a great lubberly boy.
Not such idle, lubberly sots, as later times
pestered the world withal.

Seldon on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 11.
Those modest, lubberly boys, who seem to want spirit, become at length more shining men; and at school generally go through their business with more ease to themselves, and more satisfaction to their instructors.

Goldsmith, Ess. 7.

LUBBERLY. adv. Awkwardly; clumsily.

Merry Andrew on the low rope copies lubberly
the same tricks which his master is so dexterously performing on the high.

Dryden.

TO LUBRICATE.† v. a. [from lubricus,
Latin.] To make smooth or slippery;
to smoothe.

Cockeram.

There are aliments which, besides this lubricat- ing quality, stimulate in a small degree.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

The patient is relieved by the mucilaginous and saponaceous remedies, some of which lubricate, and others both lubricate and stimulate.

Sharp, Surgery.

Rest,

Man's rich restorative; his balmy bath,
That supplies, lubricates, and keeps in play,
The various movements of this nice machine;
Which asks such frequent periods of repair.

Young, N. Th. 9.

LUBRICATOR.* n. s. [from To lubricate.]
That which lubricates.

Water, when simple, is insipid, inodorous, colourless and smooth; it is found, when not cold, to be a great resolver of spasms, and lubricator of the fibres: this power it probably owes to its smoothness.

Burke on the Subl. and Beaut. P. iv. § 21.

TO LUBRICATE. v. a. [from lubricus,
Latin.] To smooth; to make slippery.

LUBRICITY.† n. s. [from lubricus, Lat.
lubricité, French.]

1. Slipperiness; smoothness of surface.

Bullockar.

2. Aptness to glide over any part, or to facilitate motion.

Both the ingredients are of a lubricating nature; the mucilage adds to the lubricity of the oil, and the oil preserves the mucilage from inspissation.

Ray on Creation.

3. Uncertainty; slipperiness; instability.

It is strange to consider the lubricity of popular favour. Wotton, Lett. (in 1628.) Rem. p. 444.
The manifold impossibilities and lubricities of matter cannot have the same conveniences in any modification.

More.

He that enjoyed crowns and knew their worth, excepted them not out of the charge of universal vanity; and yet the politician is not discouraged at the inconstancy of human affairs, and the lubricity of his subject.

Glanville, Apol.

A state of tranquillity is never to be attained but by keeping perpetually in our thoughts the certainty of death, and the lubricity of fortune.

L'Estrange.

4. Wantonness; lewdness.

[They] incline and allure men to lubricity and debauched courses, Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 357.

From the lechery of these fauns, he thinks that satire is derived from them, as if wantonness and lubricity were essential to that poem which ought in all to be avoided.

Dryden.

LUBRIC. adj. [from lubricus, Latin.]

1. Slippery; smooth on the surface.

A through

Of short thick sobs, whose thundering volleys float,
And roll themselves over her lubric throat,
In panting murmurs. Crashaw, Del. of the Muses.

2. Uncertain; unsteady.

I will deduce him from his cradle through the deep and lubric waves of state, till he is swallowed in the gulf of fatality.

Wotton, Life of D. of Buckingham.

3. Wanton; lewd. [from lubrique, French.]

Why were we hurried down
This lubric and adulterate age;
Nay, added fat pollutions of our own,
To increase the steaming ordures of the stage?

Dryden.

LUBRICOUS. adj. [from lubricus, Latin.]

1. Slippery; smooth.

The parts of water being voluble and lubricous as well as fine, it easily insinuates itself into the tubes of vegetables, and by that means introduces into them the matter it bears along with it.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Uncertain.

The judgement being the leading power, if it be stored with lubricous opinions instead of clearly conceived truths, and peremptorily resolved in them, the practice will be as irregular as the conceptions.

Glanville, Sceptis.

LUBRIFICATION. n. s. [from lubricus, and fio,
Latin.] The act of smoothing.

A twofold liquor is prepared for the inunction and lubrication of the heads of the bones; an oily one, furnished by the marrow; a mucilaginous, supplied by certain glands seated in the articula-
tions.

Ray on Creation.

LUBRIFICATION. n. s. [from lubricus and facio, Lat.] The act of lubricating or smooth-
ing.

The cause is lubrication and relaxation, as in medicines emollient, such as milk, honey, and mallows.

Bacon.

LUCE.† n. s. [from lucius, Lat. à lucis; Gr. quia
est quasi lupus inter pisces. Vossius.
Hence also the French lucel, lucet, a young pike. Luce is very old in our language.] A pike full grown.

Many a breme, and many a luce in stew.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

The mighty luce, or pike, is taken to be the tyrant, as the salmon is the king, of the fresh waters.

Walton, Angler.

They give the dozen white luces in their coat.

Shakespeare.

LUCENT. adj. [from lucens, Latin.] Shining;
bright; splendid.

I meant the day-star should not brighter rise,
Nor lend like influence from his lucens seat.

B. Jonson, Epig. 76.

A spot like which perhaps
Astronomer in the sun's lucens orb,
Through his glaz'd optick tube yet never saw.

Milton, P. L.

LUCERNE.* n. s. [from luzerne, Span. medica, in Latin; so called because it came originally from Media.] A plant remarkable for quick growth; bearing a purplish flower; the hay of which is eminent for the fattening of cattle.

Harte has been much out of order these last three or four months, but is not the less intent upon sowing his lucerne.

Ld. Chesterfield.

LUCID. adj. [from lucidus, Latin; lucide,
French.]

1. Shining; bright; glittering.

Over his lucid arms

A military vest of purple flow'd;

Livelier than Melibean.

Milton, P. L.

It contracts it, preserving the eye from being injured by too vehement and lucid an object, and again, dilates it for the apprehending objects more remote in a fainter light.

Ray.

If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, he held at the distance of about a quarter of an inch, or half an inch, from that part of the glass where it is most in motion, the electric vapour which is excited by the friction of the glass against the hand, will, by dashing against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation as to emit light, and make the white paper, cloth, or finger, appear lucid, like a glow-worm.

Newton.

The pearly shell its lucid globe unfold,
And Phæbus warm the ripening ore to gold.

Pope.

2. Pellucid; transparent.

On the fertile banks

Of Abbana and Pharphar, lucid streams.

Milton, P. L.

On the transparent side of a globe, half silver and half of a transparent metal, we saw certain strange figures circularly drawn, and thought we could touch them, till we found our fingers stopped by that lucid substance.

Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

3. Bright with the radiance of intellect;
not darkened with madness.

The long dissensions of the two houses, which,
although they had had lucid intervals and happy pauses, yet they did ever hang over the kingdom, ready to break forth.

Bacon.

Some beams of wit on other souls may fall,
Strike through, and make a lucid interval;
But Shadwell's genuine night admits no ray,
His rising fogs prevail upon the day.

Dryden.

I believed him in a lucid interval, and desired
he would please to let me see his book.

Tatler.

A few sensual and voluptuous persons, may,
for a season, eclipse this native light of the soul;
but can never so wholly smother and extinguish it, but that, at some lucid intervals, it will recover itself again, and shine forth to the conviction of their conscience.

Bentley.

LUCIDITY.† n. s. [from lucid.] Splen-dour; brightness.

Dict.

What we call wit shows itself with such a pointed effulgence in the eyes, that there is scarce a man living, whose portion of it is not determinable from their natural lucidity.

Philos. Lett. on Physiognomy, (1751.) p. 230.

LUCIDNESS.* n. s. [from lucid.] Transparency; clearness.

The spaciousness of their souls that are extended in perfect contemplation, is aptly figured by that property of the sea; their equanimity and clearness, by the smoothness and lucidity of glass.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648.) p. 385.

LUCIFERIAN.* adj. [from Lucifer, a name of the devil.] Devilish. A word formerly much used; now obsolete.

Hence men of art deprave each other's skill,
Sith it they view with luciferian eyes.

Danvers, Wit's Pilgrimage, sign. P. 3.

What luciferian pride in him, a man of sin, to admit, yea to delight in, the same!

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, (1616.) p. 171.

That all that luciferian exorcism be blotted out: — that very "luciferina," or devilish exorcism is reprinted.

Bp. Taylor, Diss. against Popery, ch. 2. § 10.

It savours too much of the luciferian presumption.

Ld. North, Light to Paradise, p. 90.

LUCIFEROUS. adj. [lucifer, Lat.] Giving light; affording means of discovery.

The experiment is not ignoble, and luciferous enough, as shewing a new way to produce a volatile salt.

Boyle.

LUCIFEROUSLY.* adv. [from luciferous.] So as to discover.

Embrace not the opacous and blind side of opinions, but that which looks most luciferously or influentially unto goodness.

Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 3.

LUCIFICK. adj. [lux and facio, Latin.] Making light; producing light.

When made to converge, and so mixed together; though their lucifick motion be continued, yet by interfering, that equal motion, which is the colorific, is interrupted.

Crew.

LUCIFORM.* adj. [lux, lucis, Latin, and form.] Having the nature of light.

Plato speaketh of the mind or soul as a driver that guides and governs a chariot, which is, not unfitted, styled adyoebes, a luciform ethereal vehicle, or dyana, terms expressive of the purity, lightness, subtilty, and mobility, of that fine celestial nature, in which the soul immediately resides and operates.

Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 171.

LUCK.† n. s. [geluck, Dutch. Junius, and Dr. Johnson. — Luck, good or bad, is merely the past participle of the Saxon, læccan, to catch; and means something, any thing, caught. Instead of saying, that a person has had good luck; it is not uncommon to say, he has had a good catch. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 357. — Such an expression may be still used among the vulgar, and the reasoning upon this deduction is plausible. But the derivation from geluck, which is from the old verb ghelucken, to prosper, is not to be hastily dismissed. Wachter thus derives the Germ. gluck, good fortune, (under which word he notices our luck, the Swed. lycka, and the Sax. inf. luck, from gleichen, to please. "Hoc sanè primum et præcipuum est," he well observes, "in rebus secundis, ut nobis placeant. Quid enim refert, qualis sit status noster, si nobis videtur malus?" In like manner, Ihre derives the Su. Goth. lyckas, to prosper, from lika, to please. Ungluck, is the Germ. for bad luck. See also Killan in V. Ghe-luck.]

1. Chance; accident; fortune; hap; casual event.

He forc'd his neck into a noose,
To shew his play at fast and loose;
And when he chanc'd t'escape, mistook
For art and subtilty, his luck.

Hudibras.

Some such method may be found by human industry or luck, by which compound bodies may be resolved into other substances than they are divided into by the fire.

Boyle.

2. Fortune, good or bad.

Glad of such luck the luckless lucky maid,
A long time with that savage people staid,
To gather breath in many miseries. Spenser, F. Q.
Farewell, good luck go with thee, Shakespeare.

I did demand what news from Shrewsbury.

He told me, that rebellion had ill luck,

And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold.

Shakespeare.

That part of mankind who have had the justice, or the luck, to pass, in common opinion, for the wisest, have followed a very different scent.

Temple.

Such, how highly soever they may have the luck to be thought of, are far from being Israelites indeed.

South.

The guests are found too numerous for the treat, But all, it seems, who had the luck to eat,
Swear they ne'er tasted more delicious meat.

Tate, Juv.

LUCKILY. adv. [from lucky.] Fortunately; by good hap.

It is the pencil thrown luckily full upon the horse's mouth, to express the foam, which the painter with all his skill could not form.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

It happens luckily for the establishment of a new race of kings upon the British throne, that the first of this royal line has all high qualifications.

Addison.

LUCKINESS. n. s. [from lucky.] Good fortune; good hap; casual happiness.

He who sometimes lights on truth, is in the right but by chance; and I know not whether the luckiness of the accident will excuse the irregularity of his proceeding.

Locke.

LUCKLESS. adj. [from luck.] Unfortunate; unhappy.

Glad of such luck, the luckless lucky maid,
A long time with that savage people staid,
To gather breath in many miseries. Spenser, F. Q.
Never shall my thoughts be base,
Though luckless, yet without disgrace. Suckling.
What else but his immoderate lust of power,
Pray'r's made and granted in a luckless hour?

Dryden.

LUCKY. adj. [from luck; geluckig, Dutch.] Fortunate; happy by chance.

But I more fearful, or more lucky wight,
Dismay'd with that deformed, dismal sight,
Fled fast away. Spenser, F. Q.
Perhaps some arm more lucky than the rest,
May reach his heart, and free the world from bondage.

Addison.

LUCRATIVE. adj. [lucratus, French; lucratus, Lat.] Gainful; profitable; bringing money.

The trade of merchandize being the most lucrative, may bear usury at a good rate; other contracts not so.

Bacon.

The disposition of Ulysses inclined him to pursue the more dangerous way of living by war, than the more lucrative method of life by agriculture.

Broome.

LUCRE. n. s. [lucrum, Latin.] Gain; profit; pecuniary advantage. In an ill sense.

Malice and lucre in them

Have laid this woe here, Shakespeare, Cymb.

They all the sacred mysteries of Heaven
To their own vile advantages shall turn,
Of lucre and ambition. Milton, P. L.

A soul supreme in each hard instance tried,
Above all pain, all anger, and all pride,
The rage of power, the blast of publick breath,
The lust of lucre, and the dread of death. Pope.

TO LUCRE.* v. n. [from the noun.] To have a desire of pecuniary advantage. Not in use.

[They] frame themselves to every change, thereby to satisfy their lucrative lust.

Anderson, Expos. on Benedict. (1579.) fol. 75. b.

LUCRIFEROUS.† adj. [lucrum and fero, Latin.] Gainful; profitable.

Opening treasures with the key of luciferous inventions.

Sir W. Petty, Adv. to Hartlib, (1648,) p. 23.
Silver was afterwards separated from the gold, but in so small a quantity, that the experiment, the cost and pains considered, was not luciferous.

Boyle.

LUCRIFICK. adj. [lucrum and facio, Lat.] Producing gain.

LUCATION.† n. s. [lucation, Fr. Cotgrave; from luctor, Latin.] Struggle; effort; contest.

Cockeram.

This act requires the intention of our mine, thoughtfulness, and a diligent lucation and contention with ourselves.

Farinold, Serm. (1657,) p. 418.

LUCUAL.* adj. [lucius, Latin, mourning.] Lamentable. Not in use.

The turbulent and lucual times, which were towards the end and period of his life and reign.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. Rich. III. p. 41.

TO LUCUBRATE.† v. n. [lucubror, Lat.] To watch; to study or work by candle-light.

Cockeram.

LUCUBRATION.† n. s. [lucubratio, Latin.] Study by candle-light; nocturnal study; any thing composed by night.

Life is, since he is gone,
But a nocturnal lucubration.

Cleveland, Eleg. on Abp. Laud.

Thy lucubrations have been perused by several of our friends.

Talier.

LUCUBRATORY. adj. [lucubratorius, from lucubror, Lat.] Composed by candle-light.

You must have a dish of coffee, and a solitary candle at your side, to write an epistle lucubratory to your friend.

Pope.

LUCULENT.* adj. [luculentus, Latin.]

1. Clear; transparent; lucid. This word is perhaps not used in this sense by any other writer. Dr. Johnson. — It should seem, from the enlarged edition of Bullokar's Expositor in 1656, that this was anciently a received sense, luculent being defined "bright, clear, fair, beautiful, famous."

And luculent along

The purer rivers flow. Thomson, Winter.

2. Certain; evident.

They are against the obstinate incredulity of the Jews, the most luculent testimonies that the Christian religion hath.

Hooker.

A luculent oration he made of the miseries of this, and happiness of that other life.

Durton, Anat. of Mel. p. 218.

LUDIBRIOUS.* adj. [ludibriosus, Latin.] Ridiculous.

Needless it shall be to refute this fancy, which falleth to the ground of itself as a ludibrious folly of the man.

Tooker, Fabr. of the Church, (1604,) p. 119.

LUDICROUS. adj. [ludicer, Latin.] Burlesque; merry; sportive; exciting laughter.

Plutarch quotes this instance of Homer's judgement, in closing a ludicrous scene with decency and instruction.

Broome.

LUDICROUSLY.† adv. [from ludicrous.] Sportively; in burlesque; in a manner that may excite laughter.

To see the buffoonery or action correspond so ludicrously with the music.

Drummond, Trav. p. 52.

Cicero ludicrously describes Cato as endeavouring to act in the commonwealth upon the school paradoxes, which exercised the wits of the junior students in the Stoick philosophy. Burke.

LU'DICROUSNESS.† n. s. [from ludicrous.] Burlesque; sportiveness; merry cast or manner; ridiculousness.

The ludicrousness and fugitiveness of our wanton reason might otherwise find out many starting-holes. More, Ant. against Idolatry, ch. 1.

Boileau used to hint among his intimate friends, that he thought the reason why Homer sometimes introduced his gods and goddesses in scenes of ludicrousness, was to soften the general severity of his poem, and to relieve the reader from the perpetual prospect of the slaughters and deaths with which the Iliad abounded.

Dr. Warton on Dryden's Transl. of Iliad.

LUDIFICATION. n. s. [ludificor, Lat.] The act of mocking, or making sport with another. Dict.

LUDIFICATORY.* adj. [ludificatoire, Fr.] Cotgrave; from ludificor, Lat.] Mocking; making sport; trifling.

In the sacraments of the church there is nothing empty or vain, nothing ludificatory, but all thoroughly true. Barrow, iii. 39.

LUFF.† n. s. [lofa, Gothick.] The palm of the hand, used in the north of England, and in Scotland.

To LUFF.† v. n. [or loof.] To keep close to the wind. Sea term.

Contract your swelling sails, and luff to wind.

Dryden.

The ship, luffing too near the great island, on a sudden stuck fast on a rock.

Randolph's Isl. in the Archipelago, p. 61.

To LUG.† v. a. [aluccan, Saxon, to pull; loga, Swedish, the hollow of the hand. Dr. Johnson.—It is more probably the Su. Goth. lugga, to pull or drag by the hair; zeluggian, Sax. to pull, to pluck.]

1. To hale or drag; to pull with rugged violence.

You gods! why this

Will lug your priests and servants from your sides. Shakespeare.

Thy bear is safe, and out of peril,

Though lugg'd indeed, and wounded very ill. Hudibras.

When savage bears agree with bears,

Shall secret ones lug saints by th' ears? Hudibras.

See him drag his feeble legs about

Like hounds ill coupled; Jowler lugs him still

Through hedges. Dryden.

Whose pleasure is to see a trumpet tear

A cynick's beard, and lug him by the hair. Dryd.

Either every single animal spirit must convey a whole representation, or else they must divide the image amongst them, and so lug off every one his share. Collier.

2. To pull or shake by the ears. Barret's Alv. 1580. So in the north of England, "to pull by the ears: I'll lug thee, if thou dost so." Pegge.

I'm as melancholy as gib cat or a lugg'd bear. Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

3. To LUG out. To draw a sword, in burlesque language.

But buff and beltmen never know these cares,
No time, nor trick of law, their action bars;
They will be heard, or they lug out and cut. Dryden.

To LUG. v. n. To drag; to come heavily: perhaps only misprinted for lags.

My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,

Like fowl in air, too damp, and lugs along,

As if she were a body in a body. Dryden.

LUG.† n. s.

1. A kind of small fish.

They feed on salt unmerchanted pilchards,
tag worms, lugs, and little crabs.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

2. The ear. Dr. Johnson confines the use of this word to Scotland, without any example; but it is certainly common enough in England. [from the verb lug.]

There's no man colour smells, or sees a sound,
Nor sucks the labour of the honey-bee
With'th' hungry lugs, nor binds a gaping wound
With'th' slippery eye-balls: every faculty
And object have their due analogy.

More, Life of the Soul, ii. 97.

With hair in character, and lugs in text.

Cleaveland.

3. A land measure; a pole or perch.

That ample pit, yet far renown'd
For the large leap which Debon did compel
Coulin to make, being eight lugs of ground.

Spenser, F. Q.

LU'GGAGE. n. s. [from lug.] Any thing cumbersome and unwieldy that is to be carried away; any thing of more weight than value.

Come bring your luggage nobly on your back. Shakespeare.

What do you mean

To doat thus on such luggage? Shaks. Tempest.

Think not thou to find me slack, or need
Thy politick maxims, or that cumbersome

Luggage of war there shewn me. Milton, P. R.

How durst thou with that sullen luggage

O' th' self, old ir'n, and other luggage,

To oppose thy lumber against us? Hudibras.

The mind of man is too tight to bear much certainty among the ruffling winds of passion and opinion; and if the luggage be prized equally with the jewels, none will be cast out till all be shipwrecked. Glanville.

A lively faith will bear aloft the mind,
And leave the luggage of good works behind.

Dryden.

I am gathering up my luggage, and preparing for my journey. Swift to Pope.

LU'GSAIL.* n. s. A square sail hoisted occasionally on a yard which hangs nearly at right angles with the mast. Ash.

LUGUBRIOUS.† adj. [lugubre, French; lugubris, Lat.] Mournful; sorrowful.

To act no passionate, lugubrious, tragical part, whatever secular provocation cross us on the stage.

Hammond, Works, iv. 546.

A demure, or rather a lugubrious look, a whining tone, makes up the sum of many men's humiliations. Decay of Chr. Piety.

Most of them [pictures] represent devout lugubrious events.

Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 41.

LUKE, or LEUKE. adj. [plæc, Saxon.] Not fully hot. See LUKEWARM.

Prompt. Parv.

LU'KENESS, or LE'UKENESS. n. s. [from luke.] Moderate warmth. Ort. Vocab.

LU'KEWARM.† adj. [The original of this word is doubted. Warmth, in Sax. is hleod; in old Frisick hlij; in Dutch lievte; whence probably our luke, to which warm may be added, to determine, by the first word, the force of the second; as we say, boiling hot. Dr. Johnson.—It is from the Saxon, plæc, warm: which was also pleonastically accompanied with papm, viz. plæc-papm: whence: our luke-warm. See Lye, edit. Manning. See also Lew.]

1. Moderately or mildly warm; so warm as to give only a pleasing sensation.

Water is not sodeynly by the fyre made hote to the utermost, but fyrste cometh bytwene a lytell warnenes, as we myght saye luke warme, whiche is neyther very hote, nor very colde, but in a meane bytwene both. Bp. Fisher, Ps. p. 49.

A dreary corse, whose life away did pass,
All wallow'd in his own, yet lukewarm blood,
That from his wound yet welled fresh alas!

Spenser, F. Q.

May you a better feast never behold,
You knot of moud friends; smoke and lukewarm water

Is your perfection. Shakespeare, Timon.
Bathing the body in lukewarm water is of great advantage to temperate hot and sharp humours.

Wiseman, Surgery.

Whence is it but from this attractive power that water, which alone distills with a gentle lukewarm heat, will not distil from salt of tartar without a great heat? Newton, Opticks.

2. Indifferent; not ardent; not zealous.

If some few continue steadfast, it an obedience so lukewarm and languishing, that it merits not the name of passion. Dryden.

This sober conduct is a mighty virtue
In lukewarm patriots. Addison, Cato.

LU'KEWARMLY.† adv. [from the adjective.]

1. With moderate warmth. Sherwood.

2. With indifference.

LU'KEWARMNESS. n. s. [from lukewarm.]

1. Moderate or pleasing heat.

2. Indifference; want of ardour.

Some kind of zeal counts all merciful moderation lukewarmness. King Charles.

The defect of zeal is lukewarmness, or coldness in religion; the excess is inordinate heat and spiritual fury. Sprat.

Go dry your chaff and stubble, give fire to the zeal of your faction, and reproach them with lukewarmness. Swift.

To LULL.† v. a. [hulla, Su. Goth. lallo, Lat. See also LULLABY.]

1. To compose to sleep by a pleasing sound; to draw to sleep. This is the oldest sense of the word.

In her barme this litle child she laid,
With ful sad face, and gan the child to blisse,
And lulled it, and after gan it kisse.

Chaucer, Cl. Tale.

There trickled softly down

A gentle stream, whose murmuring wave did play
Amongst the pumy stones, and made a sound

To lull him soft asleep, that by it lay.

Spenser, F. Q.

Such sweet compulsion doth in music lie,
To lull the daughters of necessity. Milton, Arcades.

These, lull'd by nightingales, embracing slept.

Milton, P. L.

In England we very frequently see people lulled asleep with solid and elaborate discourses of piety, who would be warned and transported out of themselves by the bellowsings and distortions of enthusiasm. Addison, Spect. No. 407.

2. To compose; to quiet; to put to rest.

Fortune false doth lull them in her lap.

Mir. for Mag. p. 321.

To find a foe it shall not be his hap,
And peace shall lull him in her flowery lap.

Milton, Vac. Ex.

No more these scenes my meditations aid,
Or lull to rest the visionary maid.

Pope.

By the vocal words and waters lull'd,
And lost in lonely musing in a dream.

Thomson, Spring.

LULL.* n. s. [from the verb.] Power or quality of soothing.

My lord, your stay was long, and yonder lu!
Of falling waters tempted me to rest.

Young, Revenge.

LU'LLABY.† n. s. [Lallus, Lat. "Quem nutricum fuisse deum contendit Turnebus." From lull: it is observable, that the nurses call sleep by by; lullaby is therefore lull to sleep. Dr. Johnson.— "Dr. Johnson is probably mistaken in supposing that the nurses' by signifies sleep, otherwise than as a contraction of lullaby. It is to be wished, that Mr. Holt White had favoured us with some proof that to lull originally signified to sleep, and that its present sense, to compose to sleep by a pleasing sound, is but a secondary one, retained after the primitive import had become obsolete. The same ingenious critic proceeds to state that by means house, and therefore lullaby is to go to house or cradle. There is so much plausibility in this conjecture, that it is almost a pity to be obliged to dissent from it. Though it cannot be disputed that by signifies a dwelling, it is presumed that this sense is as unconnected with the word in question as Dr. Johnson's sleep. It would be a hopeless task to trace the origin of the northern verb to lull, which means to sing gently; but it is evidently connected with the Gr. λαλεω, to speak, or λαληη, the sound made by the beach at sea. Thus much is certain, that the Roman nurses used the word lalla to quiet their children, and feigned a deity called Lallus, whom they invoked on that occasion: the lullaby, or tune itself, was called by the same name. As lallare meant to sing lalla, to lull might in like manner denote the singing of the nurse's lullaby to induce the child to sleep.—In an old ballad, printed by Mr. Ritson, Anc. Songs, p. 198., the burden is lully, lullaby, lullyby, sweete baby; from which it seems probable, that lullaby is only a comparatively modern contraction of lully baby, the first word being the legitimate offspring of the Rom. lalla." Douce. Illustr. of Shakspeare, vol. 2. p. 111.] A song to still babes.

Only that noise heavens' rolling circles keast,
Sung lullaby, to bring the world to rest. Fairfax.
Philomel, with melody,
Sing in your sweet lullaby;
Lulla, lulla, lullaby; lulla, lulla, lullaby. Shakspeare.
If you will let your lady know I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may make my bounty further.—Marry, Sir, lullaby to your bounty till I come again. Shakspeare.
Whiles hounds, and horns, and sweet melodious birds,

Be unto us, as is a nurse's song
Of lullaby, to bring her babe to sleep.

Titus Andronicus.
Drinking is the lullaby used by nurses to still crying children. Locke on Education.

LU'LLER.* n. s. [from lull.] A dandler; one who fondles children.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

LUM.* n. s. The chimney of a cottage. Northumberland. Pegge. Used in Yorkshire also, and in Scotland; and is supposed by Sibbald to be from the Sax. leom, light, "scarcely any other light being admitted, excepting through this hole in the roof." But Dr. Jamieson refers it to the Welsh lumon, a chimney, "which Owen deduces from lum, that which shoots up, or ends, in a point."

LUMBA'GO. n. s. [lumbi, Latin, the loins.]

Lumbagos are pains very troublesome about the loins, and small of the back, such as precede ague fits and fevers: they are most commonly from fullness and acrimony, in common with a disposition to yawnings, shudderings, and erratic pains in other parts, and go off with evacuation, generally by sweat, and other critical discharges of fevers.

Quincy.

LU'MBAL.* } adj. [lumbaris, Lat. from lum-
LU'MBAR. } bi, the loins.] In anatomy, pertaining to the loins.

LU'MBER.† n. s. [loma, zeloma, Saxon, household-stuff; lommering, the dirt of an house, Dutch.]

1. Any thing useless or cumbersome; any thing of more bulk than value; old stuff.

Cockeram.

The very bed was violated
By the coarse hands of filthy dungeon villains,
And thrown amongst the common lumber. Olway.
One son at home

Concerns thee more than many guests to come.
If to some useful art he be not bred,
He grows mere lumber, and is worse than dead.

Dryden.

Thy neighbour has remov'd his wretched store,
Few hands will rid the lumber of the poor.

Dryden, Juv.

If God intended not the precise use of every single atom, that atom had been no better than a piece of lumber.

Grew.

The poring scholiasts mark;
Wits, who, like owls, see only in the dark;
A lumber-house of books in every head.

Pope, Dunciad.

2. Harm; mischief. Lancashire. Pegge.
To LU'MBER.† v. a. [from the noun.] To heap like useless goods irregularly.

Fallow ground is (usually) an indigested thicket, lumbered all over with weeds, and briars, and thorns, and thistles. Sedgewick, Sermon, (1642,) p. 5.

In Rollo we must have so much stuff lumbered together, that not the least beauty of tragedy can appear.

Rymers.

To LU'MBER. v. n. To move heavily, as burthened with his own bulk.

First let them run at large,
Nor lumber o'er the meads, nor cross the wood.

Dryden.

LU'MBRICAL.* adj. [from lumbricus, Lat. a worm.] In anatomy, denoting muscles of the hands and feet, which, on account of their smallness and figure, have derived this name of resemblance to worms.

LU'MINARY. n. s. [luminare, Latin, luminare, Fr.]

1. Any body which gives light.

The great luminary

Dispenses light from far. Milton, P. L.

2. Any thing which gives intelligence.

Sir John Graham, I know not upon what luminaries he espied in his face, dissuaded him from marriage.

Wotton.

3. Any one that instructs mankind.

The circulation of the blood, and the weight and spring of the air, had been reserved for a late happy discovery by two great luminaries of this island.

Benley.

To LU'MINATE. v. a. [luminare, Lat.] To give light to; to illuminate.

Cockeram.

LUMINA'TION. n. s. [from lumen.] Emission of light.

Dict.

To LU'MINE. v. a. [luminare, Lat.] To illuminate; to lighten intellectually.

With admiration of their passing light,
Blinding the eyes, and luminare the spright.

Spenser, Hymn of Heavenly Love.

LU'MINOUS. adj. [lumineux, Fr.]

1. Shining; emitting light.

Fire burneth wood, making it first luminous, then black and brittle, and lastly, broken and incinerate.

Bacon.

Its first convex divides

The luminous inferior orbs inclos'd,
From chaos.

Milton, P. L.

How came the sun to be luminous? Not from the necessity of natural causes.

Bentley.

2. Enlightened.

Earth may, industrious of herself, fetch day,
Travelling east; and with her part averse
From the sun's beam, meet night; her other part

Still luminous by his ray.

Milton, P. L.

3. Shining; bright.

The most luminous of the prismatic colours are the yellow and orange: these affect the senses more strongly than all the rest together.

Newton, Opticks.

LU'MINOUSLY.* adv. [from luminous.] In a bright or shining manner.

LU'MINOUSNESS.* n. s. [from luminous.] Brightness; emission of light: as, the luminousness of the sea: a philosophical term.

That luminousness that appears in some eyes.

Spence, Critic.

LUMP. n. s. [lompe, Teut.]

1. A small mass of any matter.

The weed kal is by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Without this various agitation of the water, how could lumps of sugar or salt cast into it be so perfectly dissolved in it, that the lumps themselves totally disappear?

Boyle.

A wretch is prisoner made;
Whose flesh torn off by lumps, the ravenous foe

In morsels cut.

Tate.

Every fragrant flower, and odorous green,

Were sorted well, with lumps of amber laid between.

Dryden.

To conceive thus of the soul's intimate union with an infinite being, and by that union receiving of ideas, leads one into as gross thoughts, as a country maid would have of an infinite butter-print, the several parts whereof being applied to her lump of butter, left on it the figure or idea there was present need of.

Locke.

2. A shapeless mass.

Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested lump;
As crooked in thy manners as thy shape.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Why might there not have been, in this great mass, huge lumps of solid matter, which, without any form or order, might be jumbled together?

Keil against Burnet.

3. Mass undistinguished.

All men's honours

Lie like one lump before him, to be fashion'd
Into what pinch he please.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

It is rare to find any of these metals pure; but copper, iron, gold, silver, lead, and tin, all promiscuously in one lump.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

4. The whole together; the gross,

If my readers will not go to the price of buying my papers by retail, they may buy them in the lump.

Addison.

Other epidemical vices are rife and predominant only for a season, and must not be ascribed to human nature in the lump.

Bentley, Serm.

The principal gentlemen of several counties are stigmatized in a lump, under the notion of being papists.

Swift.

To LUMP. v. a. To take in the gross, without attention to particulars.

The expences ought to be lumped together.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

Boccalini, in his political balance, after laying France in one scale, throws Spain into the other, which wanted but very little of being a counterpoise: the Spaniards upon this reckoned, that if Spain of itself weighed so well, they could not fail of success when the several parts of the monarchy were lumped in the same scale.

Addison.

LUMPISH.† n. s. [lump and fish.] A sort of fish: thick, and very ill-shaped; called also the sucker, and the sea-owl.

LUMPING. adj. [from lump.] Large; heavy; great. A low word.

Nick, thou shalt have a lumping pennyworth.

Arbutnot.

LUMPISH.† adj. [lumpsch, Teut. stupidus, piger. Kilian.] Heavy; gross; dull; unactive; bulky.

Lifting up his lumpish head.

Spenser, F. Q. i. i. 43.

Out of the earth was formed the flesh of man, and therefore heavy and lumpish.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

Sylvia is lumpish, heavy, melancholy.

Shakespeare.

Love is all spirit: fairies sooner may Be taken tardy, when they night tricks play, Than we; are we too dull and lumpish. Sucking. Little terrestrial particles swimming in it after the grossest were sunk down, which, by their heaviness and lumpish figure, made their way more speedily.

Burnet.

How dull and how insensible a beast

Is man, who yet would lord it o'er the rest?

Philosophers and poets vainly strove

In every age the lumpish mass to move.

Dryden.

LUMPISHLY.† adv. [from lumpish.] With heaviness; with stupidity.

Sherwood.

LUMPISHNESS.† n. s. [from lumpish.] Stupid heaviness.

The Lord was well acquainted with the dullness and lumpishness of our hearts.

Exposit. of Solomon's Song, (1585,) p. 209.

Such repugnancy and resistance there is yet remaining in those, which are most obedient; such heaviness and lumpishness in those which are most ready and diligent.

Harmar, Transl. of Beza, p. 59.

LUMFY. adj. [from lump.] Full of lumps; full of compact masses.

One of the best spades to dig hard lumpy clays, but too small for light garden mould.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

LUNACY.† n. s. [from luna, the moon.] A kind of madness influenced by the moon; madness in general.

Love is merely madness, and deserves as well a dark house and a whip as madmen do; and the reason why they are not so punished and cured is, that the lunacy is so ordinary, that the whippers are in love too.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

Your kindred shun your house,

As beaten hence by your strange lunacy.

Shakspeare.

If we bid all reason, and history, and human helps and acquisitions, quite adieu, the world will never be rid of religious lunacies and fancies.

More, Conj. Cabb. (1653,) p. 251.

There is difference of lunacy: I had rather be mad with him, that when he had nothing, thought all the ships that came into the haven his, than with you, who, when you have so much coming in, think you have nothing.

Suckling.

LUNAR.† } adj. [lunaire, Fr. lunaris,
LUNARY. } Lat.]

1. Relating to the moon.

They that have resolved that these years were but lunar years, viz. of a month, or Egyptian years, are easily confuted.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

Then we upon our globe's last verge shall go,

And view the ocean leaning on the sky;

From thence our rolling neighbours we shall know,

And on the lunar world securely pry.

Dryden.

2. Being under the dominion of the moon.

They have denominated some herbs solar and some lunar, and such like toys put into great words.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The figure of its seed much resembles a horse-shoe, which Baptista Porta had thought too low a signification, and raised the same unto a lunar representation.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. Resembling the moon; orb'd like the moon.

The lunar horns that bind

The brow of Isis, cast a blaze around.

Dryden, Ov.

In their right hand a pointed dart they wield;
The left, for ward, sustains a lunar shield.

Dryden, Æn.

LUNARY. n. s. [lunaria, Latin; lunaire, French.] Monwort.

Then sprinkles she the juice of rue

With nine drops of the midnight dew,

From lunar distilling.

Drayton, Nymphid.

LUNATED.† adj. [from luna.] Formed like a half moon.

A sort of cross, which our heralds do not dream of; which is a cross lunated after this manner.

Brown, Trav. (1685,) p. 54.

LUNATICK.† adj. [lunatique, Fr. lunaticus, Latin.] Mad; having the imagination influenced by the moon.

Lord have mercy on my sone, for he is lunatyk.

Wicliffe, St. Matt. xvii.

Bedlam beggars, from low farms, Sometimes with lunatick bans, sometimes with prayers,

Enforce their charity.

Shakspeare.

LUNATICK. n. s. A madman.

The lunatick, the lover, and the poet,

Are of imagination all compact:

One sees more devils than vast hell can hold;

The madman.

Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

I dare ensure any man well in his wits, for one in the thousand that he shall not die a lunatick in Bedlam within these seven years; because not above one in about one thousand five hundred have done so.

Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

See the blind beggar dance, the cripple sing,
The sot a hero, lunatick a king.

Pope.

The residue of the yearly profits shall be laid out in purchasing a piece of land, and in building thereon an hospital for the reception of idiots and lunaticks.

Swift.

LUNATION. n. s. [lunaison, French; luna, Latin.] The revolution of the moon.

If the lunations be observed for a cycle of nineteen years, which is the cycle of the moon, the same observations will be verified for succeeding cycles for ever.

Holder on Time.

LUNCH.† } n. s. [Minshew derives it
LUNCHEON. } from lonja, Spanish; Skinner from kleinken, a small piece, Teut.

It probably comes from clutch or clunch.

Dr. Johnson. — Minshew's derivation seems to be the true one. The Spanish lonja, a great slice, is particularly applied to bacon. See LONJA, Dict. Acad.

Españ. And thus, in our early usage of luncheon: "Witness their double chynnes, and fat lunchions of flesh on their bodies." The Cautelles of the Masse, 8vo. 1584. Serenius, however, notices the Swed. luns, klaus, massa.]

1. As much food as one's hand can hold.

When hungry thou stood'st staring like an oaf,

I slid'd the luncheon from the barley loaf;

With crumbled bread I thickened'd well the mess.

Gay.

2. A kind of meal between breakfast and dinner. Now a common colloquial expression. Formerly it was an afternoon's repast, between dinner and supper.

LUNE.† n. s. [luna, Lat.]

1. Any thing in the shape of an half moon.

A troop of Janizaries strew'd the field,

Fall'n in just ranks or wedges, lunes, or squares,

Firm as they stood.

Watts.

2. Fit of lunacy or frenzy; mad freak. The French say of a man fantastical or whimsical, Il a des lunes.

Hammer.

These dangerous, unsafe lunes o'the king!

Beshrew them!

He must be told on't, and he shall: the office

Becomes a woman best.

Shaksp. Wint. Tale.

3. A leash: as, the lune of a hawk. [Su. Goth. lina, funis.]

LUNET.* n. s. [from luna, Lat.] A little moon; an attendant upon a planet.

There have been further discoveries made of the visible and material heavens, in these later ages, than ever were known to our predecessors; who could never have believed, that there were such lunets about some of the planets, as our late perspectives have descried.

Bp. Hall, Peacemaker, § 10.

LUNETTE. n. s. [French.] A small half moon.

Lunette is a covered place made before the courtine, which consists of two faces that form an angle inwards, and is commonly raised in fosses full of water, to serve instead of a fausse braye, and to dispute the enemy's passage: it is six toises in extent, of which the parapet is four.

Trevoux.

LUNG.* n. s. See LUNGS.

LUNGE.* n. s. See LONGE.

1. A thrust.

2. A violent kick of a horse.

LUNGEONS.* adj. [of uncertain etymology.] Spiteful; malicious. Derbyshire, and Leicestershire, Grose. And, I believe, in Cheshire.

LUNGIS.* n. s. [longis, Fr. longone, Ital. from longo, to be slow, Trippault; from longus, q. d. to be a long time about an affair, Menage. See To LOUNGE.] A lubber. Barret, Alv. 1580. A dreaming, drowsy fellow; also, one who being sent on an errand is long in returning. Cotgrave, and Sherwood. Not now in use, though obvious in the modern lounge.

LUNGS.† n. s. pl. [lungen, Saxon; lung, Dutch; lung, German. The singular number in our language is rarely used.

It occurs in the summary of Du Bartas, 1621, p. 284. "The lung is nourished by a spiritual and vaporous blood." Again, "The lung is the instrument of the voice."

1. The lights; the part by which breath is inspired and expired.

More would I, but my lungs are wasted so,
That strength of speech is utterly denied me.

Shakespeare.

The bellows of his lungs begin to swell,
Nor can the good receive nor bad expel.

Dryden.

Had I a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues,
And throats of brass inspir'd with iron lungs;
I could not half those horrid crimes repeat,
Nor half the punishments those crimes have met.

Dryden.

2. Formerly a cant term for a person; denoting a large and strong-voiced man, as Coles has observed; and also a chymical servant, a sort of under workman in the art.

That is his fire-drake,

His lungs, his zephyrus, he that puffs his coals.

B. Jonson, Alchemist.

LUNGED. adj. [from lungs.] Having lungs; having the nature of lungs; drawing in and emitting air, as the lungs in an animal body.

The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke,
While the lung'd bellows hissing fire provoke.

Dryden.

LUNG-GROWN. adj. [lung and grown.]

The lungs sometimes grow fast to the skin that lines the breast within; whence such as are detained with that accident are lung-grown.

Harvey on Consumptions.

LUNGWORT.† n. s. [lunzen-pyrt, Saxon; pulmonaria, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

LUNISO'LAR. adj. [lunisolaire, French; luna and solaris, Latin.] Compounded of the revolution of sun and moon.

LUNT. n. s. [lonte, Dutch.] The match-cord with which guns are fired.

LUPINE. n. s. [lupin, French; lupinus, Latin.] A kind of pulse.

It has a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empalement rises the pale, which afterward turns into a pod filled with either plain or spherical seeds: the leaves grow like fingers upon the foot stalks.

Miller.

When Protegenes would undertake any excellent piece, he used to diet himself with peas and lupines, that his invention might be quick and refined.

Peacham on Drawing.

Where stalks of lupines grew,
Th' ensuing season, in return, may bear
The bearded product of the golden year.

Dryden, Georg.

LUPINE.* adj. [lupinus, Latin.] Like a wolf.

Their physiognomy is canine, &c. lupine, or leonine; for, we read, some men had lionly looks.

Bp. Cauden, Life of Bp. Brownrigg, p. 236.

LURCH. n. s. [This word is derived by Skinner from lourche, a game of draughts, much used, as he says, among the Dutch; ourche he derives from arca; so that, I suppose, those that are lost are left in lorche, in the lurch or box; whence the use of the word.]

To leave in the LURCH. To leave in a forlorn or deserted condition; to leave without help. A ludicrous phrase.

Will you now to peace incline,
And languish in the main design,
And leave us in the lurch? Denham.

But though thou'rt of a different church,
I will not leave thee in the lurch. Hudibras.

Have a care how you keep company with those that, when they find themselves upon a pinch, will leave their friends in the lurch. L'Estrange.

Can you break your word with three of the honestest best meaning persons in the world? It is base to take advantage of their simplicity and credulity, and leave them in the lurch at last.

Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

Flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world, and leave us in the lurch, by some of their late refinements. Addison, Guardian.

To LURCH. v. n. [loeren, Dutch; or rather from the noun.]

1. To shift; to play tricks.

I myself, sometimes leaving goodness on my left-hand, and hiding mine honour in my necessity, and fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch.

Shakespeare.

2. To lie in wait: we now rather use lurk. While the one was upon wing, the other stood lurching upon the ground, and flew away with the fish. L'Estrange.

To LURCH. v. a. [lurcor, Lat.]

1. To devour; to swallow greedily.

Too far off from great cities may hinder business; or too near lurcheth all provisions, and maketh every thing dear. Bacon.

2. To defeat; to disappoint. A word now used only in burlesque. [from the game lurch.]

He waxed like a sea;

And, in the brunt of seventeen battles since,
He lurcht all swords o'er the garland. Shak. Coriol.

God never designed the use of them to be continual; by putting such an emptiness in them, as should so quickly fail and lurch the expectation.

South.

This is a sure rule, that will never deceive or lurch the sincere communicant.

South.

3. To steal privily; to filch; to pilfer.

LURCHER.† n. s. [from lurch.]

1. One that watches to steal, or to betray or entrap.

Is not love a lurcher, that taketh men's stomachs away that they cannot eat, their spleen that they cannot laugh, their hearts that they cannot fight, their eyes that they cannot sleep?

Lily, Endimion.

His thefts some tradesman spies,
Swift from his play the scudding lurcher flies;
Whilst every honest tongue Stop thief resounds.

Gay.

2. A dog that watches for his game.

I cannot represent those worthies more naturally than under the shadow of a pack of dogs, made up of finders, lurchers, and setters.

Tatler.

3. [Lurco, Latin.] A glutton; a gormandizer. Not now used. Barret.

LUR'DAN.* n. s. [lourdain, old French, stupid, clownish; lourdat, a dunce; lurdus, low Lat. from lourd; Teut. loerd. See LOORD. Serenius derives the word from the Goth. lori, sterculus.] A clown; a blockhead; a lazy person; a worthless person. Used in Lancashire and other parts of the north.

Lo! here we have the kynge's scale:

What, lurden, art thou wode?

Old Song of Adam Bell, P. ii.

Lourdans or clownes attired in their ordinary worky-day clothes.

Florio, Transl. of Montaigne, p. 238.

LUR'DAN.* adj. [lourdin, Fr.] Blockish; LUR'DY. } stupid; lazy; sluggish.

Cotgrave, and Grose.

LURE. n. s. [leurre, French; lore, Dutch.]

1. Something held out to call a hawk.

My falcon now is sharp and passing empty,
And, till she stoop, she must not be full-gorg'd,
For then she never looks upon her lure. Shaks.

This lure she cast abroad, thinking that this fame and belief would draw, at one time or other, some birds to strike upon it. Bacon, Hen. VII.

A great estate to an heir, is as a lure to all the birds of prey round about to seize on him. Bacon.

This stiffneck'd pride, nor art nor force can bend,

Nor high-flown hopes to reason's lure descend.

Denham.

A falconer Henry is, when Emma hawks;
With her of tarsels, and of lures he talks. Prior.

2. Any enticement; any thing that promises advantage.

How many have with a smile made small account
Of beauty, and her lures, easily scorn'd
All her assaults, on worthier things intent?

Milton, P. R.

Luxury

Held out her lure to his superiour eye,
And griev'd to see him pass contemptuous by.

Madden.

To LURE.† v. n. [from the noun.] To call hawks.

Standing near one that lured loud and shrill, I had suddenly an offence, as if somewhat had broken, or been dislocated in my ear, and immediately after a loud ringing. Bacon.

These falcons clammering up and down, from hill to hill, and luring all along, lighted at last upon a large pleasant valley.

Hovell, Instruct. For. Trav. p. 134.

To LURE.† v. a.

1. To bring hawks to the lure.

With empty hound men may no haukes lure.

Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Prol.

2. To attract; to entice; to draw. [lura, allicer, Goth. Serenius.]

A little matter will lure or scare the common people into civil and religious fashions, if they have easy leaders and bold dictators.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 154.

As when a flock

Of ravenous fowl, though many a league remote,
Against the day of battle, to a field

Where armies lie encamp'd, come flying, lur'd
With scent of living carcasses. Milton, P. L.

A man spent one day in labour, that he might pass the other at ease; and lured on by the pleasure of this bait, when he was in vigour he would provide for as many days as he could. Temple.

Should you lure

From this dark haunt, beneath the tangled roots
Of pendant trees, the monarch of the brook,

Behoves you then to play your finest art. Thomson.

Volumes on shelter'd stalls expanded lie,
And various science lures the learned eye.

Gay, Trivia.

LURID. adj. [luridus, Latin.] Gloomy; dismal. Not used.

Slow settling o'er the lurid grove,

Unusual darkness broods. Thomson, Summer.

To LURK.† v. n. [probably lurch and lurk are the same word. See To LURCH. Dr. Johnson.—Lurch may be from loeren; or rather from the Danish lurer, to lurk, to watch, to lie sneaking, or in ambush; whence lur, an ambush. See Dr. Jamieson in V. To LOURE, where it is observed that Serenius and Ihre both trace our word to the Su. Goth. lurk.

See also Spegel, Gloss. Su. Goth. V. LURKEN.] To lie in wait; to lie hidden; to lie close.

Far in land a savage nation dwelt,
That never tasted grace, nor goodness felt;
But like wild beasts, lurking in loathsome den,
And flying fast as roebuck through the fen,
All naked. Spenser, F. Q.

Millbrook lurketh between two hills, a village of some eighty houses, and borrowing his name from a mill and little brook running there through.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.
They lay not to live by their work,
But thievelishly loiter and lurke.

Tusser, Husbandry.
If sinners entice thee, consent not; if they say, let us lay wait for blood, let us lurk privily for the innocent. Prov. i. 11.

The wife, where danger or dishonour lurks,
Safest and seemliest by her husband stays.

Milton, P. L.
See
The lurking gold upon the fatal tree.

Dryden, Æn.

The king unseen
Lurk'd in her hand, and mourn'd his captive queen;
He springs to vengeance. Pope.

I do not lurk in the dark: I am not wholly unknown to the world: I have set my name at length. Swift.

LURKER.† n. s. [from lurk.] A loiterer;
one that lies in wait: a thief that lies in wait.

If this lawless lurker had ever had any taste of the civil or canon law.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 199.
It was well known what a bold lurker schism was. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 1.

LURKINGPLACE. n. s. [lurk and place.]
Hiding place; secret place.

Take knowledge of all the lurkingplaces where he hideth himself. 1 Sam. xxiii. 23.

LURRY.* n. s. [I know not the etymology.] A crowd; a throng; a heap.

And is the lurry of lawyers quite worn out?
World of Wonders, (1608), p. 135.

A lurry and rabble of poor farthing friars, who have neither rent nor revenue. Ibid, p. 187.

We are not to leave duties for no duties, and to turn prayer into a kind of lurry.

Milton, Iconoclastes, ch. 16.

LUSCIOUS.† adj. [from delicious, say some; but Skinner more probably derives it from luxurious, corruptly pronounced. Dr. Johnson. — It is probable from the old word lush, juicy, succulent, rank, lusty. See LUSH. Luscious is usually written lushious in our old lexicography.]

1. Sweet, so as to nauseate.

Pert wit and luscious eloquence have lost their relish. Burnet, Pastoral Care.

2. Sweet in a great degree.

The food that to him now is as luscious as loches, shall shortly be as bitter as colloquintida.
Shakespeare, Othello.

With brandish'd blade rush on him, break his glass,
And shed the luscious liquor on the ground.

Milton, Comus.
Blown roses hold their sweetness to the last,
And raisins keep their luscious native taste.

Dryden.

3. Pleasing; delightful.

He will bait him in with the luscious proposal of some gainful purchase. South.

LUSCIOUSLY.† adv. [from luscious.] Sweetly to a great degree. Sherwood.

LUSCIOUSNESS. n. s. [from luscious.] Immoderate sweetness.

Can there be greater indulgence in God, than to embitter sensualities whose lusciousness intoxicates us, and to clip wings which carry us from him? Decay of Chr. Piety.

Peas breed worms by reason of the lusciousness and sweetness of the grain. Mortimer, Husbandry.

LUSERN. n. s. [lupus cervarius, Latin.] A lynx.

LUSH.† adj. Of a dark, deep, full colour, opposite to pale and faint; from lousche.
Dr. Johnson from Hamner. — But the word has no connection with the Fr.
lousche, and no reference to colour,
where Shakespeare applies it to the grass,
in the solitary instance of the word given by Dr. Johnson. It appears to have been usually applied to plants, and to denote their juicy, full, succulent, and rank state. All the old editions of Shakespeare read "lushious woodbine," in the Mids. Night's Dream; where modern criticism has substituted lush.

Lush and foggy is the blade,
And cheers the husbandman with hope.

Golding, Transl. of Ovid, (1587.)
Shrubs lush, and almost like a gristle.

Golding, Transl. of Jul. Solinus, (1587.)
How lush and lusty the grass looks? how green? Shakespeare, Tempest.

LUSK.† adj. [lasche, French; from the Goth. loskr, sluggish, crafty. Serenius.]
Idle; lazy; worthless. Dict.

LUSK.* n. s. [from the adjective.] A lubber; a sot; a lazy fellow.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

Elts had we never had so many lecherous luskies
among them.

Bale, Acts of Eng. Vol. P. i. fol. 61. b.

To LUSK.* v. n. [from the noun.] To be idle; to lie idle, unemployed; to be careless.

He is my foe; friend thou not him, nor forge him arms, but let

Him lusk at home unhonoured.

Warner, Albion's Eng. (1596), p. 147.
Themis selfe

Would be cashier'd from one poor scrap of pelfe:
If that she were incarnate in our time,

She might lusk scorned in disdain'd slime,
Shaded from honour.

Marston, Scourge of Vill. (1599), ii. 6.
Not that I mean to feign an idle God,

That lusk in heaven, and never looks abroad,
That crowns not virtue, and corrects not vice; —

— but I conceive

In God care, counsel, justice, mercy, might,
To punish wrongs, and patronize their right.

Sylvester, Du Bartas, (1621), p. 141.

LUSKISH.† adj. [from lusk.] Somewhat inclinate to laziness or indolence.

Any swineherd's brat, that lousie came

To luskish Athens.

Marston, Scourge of Vill. (1599), i. 3.

LUSKISHLY. adv. [from luskish.] Lazily; indolently.

LUSKISHNESS.† n. s. [from luskish.] A disposition to laziness.

He shooke off luskishness; and, courage chill,
Kindling afresh, gau battell to renew.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. i. 35.

LUSORIOUS.† adj. [lusorius, Latin.] Used in play; sportive.

Many too nicely take exceptions at cards, tables, and dice, and such mixt lusurious lots; whom Gataker well confutes.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 271.

Things more open to exception, yet unjustly condemned as unlawful; such as the lusurious lots, dancing and stage-plays. Bp. Sanderson.

LUSORY.† adj. [lusorius, Latin.] Used in play.

How bitter have some been against all lusory
lots, or any play with chance!

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 120.

They supply it with their lances in lusory skim-ishes on horseback, wherein their dexterity cannot be too much admired.

L. Addison, West Barbary, p. 218.

There might be many entertaining contrivances for the instruction of children in geometry and geography, in such alluring and lusory methods, which would make a most agreeable and lasting impression. Watts on the Mind.

LUST.†. n. s. [lupt, Saxon; lust, Dutch;
from the Gothick, lustus desire; and not the participle of the Sax. lyrcan, to list, to desire, as Mr. H. Tooke pretends.
See the first sense of the word.]

1. Desire; inclination; will. This primary sense is not noticed by Dr. Johnson. Seamen yet use this sense in respect to the inclination of the ship, when she heels.

He that hath more lust to cry.
Sidney, Dial. between two Shepherds.

And Nemertea learned well to rule her lust.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. xi. 51.

Little lust had she to talk of aught.
Spenser, F. Q. v. vi. 21.

Let me be privileg'd by my place, and message,
To be a speaker free; when I am hence,

I'll answer to my lust. Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

I will divide the spoil; my lust shall be satisfied upon them. Exod. xv. 9.

2. Carnal desire.

This our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn; epicurism and lust

Make it more like a tavern or a brothel,
Than a grac'd palace. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Lust, and rank thoughts. Shakespeare, Cymb.

They are immoderately given to the lust of the flesh, making no conscience to get bastards. Abbot.

When a temptation of lust assaults thee, do not resist it by disputing with it, but fly from it, that is, think not at all of it. Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

3. Any violent or irregular desire.

The ungodly, for his own lust, doth persecute the poor: let them be taken in the crafty wiliness they imagined. Psalms.

Virtue was represented by Hercules: he is drawn offering to strike a dragon; by the dragon are meant all manner of lusts. Pencham on Drawing.

All weigh our acts, and what'er seems unjust,
Impute not to necessity, but lust.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.

The lust of lucre. Pope.

4. Vigour; active power; lustiness. Not used.

Trees will grow greater, and bear better fruit, if you put salt, or lees of wine, or blood, to the root: the cause may be the increasing the lust or spirit of the root. Bacon.

To LUST.† v. n. [Sax. lyrcan; Goth.
lustan.]

1. To desire carnally.

This is she,
That with her lust wins infamy.

If lusting love be so disgrac'd,
Die before you live unchast:

For better die with honest fame,
Than lead a wanton life with shame.

Greene, Philomela, (1615.)

Inconstant man, that loveth all he saw,
And lusted after all that he did love. Roscommon.

2. To desire vehemently.
Giving sometimes prodigally; not because he loved them to whom he gave, but because he lusted to give. Sidney.
The Christian captives in chains could no way move themselves, if they should unadvisedly lust after liberty. Knolles.

3. To list; to like. Out of use.
Their eyes swell with fatness; and they do even what they lust. Psalm. lxxiii. 7.

4. To have irregular dispositions, or desires.
The mixed multitude fell a lusting; and the children of Israel also wept, and said, Who shall give us flesh to eat? Numbers.
The spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy. 1 Jan. iv. 5.

LU'STER.* n. s. [from lust.] One who is inflamed with lust.
Hear, and fear, all lustres after strange women! Dr. Clerke, Sermon. (1637), p. 499.

LU'STFUL.† adj. [lust and full. Sax. lufþfull.]

1. Libidinous; having irregular desires.
Turning wrathful fire to lustful heat,
With beastly sin thought her to have defil'd. Spenser, F. Q.
There is no man that is intemperate or lustful, but besides the guilt likewise stains and obscures his soul. Tillotson.

2. Provoking to sensuality; inciting to lust.
Thence his lustful orgies he enlarg'd Milton, P. L.

3. Vigorous. Not in use.
The want of lustful health
Could not be half so grievous to your grace,
As these most wretched tidings that I bring. Sackville, Trag. of Gorboduc, (1561.)

LU'STFULLY. adv. [from lustful.] With sensual concupiscence.

LU'STFULNESS.† n. s. [from lustful. Sax. lufþfullnes.] Libidinousness. Sherwood.

LU'STINESS. n. s. [from lusty.] Stoutness; sturdiness; strength; vigour of body.
Fresh Clarion being ready light, —
[He] with good speed began to take his flight,
Over the fields in his frank lustiness. Spenser, Muioipolmos.

Where there is so great a prevention of the ordinary time, it is the lustiness of the child; but when it is less, it is some indispotion of the mother. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Cappadocian slaves were famous for their lustiness, and being in good liking, were set on a stall to shew the good habit of their body, and made to play tricks before the buyers, to shew their activity and strength. Dryden, Pers.

LU'STLESS.† adj. [from lust.] Not vigorous; weak; languid; lifeless.

Lustless, far from game. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.
The rather lambs bene starved with cold,
All for their maister is lustlesse and old. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

In his lustlesse limbs, through evil guise,
A shaking fever rain'd continually. Spenser, F. Q.

The throistle, with shrill sharps, as purposely he song
To awake the lustlesse sun: or chiding, that so long
He was in coming forth. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

LU'STRAL. adj. [lustrale, French; lustralis, Latin.] Used in purification.

His better parts by lustral waves refin'd,
More pure, and nearer to ethereal mind. Garth.

TO LU'STRATE.* v. a. [lustrato, Latin.] To purify.

The parts of this work, as fast as I could finish them, were lustrated by your gracious eye, and consummated by your judicious observations. Ld. Herbert, Hen. VIII. Dedication.

When we have found this execrable thing, which hath brought all our plagues on us, then we must purge, and cleanse, and lustrate the whole city for its sake. Hammond, Works, iv. 638.

LUSTRATION. n. s. [lustration, French; lustratio, Lat.] Purification by water.

Job's religious care,
His sons assemblies, whose united prayer,
Like sweet perfumes, from golden censurs rise;
He with divine lustrations sanctifies. Sandys, Par. of Job.

That spirits are corporeal seems a conceit derogative unto himself, and such as he should rather labour to overthrow; yet thereby he establisheth the doctrine of lustrations, amulets, and charms. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Should Io's priest command,
A pilgrimage to Meroe's burning sand;
Through deserts they wou'd seek the secret spring,
And holy water for lustration bring. Dryden, Juv.

What were all their lustrations but so many solemn purifications, to render both themselves and their sacrifices acceptable to their gods? South, Sermon.

By ardent prayer, and clear lustration,
Purge the contagious spots of human weakness;
Impure no mortal can behold Apollo. Prior.

LU'STRE. n. s. [lustre, French.]

1. Brightness; splendour; glitter.
You have one eye left to see some mischief on him.
— Let it see more prevent it; out, vile gelly! where is thy lustre now? Shakespeare, K. Lear.

To the soul time doth perfection give,
And adds fresh lustre to her beauty still. Davies.

The scorching sun was mounted high,
In all its lustre, to the noonday sky. Addison, Ode.

Pass but some fleeting years, and these poor eyes,
Where now without a boast some lustre lies:

No longer shall their little honours keep,
But only be of use to read or weep. Prior.
All nature laughs, the groves are fresh and fair,
The sun's mild lustre warms the vital air. Pope.

2. A scone with lights.
Ridotta sips, and dances till she see
The doubling lustres dance as quick as she. Pope, Her.

3. Eminence; renown.
His ancestors continued about four hundred years, rather without obscurity than with any great lustre. Walton.

I used to wonder how a man of birth and spirit could endure to be wholly insignificant and obscure in a foreign country, when he might live with lustre in his own. Swift.

4. [from lustre, Fr. lustrum, Latin.] The space of five years.

Both of us have closed the tenth lustre, and it is time to determine how we shall play the last act of the farce. Bolingbroke.

TO LU'STRE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To render bright; to illuminate.

In the same instant that God made the sun,
With it this glorious light we see begun,
Which lustred hie the earth. Heywood, Hier. of Angels, (1635,) p. 122.

LU'STRING. n. s. [from lustre.] A shining silk; commonly pronounced lustering.

LU'STROUS.† adj. [from lustre. Fr. lustrous.] Donne has written our word lustrous: "a lustrous beauty and excellency of workmanship." Hist. of the Septuagint, ed. 1633. p. 62.] Bright; shining; luminous.

Noble heroes, my sword and yours are kin, good sparks and lustrous. Shakespeare, All's well.
The more lustrous the imagination is, it filtheth and fixeth the better. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

LU'STRUM.* n. s. [Latin.] A space of five years; properly, the completion of fifty months.

Allowing for each of those a lustrum or quinquennial. Gregory, Posthum. p. 140.

Prolonging them, with greater comfort, to so many years or lustras. Smith on Old Ages, p. 264.

We push time from us, and we wish him back;
Lavish of lustrums, and yet fond of life. Young, Night Th. 2.

LU'STWORT. n. s. [lust and wort.] An herb.

LU'STY.† adj. [lustigh, Teut.]

1. Stout; vigorous; healthy; able of body.
If lusty love should go in quest of beauty,
Where should he find it fairer than in Blanch? Shakespeare.

Making thee young and lusty as an eagle. Psalm.

We yet may see the old man in a morning,
Lusty as health, come ruddy to the field,
And there pursue the chase. Otway.

2. Beautiful; handsome. This and the two following senses are unnoticed by Dr. Johnson; and indeed they are now not used.

Laodomie, his lustie wife. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

So lovest thou the lusty Hyacinth;
So lovest thou the faire Coronis deare. Spenser, F. Q.

3. Pleasant; delightful.
How fresh my flowers bene spread,
Dyed in lilly white and crimson red,
With leaves engrained in lustie green. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

4. Saucy; sturdy.
The confident and over lusty French
Do the low-rated English play at dice. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Cassius's soldiers did shew themselves verie stubborne and lutie in the campe.

North, Transl. of Phitarch.

LUTANIST.† n. s. [from lute.] One who plays upon the lute.

The lutemists therefore are men of fine genius.

Tatler, No. 153.

I can call the lutanist and the singer, but the sounds that pleased me yesterday weary me to-day.

Johnson, Rasselas, ch. 2.

LUTARIOUS. adj. [lutarius, Latin.]

1. Living in mud.

2. Of the colour of mud.

☞ A scaly tortoise-shell, of the lutarius kind.

Grew.

LUTATION. * n. s. [lutatus, Lat.] The method of cementing chymical vessels close together. See To LUTE.

LUTE.† n. s. [luth, lut, French. Dr. Johnson.—Some derive this word from the Arab. a-oude, whence the Spanish laud or laut, supposed by Bochart to be the chelys or testudo of the ancients. See Shaw's Travels, 4to. p. 203. The German laute is also testudo, and the verb lauten, sonum modulare sive id fiat ore sive instrumento. See Wachter. The Su. Goth. word is luta.]

1. A stringed instrument of musick.

Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

May must be drawn with a sweet countenance, upon his head a garland of roses, in one hand a lute.

Peacham.

In a sadly pleasing strain

Let the warbling lute complain. Pope, St. Cæcilia.

A lute string will bear a hundred weight without rupture, but at the same time cannot exert its elasticity.

Arbuthnot.

Lands of singing, or of dancing slaves,
Love-whispering woods, and lute-resounding waves.

Pope, Dunciad.

2. [from lut, French; lutum, Lat.] A composition like clay, with which chemists close up their vessels.

Some temper lute, some spacious vessels move,
These furnaces erect, and those approve. Garth.

To LUTE.† v. a. [from the noun. French, luter.] To close with lute, or chemist's clay.

Take a vessel of iron, and let it have a cover of iron well luted, after the manner of the chemists.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Iron may be so heated, that being closely luted in a glass, it shall constantly retain the fire.

Wilkins, Math. Magic.

Then appeared a large glass-bottle, wherein was luted up a famous necromancer.

L'Estrange, Tr. of Quevedo, p. 48.

LUTER. * n. s. [from lute.] Lutist is a LUTIST. } word more regularly formed than lutunist.] A player on the lute. Huloet and Barret thus define the luter. Dr. Johnson notices neither that nor lutist.

His [Strada's] imitation of Claudian in expressing a controversy between a lutist and a nightingale.

Hakevill on Providence, p. 254.

LUTESTRING. * n. s.

1. The string of a lute. Sherwood. And see the example from Arbuthnot in LUTE.

2. A kind of silk. SEE LUSTERING.

There goes Mrs. Roundabout; I mean the fat lady in the lutestring trollope.

Goldsmith, Ess. 15.

LUTHERAN. * n. s. One who adheres to the doctrine and discipline of Luther. See LUTHERANISM.

I know her son,

A spleeny Lutheran. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

The Lutherans constantly pressed the unsophisticated tenet of the atonement, not contractedly in a calvinistical, but comprehensively in a Christian point of view.

Laurence, Serm. 3.

LUTHERAN. * adj. Denoting the doctrine or followers of Luther.

The king desired the Lutheran divines to approve his second marriage; they begged his excuse in writing. Burnet, Hist. of the Ref. B. 2.

If we contemplate them [the Articles of the Church of England] in this view, or rather such of them as will become the subject of investigation, we find, that far from being framed according to the system of Calvin in preference to all others, they were modelled after the Lutheran in opposition to the Romish tenets of the day.

Laurence, Serm. 1.

LUTHERANISM. * n. s. The doctrine of LUTHERISM. } Luther. Protestantism is divided into Lutheranism and Calvinism, so called from Luther and Calvin, the two distinguished reformers of the sixteenth century.

Guthrie.

Lutherism increased daily in the university.

A. Wood, Ann. Univ. Ox. in 1526.

In this country, where the light of literature could not be concealed, nor the love of truth suppressed, Lutheranism found numerous proselytes, who were known by the appellation of "the men of the new learning."

Laurence, Serm. 1.

LUTHERN. * n. s. [lucarne, Fr. lucerna, Lat.] An architectural term for a sort of window over the cornice, in the roof of a building. See the third sense of LANTERN.

LUTULENT. adj. [lutulentus, Latin.] Mud-dy; turbid.

To LUX. } v. a. [luxer, French; To LUXATE. } luxo, Latin.] To put out of joint; to disjoin.

Consider well the luxated joint, which way it slipped out; it requireth to be returned in the same manner.

Wiseman.

Descending careless from his couch, the fall,
Lux'd his neck-joint, and spinal marrow bruise'd.

Philips.

LUXATION.† n. s. [luxation, Fr. Cotgrave; from luxo, Latin.]

1. The act of disjoining.

If the straining and luxation of one joint can so afflict us, what shall the racking of the whole body, and the torture of the soul?

Bp. Hall, Heaven upon Earth.

Why this mangling and luxation of passages?

Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 50.

2. Any thing disjointed.

If thou wert laid up of the gout, or some rupture, or luxation of some limb, thou wouldst not complain to keep in. Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead. This joint may be kept from luxation.

Smith on Old Age, p. 59.

The undue situation, or connexion of parts, in fractures and luxations, are to be rectified by chirurgical means.

Floyer.

LUXE.† n. s. [French; luxus, Latin.] Luxury; voluptuousness. Not used, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Prior. But Shenstone uses it; though indeed it is a word unworthy of English usage.

The pow'r of wealth I try'd

And all the various lux of costly pride. Prior.

Above or Persian lux, or Attic art,
The rude majestic monument arose.

Shenstone, Eleg. 21.

LUXURIANCE.† n. s. [from luxurians, LUXURIANCY. } Latin. This word is noticed by Heylin, in 1656, as unusual and uncouth. But luxuriandy had been used some years before that date.] Exuberance; abundant or wanton plenty or growth.

The rankness and luxuriandy of our tempers in this kind ought rather to be the subject of our extirpation, than a ground for our manuring and culture.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. 1. (1648), p. 143.

A fungus prevents healing only by its luxuriandy.

Wiseman.

Flowers grow up in the garden in the greatest luxuriandy and profusion.

Spectator.

While through the parting robe the alternate breast

In full luxuriandy rose. Thomson, Summer.

LUXURIANT. adj. [luxurians, Lat.] Exuberant; superfluously plenteous.

A fluent and luxuriant speech becomes youth well, but not age.

Bacon, Ess.

The mantling vine
Lays forth her purple grape, and gently creeps

Luxuriant.

Milton, P. L.

If the fancy of Ovid be luxuriant, it is his character to be so.

Dryden, Pref. to Ov. Ep.

Prune the luxuriant, the uncouth refine,

Pope.

LUXURIANTLY. * adv. [from luxuriant.] Abundantly.

The auburn locks, and the taper arms, of the Saxon dame are most luxuriandy illustrated.

Warton, Rowley Eng. p. 81.

To LUXURIATE.† v. n. [luxurior, Latin.] To grow exuberantly; to shoot with superfluous plenty.

I could more willingly have luxuriated, and better satisfied myself and others.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

For all this harm, which apparently follows surfeiting and drunkenness, see how we rage and luxuriate in this kind!

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 71.

Corn luxuriates in a better mould.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 454.

The tongue, that nimble interpreter of the mind, when it doth most luxuriate in variety of expressions, is yet so bounded, that of necessity it must utter all conceptions of the mind in a few words.

Hartlib, Reform. of Schools, (1642), p. 47.

'Tis worth enough, if a young gallant can Look big, luxuriant, and write gentleman!

Beaumont, Psyche, xvi. 30.

The gay girl, as was her fate,
Doth wanton and luxuriate.

Loveless, Luc. Posth. p. 46.

Alexander the Great, reflecting on his friends degenerating into sloth and luxury, told them that it was a most slavish thing to luxuriate, and a most royal thing to labour.

Barrow, vol. iii. S. 19.

LUXURIOUS. adj. [luxurieux, Fr. luxuriosus, Lat.]

1. Delighting in the pleasures of the table.

2. Administering to luxury.

Those whom last thou saw'st
In triumph, and luxurious wealth, are they
First seen in acts of prowess eminent,
And great exploits; but of true virtue void.

Milton, P. L.

The luxurious board.

Anon.

3. Lustful; libidinous.
She knows the heat of a luxurious bed:
Her blush is guiltiness, not modesty. Shakespeare.

I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful. Shakspeare.
 4. Voluptuous; enslaved to pleasure.
Luxurious cities, where the noise
Of riot ascends above their loftiest towers.
 Milton, P. L.

5. Softening by pleasure.
Repel the Tuscan foes, their city seize,
Protect the Latians, in luxurious ease. Dryden.
 6. Luxuriant; exuberant.

Still more hands
 Aid us, the work under our labour grows
Luxurious by restraint. Milton, P. L.
 LUXURIOUSLY, adv. [from luxurious.] Deliciously; voluptuously.

Hotter hours — you have Luxuriously pick'd out. Shakspeare. Ant. and Cleop.
Where mice and rats devour'd poetick bread,
And with heroic verse luxuriously were fed. Dryden.

He never supt in solemn state;
 Nor day to night luxuriously did join. Dryden.

LUXURIOUSNESS, * n. s. [from luxurious.]
 Voluptuousness; lewdness. Sherwood.
 When dead's the strength of England's yeamanny:

When inundation of luxuriousness
 Fats all the world with such gross beastliness;
 Who can abstain? what modest brain can hold,
 But he must make his shamefac'd muse a scold!
Marston, Scourge of Vill. (1599), i. 2.

LUXURY, n. s. [luxuré, old French;
luxuria, Latin.]

1. Voluptuousness; addictedness to pleasure.

Egypt with Assyria strove
 In wealth and luxury. Milton, P. L.
 Riches expose a man to pride and luxury, and a foolish elation of heart. Addison, Spect.

2. Lust; lewdness.
 Urge his hateful luxury,
 His bestial appetite in change of lust,
 Which stretch'd unto their servants, daughters, wives. Shakspeare.

3. Luxuriance; exuberance.
 Young trees of several kinds set contiguous in a fruitful ground, with the luxury of the trees will incorporate. Bacon.

4. Delicious fare.
 He cut the side of the rock for a garden, and by laying on it earth, furnished out a kind of luxury for a hermit. Addison.

LY. A very frequent termination both of names of places and of adjectives and adverbs; when ly terminates the name of a place, it is derived from leaz, Sax.
 a field. Gibson. When it ends an adjective or adverb, it is contracted from lich, like: as, beastly, beastlike; plainly, plainlike.

LYAM, * n. s. [called also leam, and lyme.
 See LIMEHOUND, and LIMMER. Perhaps from the Saxon lygan, ducere, to lead.] A kind of thong or leash for holding a hound in hand.

My dog-hook at my belt to which my lyam's
 ty'd,
 My sheaf of arrows by, my wood-knife by my side,
 My hound then in my lyam.
 Drayton, Muse's Elixium.

LYCANTHROPY, † n. s. [lycanthropie, Fr.
λύκος, a wolf, and άνθρωπος, a man, Gr.]
 A kind of madness, in which men have the qualities of wild beasts.

The world is a wide wilderness, wherein we converse with wild and savage creatures: we think them men; they are beasts. It is contrary to the delusions of lycanthropy: there, he that is a man thinks himself a beast. Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

I must resent the calamities of the time, and the desperate case of this nation, who seem to have fallen quite from the very faculty of reason, and to be possessed with a pure lycanthropy, with a wolfish kind of disposition to tear one another in this manner. Howell, Lett. i. vi. 58.

He sees like a man in his sleep, and grows much the wiser as the man that dreamt of a lycanthropy, and was for ever after wary not to come near a river. Bp. Taylor.

Dr. John Freind [has] given, from Ætius and Oribasius, a description of the madness called lycanthropy, of which one of the most striking symptoms was, to wander amongst the sepulchres of the dead. Warburton, Sermon, 27.

LYDIAN, * adj. Denoting a species of the ancient musick; meaning a soft and slow kind of air.

And ever, against eating cares,
 Lap me in soft Lydian airs. Milton, L' All.
 Softly sweet in Lydian measure,
 Soon he sooth'd the soul to pleasure. Dryden, Ode.
 The Lydian mood is now in most request.

Philips, Theat. Poet. Pref.
 I have mixed unawares too much of the Phry-gian; I might change it to the Lydian, and soften their riotous tempers: but it is enough: learn from this sample to speak with veneration of ancient musick?

Arbutnot and Pope, Mart. Scriblerus.

To LYE, * See To LIE.

LYING, † n. s. [from lie, whether it signifies to be recumbent, or to speak falsely, or otherwise.]

They will have me whipt for speaking true, thou wilt have me whipt for lying, and sometimes
 I am whipt for holding my peace.

Many tears and temptations befall me by the lying in wait of the Jews. Acts, xx. 19.
 The doctor has practised both by sea and land,
 and therefore cures the green-sickness and lyings— in! Spectator.

LYINGLY, * adv. [from lying.] Falsely;
 without truth. Sherwood.

LYKE, adj. for like. Spenser.

LYM, * n. s. [from leam or lyme. See LIMEHOUND.] A bloodhound.
 Mastiff, greyhound, mongrel grim,
 Hound, or spaniel, brach, or lym.
 Shakspeare, K. Lear.

LYMPH, n. s. [lymphe, French; lymph,
 Latin.] Water; transparent colourless liquor.

When the chyle passeth through the mesentery, it is mixed with the lymph, the most spirituous and elaborated part of the blood.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

LYMPHATED, adj. [lymphatus, Lat.] Mad.
 Dict.

LYMPHA'TICK, † n. s. [lymphatique, Fr.
 from lymph, Latin.]

1. The lymphaticks are slender pellucid tubes, whose cavities are contracted at small and unequal distances: they are carried into the glands of the mesentery, receiving first a fine thin lymph from the lymphatic ducts, which dilutes the chylous fluid. Cheyne, Phil. Principles.
 Upon the death of an animal, the spirits may sink into the veins, or lymphaticks and glandules.
 Flower.

2. A lunatick. [lymphaticus, Lat. mad.]

All nations have their lymphatics of some kind or other. Ld. Shaftesbury.

Erroneous fancy shap'd her wild attire;
 From Bethlehem's walls the poor lymphatic stray'd.
 Shenstone, Eleg. 16.

LYMPHA'TICK, * adj.

1. Denoting the vessels called lymphaticks.
